QUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

Mr. Scott. Mr. President, in regard to the unanimous-consent agreeent entered into yesterday, with the time to be controlled by the inority leader on amendments to the Dominick amendment, I now signate the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) to be in conol of the time in opposition.

* * * * * * *

The Acting President pro tempore. Under the previous order, the hair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be ated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportunities for Ameri- n workers.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The Acting President pro tempore. The pending question is the ominick amendment, No. 611.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of quorum.

The Acting President pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous conent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Unanimous-Consent Agreement

DOMINICK AMENDMENT

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I am prepared to proound a unanimous consent request with regard to the pending amendent of the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick). I n authorized to do so by the distinguished majority leader after havg cleared the matter with the distinguished Republican leader, after ving consulted with the distinguished manager of the bill, the Senor from New Jersey (Mr. Williams), the distinguished senior Senor from New York (Mr. Javits) the distinguished junior Senator om Colorado (Mr. Dominick), and after having discussed the mat- r with other Senators.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the pending amendment the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), as amended, if ended, occur tomorrow at 10:45 a.m.

Provided further, that the amendment by the Senator from Colodo (Mr. Dominick) not be open to amendments in the second degree ter today.

ADJOURNMENT TO 9:45 A.M.

Ordered further, that when the Senate completes its business tod it stand in adjournment until 9:45 a.m. tomorrow.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Provided further, that following the recognition of the two lead tomorrow, there be a period for the transaction of routine morn business not to exceed 15 minutes.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

Provided further, that at the conclusion of morning business tom row, the Chair lay before the Senate the unfinished business and t time on the Dominick amendment then begin running, to be equa divided and controlled by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominic and the manager of the bill, the Senator from New Jersey (M Williams).

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I ho that I shall not object, if I understand the request by the distinguish Senator from West Virginia correctly, the junior Senator from A bama voted for the Dominick amendment. It was voted on by t Senate on one occasion. He voted to reconsider the vote by which failed of adoption. He is ready to vote on it right now. He is ready vote on it at any time. He has enjoyed the discussion of this amen ment and the postponement of the final vote by the proponents S. 2515. But he is not ready, as long as this amendment is pending, bring in any of the amendments that he and the distinguished sen Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) have.

Does the junior Senator from Alabama correctly understand, th that insofar as this bill is concerned, the Dominick amendment w remain the pending business before the Senate until the vote?

I would not want to rule out bringing in other matters, but inso as consideration of other amendments is concerned, will any oth amendments be brought in prior to a vote on the Dominick amen ment? In other words, the junior Senator from Alabama feels th that should be the first amendment voted on.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I have already discussed this mat with the junior Senator from Alabama. He states the situation ve clearly. As I understand it, there may, and in all likelihood will, amendments in the second degree offered today.

The bill cannot be advanced to third reading, of course, certain not before 11 a.m. tomorrow and the vote to be taken thereon. T Senator from Alabama would be under no pressure to offer his amen ments today. There is no way he could be forced to. Certainly attempt would be made to do so if——

Mr. ALLEN. Well, theoretically, of course, the amendment could laid aside and then it would be in order to bring in other amen ments, but the outcome of the other amendments depends in lar measure on the outcome of the vote on the Dominick amendment.

So, for that reason, the junior Senator from Alabama would n like to see any vote on any amendment to the pending bill, althou not an amendment in the second degree to the Dominick amendme

'hat could be offered, of course. But I would not like to agree to ake up any amendment and have a vote on it or have a discussion rior to a vote on the Dominick amendment.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator would ield, I will give the Senator that assurance, that no amendments other nan amendments in the second degree to the pending amendment will e considered today. As I understand it, the Senator would object o temporarily laying aside the pending amendment for other amend- ents, but would not object to laying it, or the bill for that matter, mporarily aside, for the consideration of other business.

Mr. Allen. The Senator is correct. I would not object even to aving other bills considered, or nongermane matters.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. I yield.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, there is only one qualification that should made. We have a right to amend the parts of the bill that would stricken. The words "second degree amendment" are not inclusive ough. It should include the amendments that we have a right to ake to those parts of the bill stricken, if any. I do not know of any this time.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, would that mean amendments to any ction other than those to which the Dominick amendment is directed?

Mr. Javits. No. We could only move to amend what the Dominick nendment strikes. So the words "second degree" would include nendments to the Dominick amendment and amendments to those rts of the bill which the Dominick amendment strikes.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, they would be perfecting amendments.

Mr. Javits. The Senator is correct.

Mr. Allen. With that understanding, I withdraw my objection.

The Presiding Officer. (Mr. Chiles). Is there objection to the nanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

* * * * * * *

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for Ameri- n workers.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the nendment and ask that it be stated.

The Presiding Officer. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 3, of the Dominick amendment strike lines 1 through 8 and insert lieu thereof the following: "mission has been unable to secure from the re- ondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission, the Commis- n shall bring a civil action against the respondent named in the charge. If harge filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) is dismissed by Commission, or if within one hundred and eighty days from the filing of h charge or the expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) (d), whichever is later, the Commission has not filed a civil action under s section, or the Commission has not entered into a conciliation agreement which the person aggrieved is a party, the Commission shall so notify the rson aggrieved and within ninety days after the giving of such notice a civil ion may be brought against the respondent"

Mr. Javits. I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. President, as we go into the Dominick amendment, because the very odd situation in which we found ourselves yesterday, we find things in it that even the author of the amendment himself wo want to see changed—not that this is one of those, but, in any c we do find that.

Yesterday, we were able to offer two amendments which really w essential and just, and very materially bear on the rights which wo be affected should this amendment be adopted and become part our bill. Similarly with the amendment I have now called up.

It will be noted that this amendment deals with the right of complainant in a job discrimination charge to bring an action in own name, and this would obtain if the Commission did not choos sue under this amendment. The way in which that happens is that t amendment provides that if the Commission has been unable—I qu from the top of page 3—to obtain voluntary compliance with this Act, the Commission may bring a c action against the respondent named in the charge.

So far so good.

If the Commission fails to obtain voluntary compliance and fails or refu to institute a civil action against the respondent named in the charge wit 180 days from the date of filing the charge, a civil action may be brought af such failure or refusal, within 90 days, against the respondent.

That means by whom? Then we go on. I have read only the wo affected by my amendment. By whom? To wit, the respondent nam in the charge, either by the person claiming to be aggrieved or, the charge was filed, by an officer or employee of the Commission, any person who the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged lawful employment practice.

The missing link is this: if a complainant is cut off by the fact t the Commission obtains voluntary compliance, then, what is volunta compliance, and what does the complainant have to say about Remember that you are cutting off his right to sue, and if you cut his right to sue, does he have no voice in the matter whatever, or he simply foreclosed by whatever the Commission decides is vol tary compliance, whatever that means? No effort is made to defi it, nor can it be defined; because if you deal with a negotiated sett ment proposition or a consent proposition, you cannot very well defi it into things.

One problem is that the words "voluntary compliance" are not wo of art such as are used in this field. The words I have used in t amendment are "conciliation agreement." Those are words of a and they also are executive words, in the sense that an agreement h to be entered into, signed, sealed, and delivered; whereas, "volunta compliance" is a kind of amorphous proposition which may cons of a combination of acts, letters, telephone calls, and so forth. S in the first place, the amendment is desirable in terms of precision.

Second, the amendment will require that the conciliation agreeme be one to which the complainant has consented. In short, if he d not assent, he has a right to sue. If he does assent, he has no right sue. It seems to me that that is the very least that should be provid You would go further, if you really wanted to establish a complicat procedure, and say that no agreement should be binding on the co plainant unless a court proceeding was had in the absence of his co sent and the court approved it as fair, because the party would not a party to the agreement; whereas, the Commission would, havi accepted it in lieu of a suit by it, under the Dominick amendme

That is what is done, for example, in derivative stockholder suits, where you face a somewhat similar situation. Should this prove to be a change which Senator Dominick would accept, I would be willing to revise the amendment in the alternative—that is, to provide that the complainant may sue or that the Commission may submit the agreement to a court of suitable jurisdiction; and if the court found it fair and equitable, the complainant would be bound.

Obviously, some element of consent, or what is tantamount to it, is urgently necessary in terms of common equity if you are not to get into a situation where you cut off a complainant's right and the complainant cannot do anything about it and the agency which cuts off his right is a party to the settlement. That is the distinction.

I, myself, have argued for the cease-and-desist order practice on the part of the Commission. But there it is not a party to any settlement. It is acting in a judicial capacity. Here, it would be a party to a settlement, and therefore something more than the sheer settlement should be required before the complainant is cut off from his right to sue. That is the essence of the agreement, Mr. President.

Again, I point out that this is not the only one that we have to face. I think it is only fair to point this out, because the majority leader yesterday talked in general terms of the fact that we are stalling or using dilatory tactics or offering amendments which may not be absolutely essential, and so forth. But I respectfully point out to the Senate that we have put in our amendments, I believe—and certainly the Senate showed it yesterday—meritorious amendments which relate to the substance of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado and which were, in a sense, overlooked in the sweeping anxiety to get on with the vote, which we did yesterday, in respect of the unanimous-consent agreement. But when put into the position where we had to examine this amendment in scrupulous detail in terms of its possibly becoming part of the bill, we found substantive matters which urgently need correction. I believe, in all decency and equity, that this is one of them; and I hope very much that the Senate will adopt this amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The Presiding Officer. Who yields time?

Mr. Dominick. Mr. President, according to the unanimous-consent agreement, if the manager of the bill is in agreement with the amendment, the time in opposition is under the control of either the minority leader or his designee, and he has so designated me.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I support the amendment of the Senator from New York. So, under the agreement, any speaking I would do would be on our time; and, under the agreement, the Senator from Colorado has the remainder of the time.

Mr. Dominick. Under those circumstances, I yield myself 10 minutes in order to ask some questions on this matter and to raise some precautionary warning signals.

I say to the Senator from New York that I can understand that he wants to use perhaps some different wording—namely, "conciliation agreement" instead of "voluntary compliance." I have no objection to that.

However, I should like to point out that under the amendment as presently written it now says that if within 30 days after a charge is filed with the Commission within 30 days after the expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), the Commission has been unable to obtain voluntary compliance, the Commission may bring a civil action.

Whereas the language of the present amendment gives the Commission the discretion to file an action, this language requires that the Commission "shall" bring a civil action.

Without trying to be too technical or too difficult about it, I believe that "shall" defeats the purpose of the 30-day delay which is simply designed to try to get, as they say in the delivery business, "a burr under the tail" of the parties. But I do not see why we should require them within 30 days to bring suit. They might be able to accomplish voluntary compliance within 40 days or it might take 32 days, but under the language of this amendment what happens if they do not file suit within 30 days? Then what do we do?

In other words, I think that the word "shall" in the second line of the Senator's amendment should be changed back to the word "may," as is the case, if the Senator will look through his amendment, to the question of whether the person aggrieved is going to sue or not going to sue.

I would therefore ask the Senator whether he would be amenable to changing that?

Mr. JAVITS. May I point out that the reason we included "shall" is, in a sense, that it goes with the original bill. If the Senator will be kind enough to refer to page 38 of the bill, subsection (f), which deals with this particular matter, he will see that it says:

(f) If the Commission determines after attempting to secure voluntary compliance under subsection (b) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission, which determination shall not be reviewable in any court, the Commission shall issue and cause to be served upon any respondent not a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision a complaint stating the facts upon which the allegation of the unlawful employment practice is based, together with a notice of hearing before the Commission, or a member or agent thereof, at a place therein fixed not less than five days after the serving of such complaint. In the case of a respondent which is a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, the Commission shall take no further action and shall refer the case to the Attorney General who may bring a civil action against such respondent in the appropriate United States district court.

In other words, having found reasonable cause, the Commission, according to the original bill, is required to serve a complaint, and so forth.

Mr. DOMINICK. May I continue to point out that what we are trying to do whenever we can is to have the unlawful employment practice charge solved by voluntary compliance. I think that all of us would prefer to see this rather than a commission filing a cease-and-desist order, or as in my amendment, having to go to court. I point out to the Senator that although the word "shall" is in subsection (f) on page 38 of the original bill, the difference between that situation and the one posed by the amendment which I have prepared is the fact that there is no time limit in subsection (f) in which the Commission has to determine when voluntary compliance is or is not possible. So that there is no 30 day limit. All I am saying is that we are putting a 30-day limit where we are saying, "OK. If you have not settled by that time, we have the right to go to court."

It would seem to me that in the interest of flexibility of the Commission's schedule, and in the interest of flexibility in working something out through voluntary compliance, it would be far better to put in the word "may."

If the Senator from New York will change that word "shall" to "may," I shall be happy to accept the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. May I ask this of the Senator: If we do that, if we change the word "shall" to "may," do we not have to have some cutoff time as far as the Commission is concerned, with respect to its exercise of that discretion in bringing a civil action assuming, for example, of the Senator's amendment—if within 30 days after a charge is filed with the Commission or 30 days after a period of reference in subsection (c) or (d)—this relates to State and local governments references and the Commission has been unable to obtain compliance, the Commission may bring a civil action. Would not the Senator agree that if we are going to adopt that suggestion, that we leave it at "may," we have to put some termination date upon the Commission itself so that the complainant may sue without necessarily sitting around awaiting 6 months.

Mr. DOMINICK. I had thought that we then go on with the rest of the Senator's amendment. We can shorten the 180-day private filing restriction as far as I am concerned, but I think we should keep in mind that this is a Commission which has been appointed for the purpose of trying to solve any employment discrimination that there may be and, consequently, I do not think that we should assume they will not take action where there is a clear case. Problems will arise where there are gray areas, or where they are not sure whether they have substantial evidence to support a case. Under those circumstances, it would seem to me that we should give them more time. If we want to say 90 days from the filing of such a charge, or on the expiration of any period, instead of 180 or 120, that is all right with me. If the Senator would do that, then we are changing the timetable which the committee has already worked out in the process of trying to determine what should be done with enforcement procedures.

Mr. JAVITS. In view of the disposition of the Senator to come to some agreement on this amendment, so that we shall not proceed improperly, I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum, if that is agreeable, and we will take a short quorum break, with the time being charged to both sides, so that we can do our best to work out some language which will carry out our intentions, in view of the fact that, in principle, the Senator thinks there is equity to this amendment.

Mr. DOMINICK. That will be fine with me.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may suggest the absence of a quorum with the time to be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Roth). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I modify my amendment by changing the word "shall" in the second line to "may."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the reason for the modification is that I do not feel, with an agency of this character, that the word "shall" would have any greater meaning than the word "may" and also because I feel the Commission shoud not, in view of its purpose, be under the kind of strict timetable within the parameters, of course, that the amendment sets out that it would otherwise be if we left the word "shall" which is mandatory. We assume that they must obey the law in the amendment.

We have retained the greater good for the interest of the person aggrieved the ability to sue, which is the main point. That is being retained in the amendment as modified and I think this is the desirable way in which to proceed.

If the Senator from Colorado is satisfied I am prepared to yield back my time and allow action to take place on this amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from New York. I think this change is very meritorious, as I pointed out in my first statement. I do not think the Commission should be mandated on what date an agency should bring suit when we are trying to work out matters the best we can by conciliation.

As a result, with the word "may" instead of "shall" and having preserved the right to the Commission to file suit and the respondent if he does not feel the Commission acted properly, it would seem proper to proceed in this way. Therefore, I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment as modified.

I yield back my time.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The legislative clerk read the amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), as follows:

On page 3, line 3 of the Dominick amendment strike "the respondent named in the charge" and substitute in lieu thereof: "any respondent not a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision named in the charge. In the case of a respondent which is a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, the Commission shall take no further action and shall refer the case to the Attorney General who may bring a civil action against such respondent in the appropriate United States District Court."

On page 3, line 7, insert after the word "section" the following: "the Commission or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency or political subdivision."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

The purpose of this amendment is to correct a very important oversight in the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Colorado. His amendment would substitute for the administrative hearing procedure permitting the Commission, after it is unable to obtain voluntary compliance, authority to bring a civil action against a respondent named in the charge.

The amendment of the Senator from Colorado appears to treat all respondents in the same manner. During discussions of this issue in the committee there was a strong feeling that respondents which were governments or governmental agencies or political subdivisions should be given special consideration in the handling of charges brought by employees of such agencies.

Mr. President, the amendment that I am offering started as an amendment in the executive session for the writeup of this bill. It was offered by the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Eagleton), and the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft) and it prevailed there. It is in the bill that is before us. I am now offering an amendment to have the same provision apply to the Dominick amendment.

The procedure worked out by the committee was to permit actions brought against State and local government agencies to be brought by the Attorney General in the U.S. district courts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Roth). Will the Senator suspend for a moment? In order to consider his amendment, unanimous consent is required, since it is an amendment to an amendment already agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Colorado would allow actions against State and local government agencies to be brought in Federal district courts but would require the Commission to file the complaint.

I believe that this discussion in the committee and the intent of the committee in providing that the Attorney General bring such actions was basically twofold.

First, there was the strong feeling that cases of discrimination by State and local government agencies should be handled by the full force of the United States of America acting directly through the Attorney General. By placing the full weight of the U.S. district courts behind equal employment opportunity in State and local governments, the committee bill provided the necessary machinery to insure that State and local government agencies fulfill the promise of equal rights.

In addition, the special enforcement procedure when State and local government agencies are respondents provides the necessary power to achieve results without the needless friction that might be created b a Federal executive agency issuing administrative orders to State and localities.

I will say, Mr. President, as further background, that sitting on th Labor and Public Welfare Committee we have men who have ha distinguished careers before coming to the United States Senate i State government, some as attorneys general of the States that the represent here. So we felt that they spoke with particular authorit about the possibility of friction that might be created by a Federa executive agency issuing administrative orders to sovereign States an their subdivisions.

Mr. President, it is for these reasons that I believe the amendmen of the Senator from Colorado should be amended to provide specia treatment for respondents who are governments, governmenta agencies, or political subdivisions. In those cases the Commissio should be required, after failing to obtain voluntary compliance, t refer the case to the Attorney General who would then be empowere to bring a civil action against a respondent in the appropriate Unite States district court.

Mr. President, further amplification is included in the committe report, and I ask unanimous consent that excerpts from the report con stituting a further discussion of the wisdom of this amendment b printed in the Record at this point.

There being no objection, the excerpts from the committee repor (No. 9–415) were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM COMMITTEE REPORT

STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

The bill would amend section 701 of the Act (section 2 of the bill) to broade the jurisdictional coverage of Title VII by deleting the existing exemptions fo State and local government employees. The Attorney General is given the author ity to bring civil actions involving unlawful employment practices committe by State and local governmental agencies.

The Committee believes that employees of State and local governments ar entitled to the same benefits and protections in equal employment as the em ployees in the private sector of the economy.

There are at present approximately 10.1 million persons employed by Stat and local governmental units. This figure represents an increase of over 2 millio since 1964, and all indications are that the number of State and local employee will continue to increase more rapidly during the next few years. Few of thes employees, however, are afforded the protection of an effective Federal forum for assuring equal employment opportunity. By amending the present section 70 to include State and local governmental units within the definition of an "em ployer" under Title VII, all State and local governmental employees would, unde the provisions of the bill, have access to the remedies available under the Act.

In a report released in 1969 by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, "Fo All the People * * * By All the People," that Commission concluded that:

* * * State and local governments have failed to fulfill their obligation t assure equal job opportunity * * * Not only do State and local government consciously and overtly discriminate in hiring and promoting minority grou members, but they do not foster positive programs to deal with discriminator treatment on the job.

The report's findings indicate that the existence of discrimination is perpetuate by both institutional and overt discriminatory practices, and that past discrim natory practices are maintained through de facto segregated job ladders, invali selection techniques, and stereotypical misconceptions by supervisors regardin minority group capabilities. The study also indicates that employment discrimina tion in State and local governments is more pervasive than in the private secto

In another report issued by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in 1970, "Mexican Americans and the Administration of Justice in the Southwest," the Commission found that in the five Southwestern states with the highest concentration of Spanish-speaking Americans, their representation in the vital area of law enforcement was significantly disproportionate to their demographic distribution. The report shows that in these five Southwestern states, Spanish-speaking Americans, who constitute approximately 12% of the population account for only 5.2% of police officers and 6.11% of civilian employees associated with law enforcement agencies.

This failure of State and local governmental agencies to accord equal employment opportunities is particularly distressing in light of the importance that these agencies play in the daily lives of the average citizen. From local law enforcement to social services, each citizen in a community is in constant contact with many local agencies. The importance of equal opportunity in these agencies is, therefore, self-evident. In our democratic society, participatory government is a cornerstone of good government. Discrimination by government therefore serves a doubly destructive purpose. The exclusion of minorities from effective participation in the bureaucracy not only promotes ignorance of minority problems in that particular community, but also creates mistrust, alienation, and all too often hostility toward the entire process of government.

The Constitution is imperative in its prohibition of discrimination by State and local governments. The Fourteenth Amendment guarantees equal treatment of all citizens by States and their political subdivisions, and the Supreme Court has reinforced their directive by holding that State action which denies equal protection of the laws to any person, even if only indirectly, is in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. It is clear that the guarantee of equal protection must also extend to such direct action as discriminatory employment practices.

The Committee believes that it is an injustice to provide employees in the private sector with the assistance of an agency of the Federal Government in redressing their grievances while at the same time denying assistance similar to State and local government employees. The last sentence of the Fourteenth Amendment, enabling Congress to enforce the Amendment's guarantees by appropriate legislation is frequently overlooked, and the plain meaning of the Constitution allowed to lapse. The inclusion of State and local government employees within the jurisdiction of Title VII guarantees and protections will fulfill the Congressional duty to enact the "appropriate legislation" to insure all citizens are treated equally in this country.

The Supreme Court has further indicated that at least part of the extension of jurisdiction as contemplated by S. 2515 is a proper constitutional exercise of power under the Commerce Clause. In its decision in Maryland v. Wirtz, 392 U.S. 183 (1968), the Court upheld the extension of the Fair Labor Standards Act to certain classes of public employees as a legitimate exercise of congressional regulatory authority under the Commerce Clause. The Court rejected the argument that Federal regulation of the employment practices of State and local governments is an improper infringement upon the sovereignty of the States. Pointing out that the activities of State and local governments can affect commerce, it held:

"If a State is engaging in economic activities that are validly regulated by the Federal Government when engaged in by private persons, the State too may be forced to conform its activities to Federal regulations."

A question was raised in the Committee concerning the application of Title VII in the case of a Governor whose cabinet appointees and close personal aides are drawn from one political party. The Committee's intention is that nothing in this bill should be interpreted to prohibit such appointments unless they are based on discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex or national origin. That intention is reflected in sections 703(h) and 706(w) of the law.

SPECIAL ENFORCEMENT PROCEDURE FOR CASES INVOLVING EMPLOYEES OF STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

In those cases involving a respondent which is a "government, governmental agency, or political subdivision," and in which EEOC has been unable to secure voluntary compliance as provided under section 706 (b) (f), the bill provides that the Commission shall refer the case to the Attorney General for filing of a civil action against the respondent in the appropriate U.S. district court. A person aggrieved is given the right to intervene in such civil actions.

The committee has no doubt of the need for strong enforcement of equal employment opportunity at all levels of government, and believes that governmental units should lead the way in providing equal opportunity.

Accordingly, the committee bill provides for coverage of State and local government employees and for a concomitant means of enforcement to make that coverage meaningful. By placing the full weight of the U.S. Attorney General and the authority of the U.S. district courts behind equal employment opportunity at the State and local government level, the committee believes that the machinery has been provided to insure State and local leadership in the area of equal employment opportunity.

This enforcement scheme provides the necessary power to achieve results without the needless friction that might be created by a Federal executive agency issuing orders to sovereign States and their localities. In short, the committee believes that the objective of equal employment opportunity can best be achieved by providing this particular means of enforcement where State or local governmental units fail to comply with the law.

Mr. Williams. I know that this amendment was supported when it was offered to the bill and supported in the committee by the Senator from Colorado, and I would hope that he might favorably consider it as an amendment to his amendment.

This again, Mr. President, is one of the amendments offered to the Dominick amendment now. It was not offered before the vote was taken yesterday. These amendments were discovered to be necessary when we were put to a more complete examination of the Dominick amendment, and we felt that it would be wise indeed to add those things that Senator Javits and I and other Senators felt would be constructive additions to the Dominick amendment. This is one of those amendments.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask that staff people be instructed not to pass in front of Senators who are addressing the Chair.

The Presiding Officer. The Chair so instructs the staff. Who yields time?

Mr. Dominick. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. President, I think this is an excellent amendment and I am very happy that the Senator from New Jersey brought it up. I think it is only fair for the purposes of the Record to remark that it is ironic that just yesterday the Senator from New York, backed by the Senator from New Jersey, eliminated the Attorney General or any of his staff from taking any case before the U.S. Court of Appeals, thereby limiting the Attorney General's office to appeals before the U.S. Supreme Court. This language provides fair representation for alleged aggrieved State, county, or local government employees in district court.

I, of course, heartily support that idea. I think it is very good; and, as the Senator from New Jersey has so properly said, it just does not seem right, and did not seem right in committee, that any agency of the Federal Government, as such, should have the right to sue, whether it be a State, city, town, school district, sanitation district, or whatever it might be, alleging that their employment practices were illegal.

It would seem to me, if we are going to provide grievance procedures for these employees it ought to be within the Justice Department so that the respondent governmental unit is dealing with one of the Federal Government's most respected and objective departments.

As a result, I am happy to endorse this particular amendment, and have it added on to mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have no further speakers on behalf of this amendment. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I again will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Roth). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read as follows:

On page 5, line 7 of the Dominick amendment, insert the following after "appropriate." Back pay liability shall not exceed that which accrues from a date more than two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commission.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, on this amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Maryland allow me to be a cosponsor of his amendment?

Mr. BEALL. I am very happy to make the Senator a cosponsor and, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) be added as a cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, in a brief explanation of this amendment, as is indicated in reading the amendment, that it goes to page 5, line 7, the Dominick amendment No. 611. It includes a provision that was already in the original legislation. We are interested in being fair to all parties, whatever the outcome of the current controversy as to whether this particular Dominick amendment should be agreed to; but should there be a finding in favor of the plaintiff in one of these cases, I want to make sure that the penalty is within the balance of fairness. In the committee, there was agreement that should there be a finding, any award of backpay liability should not go back further than 2 years prior to the time that the charges were brought before the Commission.

My amendment would amend the Dominick amendment so that w there to be an award by the court, the backpay liability would extend more than 2 years back on which the charges were brou before the Commission again.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yie

Mr. BEALL. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Is it not a fact that the bill as we reported it on page on lines 6 to 9, contains the same provision?

Mr. BEALL. That is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. This was fought out in committee. Those of us w wished to sustain the committee bill insofar as we could, in all fairn to what was given as well as what we received, would have to supp this provision.

Mr. BEALL. Precisely. I agree with the Senator from New York that.

Mr. President, this is a brief and I believe a sufficient explanation my amendment.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryla yield me a few minutes time, since I am a cosponsor of his amen ment and I do not have any time of my own?

Mr. BEALL. I would be happy to yield the Senator the remaind of my time if he wants it.

Mr. DOMINICK. I will not take very long. I am very glad t Senator brought this matter up. That would be our intention, in t event my amendment is adopted, to offer this as a subsequent amen ment to the bill because it was stricken in the amendment by ina vertence. It is eminently fair, and I am glad the Senator brought t matter up. I am happy to have it included in my amendment.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senator from Maryland will supporting my amendment as amended.

Mr. BEALL. I am making no commitments to to future action.

Mr. President, I am happy to yield back the remainder of my tim

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I support the amendment and happy to yield back my time.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest the abse of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous conse that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

All time on this amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator fr Maryland.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the cle will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from N
Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), t
Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Alas
(Mr. GRUENING), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senat from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hughe

QUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Burdick). Under the previous order, he Chair now lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is . 2515, with the pending question agreeing to amendment No. 611 of he Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick). Time between now and):45 a.m. will be equally divided between the Senator from Colorado Mr. Dominick) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams), ith the vote occurring at 10:45 a.m. today. No amendments to the ominick amendment are in order.

The clerk will state the unfinished business.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

S. 2515, a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American orkers.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized r 30 seconds.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that, with the exption of the Presiding Officer, there is not a single Member of the ajority party now in the Chamber, I suggest the absence of a quorum, th the time to be charged equally to both sides.

he PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order r the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, how much time remains and how is the ne divided?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-eight minutes, 14 minutes to the le. Who yields time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield such time to the Senator from w York as he requires.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Chair notify me when I have used minutes?

Mr. President, the absence of Members from the Chamber is obously attributable to the fact that Members are pretty well determined how they are going to vote. We have had enough practice in the t few days in view of this amendment and the various stages of it, elieve, to know our own minds. So, in the time allotted to me, I shall only two things. One is to note the changes which have been made in the Dominick amendment in terms of what will be finally voted o as no further amendment is permitted. Second, I shall summarize t arguments and the side of the opponents to the Dominick amendme as I see it.

Mr. President, first, as to the changes, we have given authority to t Commission to send its own lawyers into the courts in terms of litig tion, should the Dominick amendment carry, up through the Court Appeals, leaving only the Supreme Court to the Attorney General, a leaving also pattern and practice suits to the Attorney General as w as suits involving government employees at the State and local leve Those are three items that relate to the Attorney General.

Second, we have assured a government employee who is a complai ant of the same treatment in respect of counsel and counsel fees as do nongovernmental employees.

Third, we have given the respondent who is denied the right to su because the Commission sues, the right to agree or disagree to a co ciliation agreement or a settlement of his particular case which t Commission might make. If he is going to be cut off, he has to agree the settlement.

Also, we have limited backpay recovery to 2 years, which was in t original bill and somehow or other it was left out of the pendi amendment inadvertently, as the Senator from Colorado explained.

Now, Mr. President, those are all desirable changes. Obviously the are important changes in the amendment. I believe they improve t amendment, but I believe the amendment should be defeated, notwit standing the precautions that the Senator from New Jersey (M Williams) and I, and others, have taken to "clean it up," which we h the opportunity to do in the last day and a half.

The reasons I believe the amendment should be rejected are six. shall list them, and I do not list them necessarily in order of impo tance because I think they all rank equally in importance.

The first reason is that this is a usual power for Government agenci which we intend to have power. Most analogous, of course, to this situ tion is the National Labor Relations Act. I have submitted a long li of agencies, led off by the National Labor Relations Board, so bo commissions and Government departments have cease-and-desi powers.

The second point is that 32 of the 50 States which give authority respect of fair employment practice activities, led by my own Sta of New York, which passed the Ives-Quinn bill bearing the name Irving Ives who served with distinction in this Chamber, have enforc ment powers in the State agency or commission, or the local attorn general, to wit, a cease-and-desist order. So there is nothing unusu in granting the authority.

All the fears expressed by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Don nick) and those who support him that the authority would be used an inquisitorial way, or in an arrogant or arbitrary way, were voic 26 years ago in New York. Those fears have all come to naught. It h been an entirely satisfactory statute where the cases going to court ha been few and the conciliations have been many. It has kept the wor load within reasonable bounds and that has been possible also in oth States.

The third point is that the cease-and-desist power is important b cause it gives agencies some teeth—even a little teeth because any spondent can take a case into court. But it gives the agency some teeth because the agency can proceed with finality. It gives the agency a greater likelihood of getting a conciliation than would otherwise be possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield the Senator 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Senator.

The fourth point is that the backlog in the courts is extremely heavy. In the district courts, where under the Dominick amendment suits would have to be filed, it is the heaviest, being around a 20-month period in the major industrial States where most of these cases would be carried on. Again, to relieve that congestion, a minimization of cases flowing to the courts would go to the Circuit Courts of Appeal, which is of great importance in terms of the cease-and-desist power.

Fifth, we want the law enforced. We passed the law in terms of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 so we should want it enforced and it is not being adequately enforced as evidenced by the thousands of cases in the backlog.

The sixth point is that the best way to cut the workload is to give the cease-and-desist power: one, to encourage conciliation agreements, and that is the experience of Federal and State agencies; and second, and critically important because so few cases, and that is the experience, go from these cease-and-desist powered commissions or other agencies to the courts.

Mr. President, for those six reasons I hope very much that the amendment will be rejected. I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, we have been over and over most of these arguments, but there are some Members in the Chamber today who have not been able to hear all of the arguments. I particularly refer to my good friend and very distinguished colleague from Ohio (Mr. Taft), who was the original author of the independent counsel amendment, which was unanimously agreed to and supported by me and everyone else last Thursday.

It is important to note in considering this matter that although the independent counsel is a good idea, it was unanimously agreed to not because it solved all the problems presented by the bill but because everyone here recognized the enormous amount of problems the bill created. But the adopted amendment fails to accomplish the separation of adjudicatory functions from investigatory and prosecutorial functions.

In answer to my distinguished friend from New York (Mr. Javits), it is worth while pointing out that the Commission has a backlog of some 32,000 cases; that they anticipate 32,000 cases to be filed this fiscal year, and that they expect it to expand to 47,000 new cases next year. Also, the backlog problem is exacerbated by the 21 million additional people who were put under the Commission's jurisdiction.

As pointed out by the Senator from New York, we have some 34 States with some kind of fair labor employment commissions to take care of discrimination cases. Out of that, 32 of those have cease-and-desist power, including my State and the State of New York.

If the cease-and-desist powers are so effective, why is it that ove and over again those States with those commissions are the ones creat ing the backlog in the Federal Commission? Quite obviously, the Stat cease-and-desist enforcement procedures are not working.

Let me just point out what the New York Times said in its editoria of January 25. I might add this is quite exceptional because ver seldom do I quote from the New York Times, but this is an interestin position they have taken. I will ask to have the entire editorial printe in the RECORD later but for the moment I would like to bring to you attention language which states:

In the past, The Times has favored giving the Commission this power to enforce its own findings.

That is cease-and-desist power.

We are still convinced that such an arrangement would represent a vast im provement over the present ineffectual method.

It probably would. It would be better than not having anything The editorial continues:

But a strong case can be made for the idea that effective, nonpartisan en forcement of the law may in the long run be more certain through reliance upon the courts than upon a politically appointed Commission whose members change with each administration.

Because the backlog issue is so important, for the sake of emphasis I will repeat figures which indicate that over-loading of forums wi more likely occur under cease-and-desist enforcement. It is my under standing that the 93 Federal district courts, with 398 judges, have a average backlog of about 12 months. The EEOC now has a backlog o 20 months, not counting the additional backlog. They will receive a such time as they get jurisdiction over 21 million additional employees

So it seems to me perfectly apparent that it is going to be fa quicker to go through the Federal court system in order to get enforce ment of the orders which the Commission feels are legitimate——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield myself 3 minutes.

It is going to be far more expeditious to go through the court syste than it is to have cease-and-desist orders, where in addition to the back log problems, enforcement of cease and desist orders will actually en tail a lengthy trip through the U.S. Court of Appeals. This is a poin most people overlook. If the orders are to be enforced—effectively under the bill language as it is now written, without my amendment requires a procedure through the investigatory process, through th hearing process, through a cease-and-desist order, and then throug the U.S. Court of Appeals.

Under our proposal, once the Commission decides there is reason able cause to support a claim of discrimination, one can go immedi ately to the Federal district court. The order is then immediately en forceable by the judge who issued the order through the court's con tempt powers.

We have modified our amendment. I may say to the Senator fro Ohio (Mr. Taft), to make sure that it does not conflict in any wa with the independent counsel provision. We have taken great car to make sure we fit the two together, so that they will work together as an integral part of the machinery.

As the Senator from New York has pointed out, we have also accepted, with delight—in fact, I cosponsored it—an amendment putting in the provision for the back pay limitation of 2 years. We have also accepted most of the amendments which were suggested to my amendment by the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from New York.

I really believe that what we are doing here is of enormous significance. We are going to be setting the precedent, perhaps for the first time in many, many years, as to whether or not we are going to accept the principles established by Justice Jackson and Mr. Landis and most of the persons who have examined agencies, which recommend repeatedly that the functions of these agencies must be separated so that there will no longer be a star chamber type of proceeding similar to what we had in the past.

Many persons think that the idea of cease and desist is a new idea in the executive agencies. It came about in the 1930's. It is not a new idea. What we need now is to try procedures which will give those who have claims that they have been discriminated against, and those who maintain that discrimination has not taken place, due process. The system must see that each side is protected, and to do that in an impartial tribunal like the Federal court system seems to me to be far and away the best way of accomplishing it.

The Presiding Officer. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. Dominick. I yield myself 2 minutes.

Let me say only one thing more. We have been fighting this issue for a considerable period of time. We will have a vote very shortly now. It is my hope that this debate will lay the basis for a similar type of discussion and debate when we consider other agencies and their procedures. I think it is a principle of overwhelming importance deserving our closest scrutiny.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Percy).

Mr. Percy. Mr. President, the issue we have been debating, that of equal employment opportunity enforcement, is one in which I have had a deep personal interest and concern for many years. In 1963, as a fairly large employer in Illinois, I was both credited and blamed with the final testimony before the State legislature that broke the back of resistance and enabled us to pass the first State FEPC law in Illinois. I think that law has worked extremely well.

I was a cosponsor of the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1970 which was approved by the Senate, but failed to receive favorable passage in the House prior to adjournment of the 91st Congress. When Senator Williams decided last year to reintroduce the bill as S. 2515, I was, of course eager to lend my support again.

There have been numerous occasions during my first term in the Senate in which we have debated and voted on measures aimed at insuring the civil rights and equal opportunities of all Americans. These measures, important as they are, have not fulfilled the one important responsibility we have of protecting the employment rights of the individual. The Civil Rights Act of 1964, through Title VII, was aimed at the elimination of discrimination in employment practices. For the m part, employers have tried to comply. Yet, some employers, both in t private and public sectors, continue to violate the Civil Rights A through blatant as well as frequently concealed methods. We rec nize now that the primary failing in 1964 was in not authorizing effective enforcement power at the Federal level. The Equal Emplo ment Opportunity Commission has received more than 81,000 co plaints since its beginning in 1965, and has been able to present sat factory conciliation in less than half of those cases. It simply does n have the power to enforce affirmative action by employers who ha been found to practice discriminatory employment. Furthermo other Federal offices having responsibilities in this area have ma significant strides in protecting the rights of the employee, yet the is no unified, coordinated approach to this all important aspect of civ rights enforcement.

In the last 8 years since enactment of the Civil Rights Act, we ha been able to mass some enlightening, though disturbing, statistics employment trends in the United States through certain progress h been made, employment surveys and census records show continui discrimination in employment for minority groups. For a variety reasons, including discussion in origin, minority group members, pa ticularly black and Spanish-speaking workers, are clearly relegat to lower paying, less prestigious positions. Advancement is slow, a in too many cases does not exist at all. The median family income f black families is only slightly over $6,000, while white workers ha a median income of over $10,000. Unemployment among black worke was over 9 percent in 1970.

Spanish-speaking Americans are in a similar situation. As wi black workers, unemployment rates among the Spanish-speaking a significantly higher than among the rest of the Nation. There are mo than 7.5 million Spanish-speaking Americans in this country—ov 686,000 are in Illinois—and more than 17 percent of them have i comes below $3,000. Again, we see that Spanish-speaking citizens a found in the lower paid jobs—58 percent in blue-collar occupations and with little opportunity for advancement. With unemployme high and wages low, it is little wonder that many Spanish-speakin people find themselves depending on welfare assistance and swept in the poverty cycle of an urban ghetto.

Discrimination on the basis of race is an undeniable fact in 197 Minorities have seen little reason for optimism when the Federal Go ernment has refused to formulate and fund adequate job training pr grams for improving their skills and to eliminate employment bias where they exist. The poor, inarticulate blue collar worker of wha ever race, who has been discriminated against will have little hope f bringing his case to the attention of his employer or the courts f affirmative action. He does not have a true advocate.

I must hasten to add that many businesses in the private sector ha learned from experience that it is not only the right thing to do, b good economics to hire on a nondiscriminatory basis. My own exper ence as chief executive officer of a company in the Midwest points th out. We established an early policy of fair employment practices a at one time we had virtually 50 percent of one large and importa assembly department who were from minority groups.

Finally, though I should not be making this point last, are the gla ing inequities of employment patterns among women. Female worke who constitute almost 40 percent of our work force, continue to earn lower salaries than men for comparable positions, and are frequently discriminated against in terms of advancement. I believe that it is inconsistent and unrealistic for us to talk about reducing welfare rolls by encouraging mothers to work but not to provide them with the job training, equitable wages, or day-care centers so that they can earn for themselves and their families. Many women, who have been out of the work force, are eager to find employment but are discriminated against if there are other male candidates vying for the same position.

These illustrations undoubtedly come as no surprise to anyone. We experience them every day, and they are a sad commentary on the effectiveness of our Federal civil rights effort.

The bill, S. 2515, which is before us now will not be the final, all inclusive solution to the problems of discrimination in employment. But I firmly believe that it is part of a correct approach to the situation. By giving the EEOC the authority, through cease-and-desist powers, to enforce the objectives of Title VII, we can begin to realize the promises set forth in the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

The Senator from Colorado quoted the editorial which appeared in the New York Times of yesterday. So that that great newspaper will not be wholly condemned by those of us who feel that the cease-and-desist procedure is the best method of enforcement of these human rights, I would like to read from the New York Times of Sunday. Mr. Wicker says:

> The cease-and-desist procedure obviously is preferable. It would offer relatively rapid relief against discrimination, while court actions are time-consuming at best and subject to an infinite variety of appeals and other delays, during which the discriminatory practice could continue. Where an individual is bringing the complaint, moreover, he or she is likely to be less than affluent, and the cost of action before the E.E.O.C. ought to be considerably less than that of bringing a suit in Federal court.

The editorial was written by lawyers for lawyers. Mr. Wicker writes about human values, human rights for human beings.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I shall be very brief.

I think it is important to answer two arguments of the Senator from Colorado. First, as to star chamber proceedings. This is just not true, and it is ancient history that "star chamber" means secret. The Administrative Procedure Act applies to this Commission as it would apply to any other commission, and that act guarantees due process. If we did not have it, if we had a star chamber, the courts would not let a cease-and-desist order stand for 30 seconds. So that is completely irrelevant, and indeed somewhat misleading. There is no star chamber involved.

Second, as to the backlog: History shows that if you want to correct such a backlog, you can only do it if you give the agency some power. If you do not, everyone bedevils them, and the cases last forever. This agency is now completely inundated for that precise reason.

As to the point of the time of the courts being involved, the Senator from Colorado does not note that in the districts where many of these cases will be brought, to wit, in Massachusetts, the southern district of New York, the northern district of Illinois, and the northern district of California, the delays are now 20 to 28 months, and in New York 25 months. It is rural and agricultural areas, where we are not going to have too many of these cases, that bring down the averages. We are talking now about already clogged courts that cannot try cases, an it is proposed to load them here with thousands of cases that it is u necessary to load them with, because the number of cases that go the court of appeals from the commissions with cease-and-desist a thority is so small.

For all those reasons, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator fro Connecticut.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendme of the Senator from Colorado. There is something that I think shou be very clear before we vote.

This is not an anticivil rights amendment. There is not anticiv rights group and a procivil rights group. The Senator from Colorad and those who support his amendment are just as procivil right in the desire to see enforcement go to the EEOC as the Senator from Ne York and the Senator from New Jersey. It is a question of metho

I think it should be made clear that both sides of this argument ar for civil rights and for giving enforcement powers to the EEO What the Senator from Colorado speaks for and what I support is tha this should be a two-step process.

Those of use who believe in civil rights feel that a two-step proces guarantees those rights far more than a one-step process. To my goo friend the Senator from New York I can only say this: That just a I am against one-step processes in deciding whether we are going t make military commitments, so I am against one-step processes a to civil rights decisions. Let us make no mistake about it, the du process of law concept is better served through the proposition of th Senator from Colorado than through what is being proposed in th bill.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself the final 2 minutes: i that what I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I was extremely interested in the ver keen analysis that the Senator from Connecticut just made. He wa telling me that when he was coming to work today, he heard som radio station saying that the anticivil rights forces were massing e forts to do something about this bill and knock off the cease-and-desis authority. If nothing else, I had hoped that my floor arguments ha dispelled such simplistic reasoning.

My amendment provides access to those forums where we have gotte civil rights enforced in this country in the Federal district courts an in the Supreme Court. To the extent that we can avail these peopl of an opportunity to present their cases in the courts, we have a opportunity at that point to be able to establish precedents whic can be not only the law in that case, but to provide precedents for sub sequent employers and employees throughout the country.

It seems to me that where you have, as we do in this bill, the proc ess of investigation, of adjudication, and of enforcement all in on agency, whether you call it a star chamber or whether you do not, th result is that one bureaucratic agency, responsible to no one but them selves, possess all the powers that we used to refer to as the sta chamber.

I think that we desperately need a change into a two-process syste utilizing not only the expertise of the EEOC in investigating and co riliating cases but also the expertise of the Federal district courts in impartially adjudicating cases so that the constitutional rights of everyone are protected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Burdick). All time having expired, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick).

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) as amended. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson) are necessarily absent.

On this vote, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon) is paired with the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson).

If present and voting, the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea" and the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson) is paired with the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley).

If present and voting, the Senator from Washington would vote "nay" and the Senator from New York would vote "yea."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) is absent on official business.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Mundt) is absent because of illness.

On this vote, the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) is paired with the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson). If present and voting, the Senator from New York would vote "yea" and the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 48, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 822

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 822.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Hollings). The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio (Mr. Saxbe) proposes the following amendment:

Section 10, of page 61, line 24 through page 62, line 17, is struck and sections and 12 are redesignated as sections 10 and 11, respectively.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I am willing to agree on a time limitation n this amendment if the manager of the bill is. If the Senator from ew Jersey wants to set a time certain on voting on this amendment 12 o'clock, it would be agreeable to me.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I am authorized by the mover of the amendment, the distinguished Senator from Ohio (Mr. Saxbe), and the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams)—having consulted also with the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits)—to ask unanimous consent that the vote on the pending amendment occur at 3 p.m. today; provided further, that time for the debate on the amendment begin at 2 p.m. today, the time to be equally divided between and controlled by the distinguished Senator from Ohio (Mr. Saxbe) and the distinguished manager of the bill (Mr. Williams); provided further, that time on any amendment in the second degree be limited to 20 minutes and time on any motion, appeal, point of order, or non-debatable motion be limited to 20 minutes, such time to be divided equally and controlled by the mover of such and the manager of the bill, except that, in instances in which the mover is in favor of such the time in opposition shall then be under the control of the minority leader or his designee.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I should merely like to explain the reason for this proposal, because it comes suddenly in the middle of an important part of the bill. The Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) and I are urgently needed at the hearing on the west coast dock strike bill, which I have introduced for myself and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Packwood).

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I thank the Senator from New York. In further explanation, it is the intention of the leadership—and I make this statement with the approval of the majority leader, I am sure—to take a recess shortly until 2 p.m., today.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. I should like to propound an interrogatory to my friend the distinguished Senator from West Virginia. As I understand the unanimous consent request, it applies only to the amendment offered by the able and distinguished Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. And to any amendment thereto.

Mr. ERVIN. It does not apply to any amendment that I may desire to offer?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. The Senator from North Carolina is preeminently correct.

Mr. ERVIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Saxbe. Mr. President, the amendment I offer concerns a most ifficult legislative decision involving the area of equal employment pportunity, specifically the Executive order program of the Depart- ent of Labor, insuring equal employment by Federal contractors nd subcontractors.

We shall soon be asked to vote upon S. 2515, which would provide, mong other things, for the wholesale removal of the Department's xecutive order program, which is now competently administered y the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, to the already over- urdened EEOC. The amendment would strike section 10, which is he transfer section of the bill we are considering.

I believe that the significance of our decision in this matter warrants brief explanation of the nature of the Executive order program ad- inistered by the Department's OFCC and how well the Department Labor's OFCC has executed the President's mandate.

As Senators undoubtedly know, the "affirmative action" concept is e mainstay of the Executive order program, having had its im- ortance first recognized by then Vice President Richard M. Nixon, ho observed that "overt discrimination" was not the principal ob- acle to achieving equal employment opportunity for today's genera- on of citizens. The affirmative action concept was thereafter adopted President John F. Kennedy in 1961 by Executive Order 10925. It as since been reaffirmed by President Johnson in Executive Order 246 and by President Nixon through several Executive orders, the umbers of which I shall supply.

The OFCC's affirmative action programs have tremendous impact nd require that 260,000 Government contractors in all industries lopt positive programs to seek out minorities and women for new mployment opportunities. To accomplish this objective, the OFCC as utilized the proven business technique of establishing "goals and metables" to insure the success of the Executive order program. It as been the "goals and timetables" approach, which is unique to the FCC's efforts in equal employment, coupled with extensive re- orting and monitoring procedures that has given the promise of ual employment opportunity a new credibility.

The Executive order program should not be confused with the dicial remedies for proven discrimination which unfold on a limited nd expensive case-by-case basis. Rather, affirmative action means at all Government contractors must develop programs to insure that l share equally in the jobs generated by the Federal Government's ending. Proof of overt discrimination is not required.

The success of the OFCC's affirmative action program is clearly ident among the Nation's leading industries. As a result of OFCC rograms for the construction industry, 46 voluntary and imposed ans have been created to bring more than 30,000 minority workers to the skilled construction trades. Special efforts in the textile in- ustry resulted in an increase of minority employment rate from .8 percent in 1968 to 18.4 percent of the total 1971.

In education, 101 monitored universities had established a goal of .784 new hires for minorities and women and actually hired 17,889, d in the banking industry, the 2,400 largest banks covered by the xecutive order increased minority employment from 8 percent in 66 to 14 percent in 1970.

The critical OFCC mission to insure equal employment opportun can continue to register such successes only if performed within executive branch, and within that branch, the Department of La is clearly the most appropriate agency to further that mission. T is so because, to be effective, the contract compliance program must an integral part of the procurement process. The process of procur goods and services, as I am sure you recognize, is peculiarly a funct of the executive branch.

Equal employment opportunity, is of course, a workplace stand much like the many other employee protections which are now offe employees, as minimum wage and safety standards. The Departm of Labor is the Government's expert administrator of workpl standards.

Moreover, occupational training programs are the keys to succe ful employment and the Department's Manpower Administrati plays a critical role in the implementation of the Executive order p gram. Further and of particular moment, the Department has be a leader in developing programs designed to assist women in the wo force; namely, the Department's vigorous enforcement of the Equ Pay Act and the functioning of the Women's Bureau within the D partment are examples of its total commitment to EEO for wom Cooperation between OFCC and the Women's Bureau was an esse tial aspect of OFCC's recent issuance of revised Order No. 4 requiri Government contractors to develop goals for new hire and upgradi opportunities for women. Further, the presence of Cabinet-level dir tion has achieved the vital program coordination necessary to progra success and funding and staffing of the OFCC through the Depa ment of Labor enables the OFCC to draw upon the full range of st and resources of a Cabinet agency.

The proposed transfer of functions under Executive Order 112 from the OFCC to the EEOC would jeopardize the contract comp ance program. The EEOC is ill equipped to assume the responsibi ties for the implementation of the Executive order progra Chairman Brown of the EEOC has stated that the assumption Executive order responsibilities by the EEOC is administratively i practicable and has given four reasons: First, there is an ever-incre ing number of cases pending before the EEOC which has alrea resulted in a 2-year backlog; second, the incompatibility of age functions: EEOC is a regulatory agency under Title VII—OFCC is a procurement program manager under the Executive order; thi new and different responsibilities would disrupt coordination in Ti VII and its administration would suffer, and perhaps most impo tantly there might be serious problems of conflict in both the area remedies and this area of investigation.

There is a great potential conflict in the assumption by EEOC the assumption by EEOC of the Executive order program respon bility. For example, Chairman Brown described a situation where violation of Title VII might be found but where a violation of t contract compliance standards would be evident.

The affirmative action concept as innovatively and successfu employed by the OFCC has been challenged as a violation of Ti VII the courts have responded by stating that the Executive ord program is independent of Title VII and not subject to some of more restrictive provisions.

Section 10 of the proposed bill would place the entire Executive rder program under Title VII and might well result in renewed halleges to the many important programs established thereunder—or instance, the Philadelphia plan. Further, the proposed bill would ndanger the survival of the contract compliance program by making s resources dependent upon the EEOC—an independent, hybrid gency with limited manpower and economic resources.

For these reasons, I ask that you vote for the amendment to S. 2515 triking that provision of the bill—section 10—which would transfer he Office of Federal Contract Compliance to the EEOC.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for Ameri-n workers.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The Presiding Officer. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the rder for the quorum call be rescinded.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I oppose the amendment offered y the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Saxbe). I have supported every meas-re to expand the ability to cope with problems of discrimination. I upported continuation of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. I am ehind the efforts of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commis-on to do its best. I have continually urged increased appropriations or every department of Government to help meet the need for ending iscrimination in this country.

In particular, I am a longtime advocate of the Federal Govern-ent's contract compliance program. I believe that the Government, bove all people, must be pure and above reproach in its relationship ith the minority community.

Consequently, I have supported in the past, the Office of Federal ontract Compliance to implement the so-called Philadelphia plan. felt strongly that it was entitled to a full and fair opportunity and at it would have been unwise for congressional action to thwart this fort toward assisting the minority community.

Most regrettably, I have concluded after long consideration that the ffice of Federal Contract Compliance is a severe disappointment. It oes not provide adequate assistance to minorities under the existing xecutive order. I am not alone in my judgment.

As early as the fall of last year, the Civil Rights Commission in its onumental assessment of the Federal civil rights efforts condemned he Office of Federal Contract Compliance as one of the worst civil ghts operations in the Federal Establishment, and recommended that be transferred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. gain in April of 1971, in a 6-month review, the Civil Rights Com-ission could find very little of redeeming effort by the office and gain recommended its consolidation with EEOC.

In testimony before the subcommittee, the Reverend Theodore Hes-urgh, Chairman of the Civil Rights Commission, reiterated the need or consolidating these civil rights efforts, and finally, just a few weeks go, the Commission on Civil Rights issued a 1-year report on the Federal civil rights effort. While stating that the Office of Fede Contract Compliance had accomplished some things during the p year, it nonetheless continued to receive low marks for its work.

As a result of this latest report of the Civil Rights Commissi
I asked the chairman for his views on the consolidation matter. I response to me which I would offer for the record was that the n for consolidation is greater than ever and that he would reaffirm wi out qualification or hesitation his statements before the committee.

I ask unanimous consent that the excerpts from the Civil Rig Commission reports, the testimony of Father Hesburgh, and the change of correspondence be printed in the Record at the conclusi of my remarks.

(See exhibit 1, p. 922.)

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, Mr. President, it is not just the view of t Commission on Civil Rights that has persuaded me personally th the program of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance should implemented by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commissio
The testimony before the committee of representatives from the Lea ership Conference on Civil Rights which encompasses almost of the civil rights organizations, agreed with the views of the Civ Rights Commission and the committee bill calling for th consolidation.

There are at least two major problems which I believe neces ita this consolidation. The first is that the legal obligations of Title V of the Civil Rights Act and the legal obligations under the Executi order requiring equal employment opportunity to Government co tracts are so closely related that the enforcement by separate agenci of these requirements leads to confusion among the business comm nity and uncertainty with respect to the operation of collective ba gaining agreements, seniority systems, and other business-relate matters dealing with personnel.

At one time, it was thought that the arsenal of weapons approach-utilizing a broad range of tools to secure equal employment oppo tunity—was the most effective procedure. I believe that there is roo for, and a need for, a wide range of tools, and it is for this reason th I would not abolish the Executive order program itself. Nonetheles the use of these remedies and weapons requires very careful coordin tion and a close relationship. The failure of the Government agenci to engage in this necessary coordination is described by Father He burgh in his letter to me. I read from his letter:

> In the section of the report dealing with the Equal Employment Opportuni > Commission (EEOC), we included a separate evaluation of the efforts at "Intr > Government Coordination." We concluded that all of the major attempts > improved coordination between OFCC, EEOC, and the Department of Justi > appeared to have failed. The OFCC EEOC complaint referral system appea > to have broken down and was to be revised or improved. Furthermore, the Inte > agency Staff Coordinating Committee, consisting of representatives of OFC > EEOC and the Department of Justice, has met rarely and then only to disen > ad hoc problems. Thus, we found no overall coordinated Federal effort to co > bat employment discrimination. In summation, we stated:
>
> The lack of coordination among OFCC, EEOC and the Department of Justi > was one reason this Commission recommended in its report of October, 1970, th > transfer of OFCC to EEOC and the transfer of section 707 suit power fro > the Department of Justice to EEOC. It appears that this reason is even mo > pressing today since existing mechanisms of coordination appear to hav > atrophied.

The 7 years' experience of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act and the Executive order program reflects numerous situations where the three agencies now charged with the employment effort on civil rights have not adequately coordinated their activities and have neither provided adequate remedy to the aggrieved minorities nor an understandable solution to the confused businessman.

The second problem causes me severe distress. A careful staff inquiry not only supports the feeling of the Civil Rights groups and the Commission on Civil Rights that the OFCC is inadequate, but also established that the OFCC is performing a disservice to the minority community. The simple truth is that the overblown rhetoric and unsupported claims of success of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance has misled the public and the Congress. The kind of misstatement, overstatement and spurious claims made by the Department were aptly described at our hearing on October 6, where Clarence Mitchell, speaking for the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, described the Department's efforts:

> I would like to take this opportunity to express my personal objection to the misleading and divisive testimony presented by the U.S. Department of Labor here before this subcommittee on Monday, October 4. That testimony reminds me of the professional rainmaker who could produce plenty of wind, a great deal of thunder and impressive displays of lightning, but no rain. The Department of Labor attempts to create the impression that it is only organized labor that is pushing for the transfer of the Office of Contract Compliance to the EEOC. That is simply not the truth—indeed, I go further and say that it is a conscious effort to conceal the truth. I would like to point out that I have already given to one of the staff members a reproduction of a portion of the first report of the Fair Employment Practices Committee from July 1943 to December 1944. Page 6 of that report clearly points out the jurisdiction of the original FEPC, and that original FEPC had jurisdiction over Government agencies and defense contractors.
> So from the beginning it was the concept of this whole program that these operations be carried on together. Indeed, it is ridiculous to try to carry them on in any other kind of way.

I do not make these statements lightly. I was disturbed by the implications of the Civil Rights Commission report. I was even more disturbed by the claims of the Department of Labor of success that appeared to fly in the face of my own understanding of that compliance operation.

In questioning before the committee, the departmental spokesman claimed a number of successes in the equal employment area for which they were asked to provide backup data and materials.

I shall use but one example, and that is the Philadelphia plan. The Department of Labor has been in confrontation with the U.S. Congress, and the Comptroller General, as well as the private sector over the establishment of the so-called Philadelphia plan which provided goals and timetables for the employment of minorities on Federal construction jobs in the Philadelphia area.

The Department of Labor was asked to furnish some very simple and specific data about the results of that plan. They were asked to tell me how many minority employees and minorities who were now employed, had not been employed when the Philadelphia plan started. That is, how many new jobs resulted.

I regret to say that the Department, despite months of requests, was not able to answer my questions. We learned about the number of minorities who were working on Federal construction jobs at any given time in Philadelphia, and the increased number of those wor ing on Federal construction jobs. We learned something of the nu ber of minorities that have left non-Federal construction jobs to go Federal construction jobs, and we found out about situations whe contractors transferred minority workers from job to job, one st ahead of the compliance officers—a device known as motorcycle co pliance, because that was the means used to transfer the workers. B we have not been able to learn the number of new jobs made availal to minorities.

Even the local civil rights groups have acknowledged the Depar ment's failure in Philadelphia. I ask unanimous consent to ha printed at this point of my statement a newspaper interview of t executive director of the Philadelphia Urban League reflecting th view.

There being no objection, the interview was ordered to be printe
in the Record as follows:

PHILADELPHIA PLAN IS JUDGED A FAILURE

PHILADELPHIA.—The "Philadelphia plan," a federal program designed to g more Negroes into skilled construction jobs, appears to have failed so far.

It has won all its legal battles—the latest in the Supreme Court Tuesday—b it has lost most tests where it really counts—on the building sites.

The high court turned down an appeal by a group of contractors contestin the plan's legality. Some observers believe the decision was a shot in the ar for the program.

IN AREAS OF BIAS

The plan originated here three years ago and was aimed at finding jobs i construction trades that had discriminated against Negroes. It requires co tractors in U.S.-assisted projects exceeding $500,000 to hire a specified pe centage of Negroes and other minorities.

Last year, the plan spread into other big minority markets such as Chicag Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit. But it has not had much of an impact.

The plan in Philadelphia—where a third of the population is Negro—wa designed to bring the ranks of six trade unions to 20 percent minority membe ship by 1974. With official figures unavailable, estimates put the number Negroes at less than 5 percent of the total employed as iron workers, plumber and pipefitters, steamfitters, sheetmetal workers, electrical workers and elevato builders.

"It has been a failure," said Andrew Freeman, executive director of th Philadelphia Urban League. A year ago, he reported "only a handful of me have gotten jobs."

Robert Robinson, director of training for the Negro Trade Union Leadershi Council, said he did not know anyone "who has been put to work directly be cause of the Philadelphia plan."

A U.S. Department of Labor spokesman disagreed.

He said in Washington that the administration was "quite pleased by th [illegible] action" and promised figures on hiring soon, hopefully by the end of th week.

"We have just completed a survey of employment activity under the plan tha indicates minority goals are being met," the spokesman said.

To date, 71 contracts totaling $249 million have been let under the plan i the five-county Philadelphia area. The total probably is more than $1 billio across the nation.

"STILL A FLOP"

"The plan is still a flop," said Andrew Antonucci, executive secretary of th [illegible] Association of Eastern Pennsylvania, "because there just aren don't enough minority people available who are trained, so we can't fill the slots th [illegible] should."

It was Mr. Antonucci's group that filed the Supreme Court suit.
Government and minority leaders anticipate gains on the strength of the ıpreme Court decision.
Charles Bowser, executive director of the Philadelphia Urban Coalition, and
r. Freeman said there were indications that the government now would deal ore harshly with recalcitrant contractors and unions.
Mr. Freeman said he hoped more community groups in Negro neighborhoods pecially will "recruit and refer to unions and contractors more and more inority workers."
"The few black people who have been hired do not represent the full potential of e black community," Mr. Freeman said. "It has been little more than tokenism.
must be complete acceptance by the industry."

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, Senators may ask, why harp on one ilure out of a major program; why concentrate on this one area and y because you failed in this, you really should be transferred? Well, is really quite simple. The Department of Labor, the Equal Employ- ent Opportunity Commission, and the Department of Justice all ree that the basic requirement of nondiscrimination in Government ntracting, the so-called antidiscrimination provisions, are the same der Executive Order 11246 and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. ıe key to the Office of Federal Contract Compliance's approach is irmative action. It is not a situation, although it could well be called e, of correcting persisting discrimination in its most well understood rm. It involves an effort regardless of the past history of the em- oyer to upgrade and improve its minority work force. In the affirma- e action program, the concept of improving the quality of minority ıployment is commendable. It is necessary, and it is urgent. In the partment of Labor it has not worked well and should be transferred. ıe contract compliance program is necessary and important.

I conclude by quoting from the committee report at pages 30 and 31:

The question raised last year was whether the program has had substantive sults. Unfortunately, the paucity of credible achievement cited last year is ll the rule. The successes described in the testimony suffer from an inability the program managers to furnish reliable data to support their claim. The ogram looks good on paper, but despite many opportunities vary minimal in- rmation was furnished to the Committee that would support the contention at significant results have been achieved. To the contrary, in the history of Contract Compliance Program, until two days after introduction of this l, no sanction had ever been imposed for violation of the Executive Order. ıce then, only one small contractor, having 10 employees, has been subjected to ıctions.
In 1969, then Secretary of Labor Shultz, testifying before this Committee, ked for time for the new administration to get its House in order. The Depart- ent's testimony this year suggested that real success is just around the corner. The rights of minorities and women are too important to continue this im- rtant function in an agency that has not really been able to achieve the prom- d results. The contract compliance program is an important and viable tool the government's efforts to achieve equal employment opportunity. It should ve a chance to operate in a fresh atmosphere with an agency that has Equal ıployment Opportunities as its sole priority.

Mr. President, if the occasion arises later, I will submit a list of the rious agencies under the Department of Labor's umbrella and also ıer departments of Government so as to spell out and indicate the peless diffusion, and why we need consolidation, coordination, and ıre effectiveness.

I yield the floor.

U.S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS,
Washington, D.C., January 10, 1972.

HON. HARRISON A. WILLIAM, JR.,
Chairman, Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I would like to thank you for indicating in your Decemb 10 letter to me that your Committee valued my testimony in support of S. 251 the "Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971." Further, would like to take this opportunity to reaffirm the Commission's position wi regard to the consolidation of the Federal Government's equal employme activities.

You were correct in stating that our report "The Federal Civil Rights Enforc ment Effort -One Year Later," found that the mechanisms utilized by the Offi of Federal Contract Compliance (OFCC) to direct the enforcement of Executi Order 11246 had improved. Our evaluation of the actions taken directly by OFC and the actions taken by the compliance agencies at the urging of OFCC indica that in the last year some progress has been made in developing the ty of structures and processes necessary to mount an effective attack on the proble of employment discrimination. It is important to note, however, that our repo on OFCC did not deal with substantive progress, nor was it an all encom passing study. Rather, it evaluated only structure and mechanism.

This is not to say, however, that the Commission was satisfied with the ste taken by OFCC. Quite the contrary; we rank the performance of OFCC "Marginal." Further, the degree of progress depicted is not substantial, and that rate of progress is not increased, OFCC's operation probably will not deemed "Adequate" for some time. Yet, in the statement of the Commission i troducing the report, we stressed that time is of the essence when the rights people are being denied to them.

There is one additional factor which I would like to point out to you. In th section of the report dealing with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commi sion (EEOC) we included a separate evaluation of the efforts at "Intra-Gover mental Coordination." We concluded that all of the major attempts at improve coordination between OFCC, EEOC, and the Department of Justice appeared have failed. The OFCC EEOC complaint referral system appears to have broke down and was to be revised or improved. Furthermore, the Interagency Sta Coordinating Committee, consisting of representatives of OFCC, EEOC, and th Department of Justice, has met rarely and then only to discuss ad hoc problem Thus, we found no overall coordinated Federal effort to combat employment di crimination. In summation, we state:

"The lack of coordination among OFCC, EEOC and the Department of Justi was one reason this Commission recommended in its report of October 197 the transfer of OFCC to EEOC and the transfer of Section 707 suit powe from the Department of Justice to EEOC. It appears that this reason is eve more pressing today since existing mechanisms of coordination appear to hav atrophied."

Nothing we discovered in the investigations on which we based our report ha led us to change our earlier conclusion that the pattern and practice functions the Department of Justice and the contract compliance functions of the Depar ment of Labor be transferred to EEOC. We are pleased that your Committee reporting S. 2515 provided for such consolidation.

I hope that I have clarified any ambiguity which may have been created as result of our "One Year Later" report. If you have any further questions, would be pleased to have them answered for you.

Sincerely,

THEODORE M. HESBURGH,
Chairman.

DECEMBER 10, 1971.

REV. THEODORE HESBURGH,
Chairman, Commission on Civil Rights,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR FATHER HESBURGH: I am sure that you are aware of the great respe that the Committee had for your testimony in support of S. 2515, the "Equa Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971." The message that y resented to the Committee was indeed an eloquent presentation of the urgent eed for this bill.

One of the elements of this bill concerns the consolidation of Federal Governent equal employment activities. The Civil Rights Commission recommended hat the pattern and practice functions of the Department of Justice and the ontract Compliance functions of the Department of Labor be transferred to he Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The Committee in unanimously eporting S. 2515 provided for just such a consolidation. The views of the Comittee on making such a judgment were set forth in the report on the bill, a opy of which is enclosed for your information.

Since the bill was reported on October 28, 1971, the Commission on Civil ights issued a supplementary report entitled, "The Federal Civil Rights Enorcement One Year Later." In its discussion of the Federal Civil Rights Enorcement Effort, the Commission in evaluating the Contract compliance funcions of the Department of Labor, suggested that the Office of Federal Contract ompliance, while still a marginal operation had improved from the original valuation. To be precise, in evaluating the Office, the Commission made the folowing judgment:

Evaluation

"OFCC has made progress in the areas of:

"1. initiating sanction actions;

"2. launching a new attempt at monitoring the implementation of the comliance review process;

"3. issuing minority employment 'bid conditions' for certain construction conractors;

"4. increasing significantly the number of compliance reviews.

"There is also reason to hope that improved monitoring tools, an automated anagement information system, and new programs such as the 'national conruction plan,' when operational, will result in a more comprehensive compliance enforcement effort.

"At the present time, however, the uncertainty of OFCC staffing, and the unnown consequences of the new organization of contract compliance responsibilies in DOL are of paramount concern. Moreover, the inability of OFCC to move eyond experimental monitoring steps, the meager results of construction comliance efforts, and the continued lack of final sanction action also represent sigificant inadequacies in OFCC's program."

I would appreciate if you could clarify the meaning of this supplementary eport and the extent to which the judgments made in that report would have ny effect on the overall recommendation for consolidation of these activities.

With every good wish,

Sincerely,

HARRISON A. WILLIAMS, Jr.

From Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971 Hearings]

STATEMENT OF HON. REV. THEODORE HESBURGH, CHAIRMAN, U.S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

The Commission has issued two reports that recommended transfer of the ffice of Federal Contract Compliance from the Department of Labor to EEOC. 'e believe that this transfer would improve both contract compliance and the nforcement of Title VII. Unnecessary duplication and overlap would be elimiated, and the two programs would complement each other under the direcon of a single agency.

The danger of placing direction of the contract compliance program in an gency primarily responsible for noncivil rights programs has been dramatically nderscored by the reorganization now underway at the Department of Labor. nder the reorganization, OFCC field staff will report directly to the regional rector of employment standards rather than to the OFCC Director in ashington.

True, regional directors will have access to OFCC technical information and licy guidance from the Washington office. However, our experience is that vil rights enforcement suffers when those who carry out a policy do not report the official responsible for making the policy. Further, we fear that OFCC being downgraded. The solution lies in transferring OFCC to EEOC.

The Federal Civil Rights Enforcement Effort 7 Months Later

(A report of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, May 1971)

OFFICE OF FEDERAL CONTRACT COMPLIANCE (OFCC)

Commission findings

1. OFCC has failed to provide adequate guidance to compliance agencies an Federal contractors concerning the rate of progress expected in eliminating em ployment discrimination and in remedying the effects of past discrimination.

2. OFCC, hampered by a lack of adequate staffing, has confined its monitorin of compliance agency enforcement activity to a series of ad hoc efforts that hav not had lasting effects.

3. OFCC has failed to assure that compliance agencies maintain enforc ment machinery capable of monitoring compliance.

4. OFCC and the compliance agencies have failed to impose the sanctions o contract termination or debarment on noncomplying Government contractors which has lessened the credibility of the Government's compliance program.

5. Contract compliance in the construction industry, which has been imple mented primarily by federally imposed plans in Washington and Philadelphi and locally developed "hometown" agreements, has been ineffective and limited.

Commission recommendations

1. OFCC, with the assistance of 15 compliance agencies, should establish on a industry-by-industry basis numerical and percentage employment goals, wit specific timetables for meeting them.

2. OFCC should strength its capacity to monitor performance by compliance agencies through increased staff, systematic racial and ethnic data collection and compliance agency reporting.

3. Uniform compliance review systems should be developed for use by all 1 compliance agencies.

4. OFCC should promptly impose these sanctions where noncompliance i found and not remedied within a reasonable period of time.

5. Goals and timetables for minority employment should be applied through out the industry and systematic enforcement mechanisms should be created.

Response

Action Completed

1. None.

2. The compliance operations of seven agencies have been reviewed for pur poses of discovering basic deficiencies in agency compliance activity.

3. a. The number of onsite compliance reviews projected to be completed b compliance agencies during FY 71 will be nearly double the number conducte during 1970.

b. Through OFCC intervention, organizational changes have been made in th compliance programs of General Services Administration (GSA) and the De partment of the Interior.

4. In 250 cases, procedures have been instituted, in the form of "show-cause" notices, which can lead ultimately to debarment or contract cancellation. I six cases, notices of proposed debarment or contract cancellation have bee issued. But no contractor yet has been actually debarred nor has any contrac been cancelled.

5. Minority employment plans with hiring goals and timetables covering al employment of Federal or federally assisted construction contractors were im posed in three major cities in early May.

Action Planned

1. OFCC, which has established "opportunity estimates," comprising nearly 600,000 new hires and promotions of minority employees under the contrac compliance program, expects that these estimates will reflect goals and timetable by the end of FY 72.

2. The President's budget request for FY 72 calls for a substantial increas in OFCC and compliance agency staff resources. OFCC is currently developin a system for the collection of racial data and plans to develop report and evaluation forms for contractors and compliance officers for purposes of monitoring compliance reviews.

3. a. OFCC is preparing a compliance manual which will set forth uniform compliance review procedures. An improved management information system is also being developed.

b. A joint OFCC–CSC training course is planned for compliance agency personnel.

c. With OFCC's support, substantial increases for compliance agency staffs have been proposed for FY 72.

4. None.

5. The goals and timetables approach will be applied to the practices of all contractors utilizing construction trade unions which are not parties to a "hometown" agreement.

Action Under Study

1–4. None.

5. A national construction compliance plan with goals and timetables related to minority concentrations is being considered.

Evaluation

The contract compliance program continues to suffer from the failure of OFCC to provide adequate guidance concerning the setting of specific goals and timetables for achieving increased minority employment and establishing criteria for compliance. In the absence of such guidance, neither compliance agencies nor contractors are in a position to know what is expected in terms of the rate of progress required in eliminating discrimination and remedying the effects of past discrimination. While the Philadelphia Plan concept of federally imposed minority hiring goals and timetables has been extended to three more cities, a national industrywide construction compliance plan with goals and timetables has yet to be developed. Minority unemployment and underemployment are continuing at a substantially higher rate than for majority workers.

A variety of improvements in reporting procedures are planned, but their full implementation lies in the future. OFCC has conducted a number of needed reviews of compliance agencies' performance, but their impact is unknown and systematic reporting procedures still have not been established. The contract compliance program has suffered from a lack of sufficient staff resources. The President's FY 1972 budget calls for a substantial increase in resources for OFCC and the compliance agencies, which should enable them to carry out their responsibilities with increased effectiveness.

Finally, although OFCC has implemented a large number of procedures that can lead ultimately to the sanction of contract termination or debarment, the fact that these sanctions have never been imposed continues to weaken the contract compliance effort.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION (EEOC)

Commission findings

1. EEOC's effectiveness has been impaired by weak enforcement powers, limited by statute to enforcement through "conference, conciliation, and persuasion."

2. EEOC has lacked sufficient staff to carry out its responsibilities with maximum effectiveness.

3. EEOC has further restricted its effectiveness by placing heavy emphasis on the processing of individual discrimination complaints, making relatively little use of its initiatory capabilities such as public hearings and Commissioner-initiated charges, to broaden its attack against job bias.

4. EEOC has failed to establish the mechanisms necessary to process complaints with dispatch.

5. EEOC has not developed a system of priorities for complaint processing by which cases of greater importance are handled on an expeditious basis.

Commission recommendations

1. Congress should amend Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to authorize EEOC to issue cease and desist orders to eliminate discriminatory practices through administrative action.

2. EEOC staff should be increased to a level commensurate with the scope of i civil rights responsibilities.

3. EEOC should emphasize intiatory activities, such as public hearings a Commissioner charges, to facilitate elimination of industrywide or regional pa terns of employment discrimination.

4. EEOC should amend its procedures to make more effective use of t complaint processing system.

5. EEOC should assign priority to complaints of particular importance a emphasis should be placed on processing complaints involving classes of co plaints rather than individuals.

Federal Civil Rights Enforcement Effort

(A report of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights 1970)

CONTRACT COMPLIANCE

There is a 29-year history of ineffective efforts to require Federal contracto to be nondiscriminatory in their employment practices. Lack of success of Exec tive Order 11246, the most recent of operative Executive Orders on the subject, directly related to inadequate executive leadership provided by the Office Federal Contract Compliance (OFCC), which is charged with responsibility f coordinating and overseeing the entire Federal contract compliance program.

OFCC, until recently, had failed to adopt and implement policies and pr cedures that would produce vigorous compliance programs in the Federal agenci immediately responsible for contract compliance. Recent actions taken in e fectuating OFCC's three current priorities—defining the affirmative action r quirement of the Order, monitoring compliance programs of the agencies, an structuring a Government-wide construction compliance program—give promis of leading to a more effective effort. Their implementation, however, lies in th future.

The importance of explaining in detail the meaning of affirmative action t contractors and compliance agencies has been clearly recognized and OFC earlier this year, took the significant step of expanding its regulations to de specifically with the nature of the affirmative action requirement. The extent t which these expanded regulations will be implemented by compliance agenci depends upon OFCC capabilities and determination. Until recently, OFCC activities did not offer encouragement. For example, OFCC was unable to su cessfully require adequate enforcement of similar affirmative action requirement in the past.

Monitoring of agency Executive Order enforcement is a key ingredient in a effective Federal contract compliance program. Establishment of uniform policie and the assurance that those policies are carried out are the chief responsibilitie of OFCC. In the past OFCC monitoring has been haphazard—a series of ad ho efforts that did not appear to have lasting effect. A recent OFCC reorganizatio the new development of an industry target selection system and the redistribu tion of compliance agency contractor responsibilities, appears to have improve OFCC's monitoring capability, but no procedures for monitoring have bee developed. The value of these structural changes is totally dependent upo actions yet to be taken.

After several false starts, OFCC has finally established the firm basis for Government-wide construction compliance program and has adopted a strateg for its application. The Philadelphia Plan approach of requiring minority grou percentage employment goals for specific construction trades provides the basi standard of construction compliance. OFCC has indicated that it is prepared t impose Philadelphia-type plans in 91 additional cities unless those cities devis plans of their own to increase minority utilization in the construction trade These community developed plans, or "hometown solutions," however, have bee forthcoming in only a few cities and their viability has not yet been established nor has provision been made for their enforcement.

Of the 15 departments and agencies assigned compliance responsibility, th Department of Defense (DOD), which, in terms of dollar amount, is responsibl for more than half of Federal contracting, is the most important. The Depart ment's performance has been disappointing. For example, in two recent contrac compliance matters involving southern textile mills and a large aircraft manu facturer in St. Louis, DOD initially failed to follow its own procedures. Thoug some changes have been made to prevent recurrence of these failures, the compliance program of the Department still has serious structural defects. In addition, its staff is too small and its compliance review efforts have not proved adequate.

The 14 other agencies, responsible for contract compliance in some important industries, have failed to assign sufficiently high priority to this responsibility. These agencies have limped along with inadequate staffs and cumbersome organizations which have produced a variety of inadequate compliance efforts.

The use of sanctions and the collection of significant racial and ethnic data by OFCC and the compliance agencies are two essentials of a successful contract compliance program that have been missing to date. The use of sanctions is necessary to make the enforcement program credible. Yet, no contract has ever been terminated nor any company debarred for Executive Order violation. Rarely have any hearings been held concerning non-compliance.

The collection of data would permit compliance agencies and OFCC to adequately evaluate their efforts and the total effect of the entire program. Currently, however, few data are collected and they are inadequate to inform the agencies of the extent of progress in minority employment, or indeed, whether any progress is being made. Though future plans contemplate extensive data collection and analysis these efforts are only in their initial stages.

D. Coordination

The President should issue a reorganization plan transferring the contract compliance responsibilities of OFCC and the litigation responsibilities of the Department of Justice to EEOC, so that all responsibilities for equal employment opportunity will be lodged in a single independent agency.

THE FEDERAL CIVIL RIGHTS ENFORCEMENT EFFORT: 1 YEAR LATER

(The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, November 1971)

EVALUATION

OFCC has made progress in the areas of:

1. initiating sanction areas;
2. launching a new attempt at monitoring the implementation of the compliance review process;
3. issuing minority employment "bid conditions" for certain construction contractors;
4. increasing significantly the number of compliance reviews.

There is also reason to hope that improved monitoring tools, an automated management information system, and new programs such as the "national construction plan," when operational, will result in a more comprehensive compliance enforcement effort.

At the present time, however, the uncertainty of OFCC staffing and the unknown consequences of the new organization of contract compliance responsibilities in DOL are of paramount concern. Moreover, the inability of OFCC to move beyond experimental monitoring steps, the meager results of construction compliance efforts, and the continued lack of final sanction action also represent significant inadequacies in OFCC's program.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I have listened with interest to the statement concerning the effectiveness of the present setup. I think the thrust of most of the statements is that the agencies cannot get adequate evaluation. I do not think that because successful figures cannot be obtained is a reason for transfer. I believe the program has been a success. Most of all, I like the affirmative approach. In other words, it is the Department of Labor whose area it is to supervise Government contracts; and having within their grasp some 240,000 contractors, they can make them agree to certain goals before they begin those contracts. The Department of Labor is an agency that has an affirmative approach, one which says the person, "When you take this contract, you have to make certa agreements."

This arrangement should not be changed to make it an embryón enforcement agency where the plan is not so fully enforced, which wi go to the contractor and say, "We will go after you if you have n done what you should."

I think the pressure still has to be affirmative action. But I thin most important, is the question of how the EEOC would handle t program if the provision at present in the bill were adopted.

I think we can best determine that by what the chairman had say, and I think his testimony before the committee last October shou be considered, when he testified that EEOC is not prepared to assu these new duties under Executive Order 11246, especially at a tin when it will be assuming new cease-and-desist order enforceme powers.

William A. Brown, the Chairman of the EEOC, who should hav a pretty good idea of how well equipped his agency would be to exerci the Secretary of Labor's responsibilities, opposed the transfer of t Secretary of Labor's responsibilities under Executive Order 1124 and he did this actively before the Senate Labor Subcommittee la October 4. He gave the following four reasons why, in his expe judgment, it would be administratively impracticable to transfer thes functions of this agency:

First. EEOC has an ever-increasing number of cases pending b fore it which have already resulted in a 2-year backlog.

Second. The functions of EEOC and those of the Secretary of Labo under the Executive order would be incompatible. EEOC is a regul tory agency under Title VII, and OFCC, the agency within the Labo Department which the Secretary of Labor has established to administe the Executive order, is a procurement program manager under t Executive order.

Third. The new and different responsibilities would disrupt coord nation in Title VII and its administration would suffer, and perha most importantly, there might be serious problems of conflict in bot the area of remedies and the area of investigation.

Fourth. There is a great potential conflict in the assumption b EEOC of the Executive order program responsibility. Chairma Brown described a situation where no violation of Title VII might b found but where a violation of the Executive order would be eviden

At this time I would like to submit, and ask unanimous consent t have printed in the Record, the full testimony in regard to the transf that was made before the committee at that time.

There being no objection, the testimony was order to be printed i the Record, as follows:

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM H. BROWN III

Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the subcommittee: It is indee a pleasure to appear before you again and to present my views, as Chairman o the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, on S. 2515, a bill designed t strengthen the prohibitions against employment discrimination of Title VII, an to grant enforcement procedures to the Equal Employment Opportunity Com mission.

I am greatly encouraged by the fact that one House of the Congress has a ready acted on this matter, and I am very hopeful that the Senate too will act o his important matter as soon as is reasonably possible. It will be a great personal oy to me, and I am sure to many of you, if the Congress can finally act this year o grant the EEOC its much-needed enforcement powers.

I believe that the major provisions of this bill were contained either in S. 2453, which this Committee and the Senate acted upon during the 91st Congress, or in the original version of H.R. 1746, the Hawkins-Reid bill, which was reported earlier this year by the House Education and Labor Committee. Many of the proposed changes would have a significant effect on the Commission and its operations, and I will be glad to reiterate my views on them for the Committee.

However, before doing so, I feel that I should briefly address myself to the central question today, as it has been since Title VII went into effect in 1965. I am, of course referring to the need for granting the EEOC the strongest possible enforcement powers. In this the seventh year since historic enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, and the sixth year since the establishment of the EEOC, it is no longer possible to deny effective enforcement of one of the major provisions of the Act, the right for all people in this Nation, regardless of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin to have equal rights to jobs for which they are qualified. And it is clear, as I have stated before this Committee in prior testimony, that employment discrimination continues widespread throughout the country. One need only look to the position of minority groups in this country to confirm the insidious presence of this basic injustice.

In a special report released this year by the Bureau of the Census, The Social and Economic Status of Negroes in the United States, it is clear from the statistics presented that while Negroes have made strides toward bettering their position, the goal of social and economic equality is not yet to be seen. For example, the report shows that the median family income for Negroes in 1970 was $6,279 while the median income for whites for the same period was $10,236. This earnings gap between the races is obviously largely attributable to disparate employment policies. This conclusion is supported by statistics which show that Negroes are concentrated in the lower-paying, less prestigious positions in industry, and are largely precluded from the higher-paid more prestigious positions. For example, as cited by the Bureau's report, while Negroes constitute about 10% of the labor force, they account for only 3% of all jobs in the high-paying professional, technical and managerial positions. In the nine industries with the highest earning capabilities (printing and publishing, chemicals, primary metals, fabricated metals, non-electrical machinery, transportation equipment, air transportation, and instruments manufacture), Negroes account for only 3% of these higher-paying positions. On the other hand, in the lowest paying laborer and service worker categories, Negroes account for 24% of the total positions.

This disparity is further reinforced by the fact that the rate of unemployment for Negroes is considerably higher than the rate for whites. The figures for 1970 show that while 4.0% of white males were unemployed, the unemployment rate for whites was 5.4% while for Negroes it was 9.3%. Even in managerial and professional positions, the area with the lowest unemployment rate, Negro unemployment was 2.1% while white unemployment was 1.7%.

While the statistics on Spanish-speaking Americans are not nearly as current or as complete, available data indicates that this, the second-largest ethnic minority group in the Nation with approximately 7.5 million members, faces a similar plight. In 1969, the median family income for Spanish-speaking American families was $5,641. About 17% of these families had incomes of less than $3,000. Both male and female Spanish-speaking American workers are concentrated in the lower-paying occupations. Only 25% of employed males are in white-collar jobs compared to 41% for men of all other origins. On the other hand 58.8% of Spanish-speaking American males are concentrated in blue-collar occupations. The statistics for Spanish-speaking women workers indicate a similar distribution. Also, as with Negroes, the unemployment rate for Spanish-speaking workers is very high. In 1969, 3.0% of Spanish speaking Americans were unemployed, compared to 3.5% for the rest of the Nation.

The other major group which is subject to blatant discrimination in employment are the approximately 30 million employed women in the Nation. While these women constitute approximately 38% of the total work force they encounter most of the same discriminatory practices as are applied to employees because of race, color, religion, or national origin. This close relationship, for example, between sex and race discrimination has been the subject of increasing study in recent years. The results of these studies have shown that the similaritie between sex and race discrimination are striking. Both classifications crea large, natural classes in which membership is determined by circumstanc beyond the individual's control, and both are highly visible characteristics which it has been extremely easy to draw gross, stereotyped distinctions. As matter of fact, the historical legal position of black slaves was justified analogy to the status of women at that time, and the arguments justifying th "happy homemaker" were applied equally to the "happy slave." The prese day legacy of this kind of analogy is the persistence of an inherent belief by ma that both groups are, by definition, less equal than the rest of the Nation.

While it is true that the extreme aspects of sex-discrimination as it existed the early part of the twentieth century have now been granted the right to vo and may serve on juries, in the area of employment their status is still fa from equal. Despite a common misconception, women in the labor market do n work to enjoy some extra consumer luxuries or to provide themselves with som thing with which to pass the time. Statistics compiled by the Department Labor's Women's Bureau show that 60% of all employed women work in orde to provide primary support for themselves or to supplement the incomes of the husbands which may be inadequate for household needs. However, within esta lished occupational categories, women are paid less for doing the same jobs done by men. For example, in 1968, the latest year for which extensive data presently available, the median salary for all scientists was $13,200; for wom scientists the median salary was $10,000. Similarly, the median wage for a ful time male factory worker was $6,738 while his female counterpart could on expect to earn $3,991. This disparity becomes glaring when we see that 60% women but only 20% of men earned less than $5,000 per year, while only 3 of women but 28% of men earned $10,000 per year or more. Working wom also remain heavily concentrated in a small number of well-defined sex-stere typed occupations and their mobility to other, better paying positions is severe limited by either overt sex restrictions or by established company promoti policies which make it exceedingly difficult to move to other, better-payi positions.

This kind of disparate treatment is particularly objectionable in light of th specific prohibition in Title VII against discrimination on the basis of sex. recent years, the courts have, however, handed down a series of decisions whic have negated many of the practices used to perpetuate sex-discrimination an have made the use of sex based job classifications legally suspect. It is, howeve the primary responsibility of the EEOC to enforce all the provisions of Title VI and with the enactment of effective enforcement procedures, the Commission wi be able to effectively move against all these different areas of employment di crimination.

The pervasiveness of employment discrimination becomes all too obvious, n only from the statistics which I have mentioned above, but from the increasin caseload received by the EEOC. Since its inception in 1965, the Commission ha received 81,004 charges. This number, though large when considered by itsel becomes even more significant when we consider the fact that each year th number of charges filed with the Commission continues to increase. For exampl in FY 1970, 14,129 charges were filed with the Commission; in FY 1971, 22,92 charges were filed; and our current estimate is that during the current fisca year more than 32,000 charges will be filed. These figures indicate that the nee for effective enforcement powers for the Commission is in no way diminishe with the passage of time. If anything, the exact opposite is the case.

This need for effective enforcement powers is also reinforced when we look t the disposition of these charges. As the Committee well knows, the EEOC is a this time limited to seeking settlement of claims only through the voluntar conciliation and persuasion route. This has not proved at all satisfactory. O the 81,004 charges that I mentioned, we were only able to achieve a totally o even partially satisfactory conciliation in less than half of these cases. Thi means that in a significant number of cases, the aggrieved individual was n able to achieve any satisfactory settlement through the EEOC and was force either to give up his or her claim, or, if they had the necessary funds and time to pursue the case through the Federal courts. I submit to the Committee tha the EEOC is not without effective enforcement provisions, be any more success ful in resolving those complaints which it continues to receive than it has bee in resolving those complaints which it has received so far. We are, therefore left with the unpleasant prospect that, unless effective enforcement is enacte on, an ever-increasing number of aggrieved persons will be left without an equate remedy for violations which are clearly prohibited by existing law. This is not a healthy situation for any society. In a society such as ours, sed upon the democratic principles of equality and the rule of law, this kind a failure to provide relief becomes particularly acute. Under the present provi- ns of Title VII, not only are minorities and women locked out of effective edies by the very law which was established to once and for all end such nomic deprivation, but the very governmental process which created the law alled into question and its credibility undermined. While we have established principle that the resources of the State should be made available to an ividual for protecting his collective bargaining rights under the National bor Relations Act, we have failed repeatedly to enact the same kinds of rights individuals to protect their prerogative to a job as determined only upon stantive qualifications.

When I testified before this Subcommittee two years ago regarding the leg- ation that was actually pending before the Committee, I indicated my prefer- e for a court enforcement approach, as opposed to a cease and desist approach. e full Committee amended that bill and presented to the Senate a cease and ist mechanism embodying self-enforcing orders and temporary court enforce- nt for cases pending before the Commission at the time of passage of the Act. at was the version which ultimately passed the Senate on October 1, 1970. When I testified before the House General Subcommittee on Labor during rch of this year, that Subcommittee had before it a bill embodying cease and ist enforcement, but without the self-enforcing and temporary court enforce- nt provisions. At that time, I indicated that I still felt that court enforce- nt was preferable to the form of cease and desist in the original version of R. 1746. I also indicated to the Committee that I believed that the Hawkins- d bill could be substantially strengthened by adding the self-enforcing mecha- m and the temporary court enforcement approach. In my view, the combined ct of these two provisions would probably produce the strongest form of orcement power which could be granted to the Commission.

note, however, that S. 2515, while including the self-enforcing cease and ist orders, does not contain a provision for temporary court enforcement of ding cases. If it pleases the Committee, I would hope that you would con- er adding the temporary court enforcement provisions to the bill again this r as you did in S. 2453 last year. This type of a provision would provide us h a very valuable tool. As I testified before this Committee last year, and in my testimony before the House Committee this year, the Commission, ause of its rapidly increasing workload, has not been able to resolve all the plaints before it on a timely basis and, as of June 30, 1971, had a backlog of ost 32,000 cases. Also, as I mentioned in my testimony here in 1939, to insti- e cease and desist procedures will require a certain amount of time to estab- the new regulations under which the enforcement procedures will operate; ring examiners have to be recruited, and the Commission's internal structure to be modified. It is, therefore, important that the EEOC be given the porary court enforcement procedures to be applied to these pending cases, to those cases which may arise before the cease and desist provisions ome operational.

TRANSFER OF OFCC

s I have indicated on many occasions, both before the Congress and in public eches, the Commission desperately needs the strongest possible enforcement ers. I urge the Committee, however, to carefully consider the proposal em- ied in S. 2515 to transfer the Office of Federal Contract Compliance to the OC. Given the tremendous backlog of cases which I already mentioned, the itional work that would be required of the Commission when it gets the en- ement provisions, the difficulty the Commission has had in obtaining adequate ding, and the myriad of administrative difficulties embodied in such a transfer, not feel that it is desirable or practical to transfer the OFCC functions at time.

nder the proposal in S. 2515, the EEOC would be assuming the dual role of, the one hand, the regulatory function of processing complaints of employ- t discrimination and, on the other hand, of contract compliance enforcement. ny estimate, these two functions are not as compatible as a first glance may eate. I think, for example, that the rules and regulations which the Commis- adopts with regard to the cease and desist enforcement functions of Title would not be appropriate for enforcement of the type of functions currently under OFCC operations. Accordingly, I feel the EEOC would thereby be forc to operate under two separate and distinct sets of standards and procedu authorities.

Further, as a direct result of this dichotomy, I can foresee serious proble arising as regards to investigations, remedies, and open conflicts with provisi of Title VII. The transfer of OFCC is not the same as setting up separate burea within an administrative agency, like say, for example, in the FCC which ma tains separate bureaus and separate provisions to regulate two major differ segments of the communications industry—common carriers and broadcast While the FCC can maintain, in one agency, two separate and distinct bure for regulating the respective segments of the industry, the same ease of ope tion is not available to the EEOC under the proposed transfer. While bro casters and common carriers represent totally different companies with differ interests and separate legal entities, the companies subject to OFCC regulati are the same companies subject to Title VII jurisdiction.

I can envision numerous conflicts in cases where the same company becom subject to differing procedures from the same agency. For example, while individual may sue under Title VII to have an individual grievance redress under the provisions of the executive order the proper remedy is contract debi ment, not individual redress. Also, the differences between the two remedies w probably necessitate different burdens of proof and differing emphasis on pr ticular kinds of violations. I can readily foresee a situation where EEOC o cials responsible for the debarment procedure determine that a contractor in compliance and those responsible for Title VII investigation that a violati exists.

Similarly, conflicts exist in the area of determining when an investigation a particular company may be commenced. Under Title VII, the EEOC can i tiate an investigation only after a filing of a charge of discrimination, and t company is entitled to judicial review whenever they feel that the investig tion is unwarranted. Under the executive order provisions, contract reviews c be conducted at will and are not subjected to judicial review.

I could cite the Committee many more examples of conflicts which are bou to arise under the transfer, but I do not want to take the Committee's valua time to list all of them now. I would like to add, however, that the transfer OFCC to the Commission will not improve coordination in the administrati of Title VII as has been urged. It is my belief that the reverse would probab occur. The very nature of contract compliance and use of the government pu curement power is particularly well-suited to the operations of the Depa ment of Labor's manpower programs. This interrelationship between contra compliance and government manpower programs is a particular field of experti in which the Department has become proficient and for which it has develop the necessary technical procedures. Were the EEOC to be made responsible f enforcing contract compliance, it would be dependent upon the Departmen decisions and procedures and would probably be forced to use Departme computer facilities to administer the program.

TRANSFER OF SECTION 707 POWERS OF THE ACT

Section 5 of S. 2515 would transfer the functions of the Attorney General bring pattern or practice suits under Section 707 of Title VII to the EEOC feel that such a transfer would not, at this time, be in the best interests of t Commission and would not promote the most effective administration of Ti VII. I defer to the Justice Department to provide the Committee with speci details on the operations of the Department and further explanation of the ben fits of the program as currently administered.

I would like to suggest, however, that should the Committee determine th the transfer is necessary, the transfer of the 707 functions should not be ma subject to the Commission's administrative remedies as proposed. In S. 251 as presently written, the power of the Attorney General to bring pattern practice suits, once transferred, becomes subject to the administrative remedi provided in Section 4 of the bill. This, in effect, minimizes the effectiveness pattern or practice suits since they would become no different than any oth charges submitted to the Commission. The effectiveness of pattern or pra tice litigation is the result of the ability of the Justice Department to bri these large, far reaching, and often very complex suits directly in the court The importance of these suits has largely been the decisions which have result and which have set the precedents for subsequent lesser Title VII actions. T llify this powerful and effective means whereby the courts can interpret and rity the provisions of Title VII, while at the same time establishing new judicial ecedents applicable to other courts and administrative agencies alike, would t, in my judgment, serve to promote the most effective administration of equal ployment.

EXPANSION OF TITLE VII JURISDICTION TO INCLUDE SMALL EMPLOYERS

The expansion of the reach of Title VII to include employers with 8 to 24 em-yees would indeed be an asset to the existing law. Discrimination should be acked wherever it exists, and small establishments have frequently been the st flagrant violators.

However, since any expansion of Commission operations into new areas raises ministrative and procedural problems due to the increased paper work and seload, I would again like to suggest a gradual expansion of the jurisdiction to ow the Commission to make the necessary adjustments with a minimum of erference to existing enforcement provisions and data compilation. I would to suggest the same schedule which I proposed to this Committee in my testi-ny last year on S. 2453. That schedule was as follows:

First Year: Employers of 20 or more persons.
Second Year: Employers of 16 or more persons.
Third Year: Employers of 13 or more persons.
Fourth Year: Employers of 10 or more persons.
Fifth Year: Employers of 8 or more persons.

With this schedule, I feel that the Commission would be able to absorb the isdictional expansion, provided, of course, that the corresponding additional ff and monetary resources are also made available, while preserving organiza-nal stability and procedural integrity.

EMPLOYEES OF STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

The single largest group of employees in the nation are those employees who employed by State, county and local governments. The latest statistics indi-e that there are approximately 10.1 million such employees, and yet this rep-ents the only large group of employers in the nation whose racial employ-nt practices are almost entirely exempt from any non-discrimination require-nts, except the general prohibition contained in the Fourteenth Amendment ch, as I'm sure the Committee is well aware, prohibits discrimination by te and local authority. Yet Title VII presently exempts State and local em-yees from its coverage and thereby, paradoxically, withholds a Federal pro-ion from these employees to whom the government owes a constitutional ob-tion, while granting it to employees in the private sector, to whom there is comparable constitutional duty. It seems to me that this unreasonable action uld not be allowed to continue. Accordingly, I strongly urge the Committee adopt the provision of S. 2515 which extends the coverage of Title VII to this s of employees.

Discrimination in State and local employment is as blatant and as widespread in any section of private business. In a report released in 1969, For All the ple . . . By All the People, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights examined the loyment policies of State and local government agencies and concluded that: The basic finding of this report is that State and local governments have ed to fulfill their obligation to assure equal job opportunity. . . . Not only do te and local governments consciously and overtly discriminate in hiring and moting minority group members, but they do not foster positive programs to l with discriminatory treatment on the job."

his failure of State and local agencies to accord equal employment to their loyees is particularly distressing in light of the importance that these agen-play in the daily lives of the local communities. From local law enforcement ocial services, each citizen in a community comes in constant contact with ny local agencies. The importance of equal rights in these agencies is, there-, self-evident. In our democratic society, participatory government is a cor-stone of good government; discrimination by government, therefore, serves a bly destructive service. The exclusion of minorities from effective participa-in the bureaucracy not only promotes ignorance of minority problems in that ticular community or political subdivision, but also creates mistrust, aliena-, and occasionally hostility toward the entire process of government.

The Fourteenth Amendment not only promised, but guaranteed equal tr ment to all citizens of States and their political subdivisions. Unfortunately, often the last sentence of that Amendment, enabling Congress to enforce article's guarantees "by appropriate legislation," is overlooked and the p meaning of the Constitution allowed to lapse. We now have before us the propriate legislation," and any further delay in insuring adequate protection this vital area of employment should be avoided.

The EEOC and its enabling legislation in Title VII provide the existing chinery for realization of the guarantees of the Fourteenth Amendment. T mechanism will become even more significant with the enactment of the requi enforcement powers so that the defect of Title VII is cured. I would add, h ever, that the necessary funding and personnel must also be granted to make administration of this provision effective.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Equal job opportunity in the Federal Service is of the highest importance un our system of participatory government. The Federal Government, as the m powerful and most extensive bureaucracy in the nation, has an affirmat obligation to keep its "own house in order" while requiring the same degree compliance with national objectives from other sectors.

Presently the equal employment responsibility of the Federal Service is loca in the Civil Service Commission under the provisions of Executive Orders 112 issued in 1965, and 11478, issued in 1969. These two orders have established c prehensive coverage of equal employment in every area of the government. T policy, as stated in Section 2 of Order 11478, clearly provides for a continu emphasis on equal employment in all areas of government service:

"The head of each executive department and agency shall establish and ma tain an affirmative program of equal employment opportunity for all civili employees and applicants for employment within his jurisdiction in accorda with the policy set forth in Section 1. It is the responsibility of each departm and agency head, to the maximum extent possible, to provide sufficient resour to administer such a program in a positive and effective manner; assure t recruitment activities reach all sources of job candidates; utilize to the full extent the present skills of each employee; provide the maximum feasible opp tunity to employees to enhance their skills so that they may perform at th highest potential and advance in accordance with their abilities; provide tra ing and advice to managers and supervisors to assure their understanding a implementation of the policy expressed in this Order; assure participation the local level with other employers, schools, and public or private groups cooperative efforts to improve community conditions which affects employabil and provide for a system within the department or agency for periodica evaluating the effectiveness with which the policy of this Order is being carri out."

Although I will defer explanation of the specific programs that are adm istered by the Civil Service Commission to carry out the provisions of the afo mentioned section to officials of that Commission, I can see no benefit deriv from a transfer of those functions to the EEOC at this time. Particularly light of the many other administrative burdens that will be placed on the EE by S. 2515, I feel that the transfer would unnecessarily overburden these adm istrative functions which the EEOC will have to assume. It would, in effe only transfer the responsibility from one administrative agency to another.

INDIVIDUAL RIGHT TO SUE

Before closing I would like to comment on a very important provision S. 2515. I am, of course, referring to the private right of action which has be retained in the bill. Individual initiative, though costly and not the preferab form of enforcement, has historically furnished the major impetus for progre in the field of civil rights. It is, in the same manner, indispensable as a co plementary tool in building an effective body of Title VII Law.

This is as true in the area of equal employment as it has been in the areas school and housing desegregation.

Similarly, access to the judiciary should not be reduced to a parens patri type of right accessible only by the government acting on behalf on an aggriev individual. Every individual deserves his day in court whether an administrati agency thinks his cause is just or not. Particularly in the area of a violati volving civil rights, the causes should be attacked wherever and in any nner they can. The Congress, which has set the national goal of equal ployment should not place itself in a position where it begins to restrict e means that an individual has at his disposal to gain satisfaction of a lation of his civil rights.

I would again like to urge the Committee, as I have done here and in the House Representatives on other occasions, to remedy the defects of Title VII as soon possible, and to grant the EEOC the most effective enforcement powers pos-le so that the promises made in 1964 can become realities in 1971.

I wish to thank the Committee for its time in allowing me to present my views this vital subject. I will be willing to answer any questions that the Com-ttee may have.

Mr. SAXBE. The Office of Federal Contract Compliance, under the rection of the Secretary of Labor, has made important progress in e development of a self-propelled, result-oriented equal employment portunity program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. SAXBE. I yield myself 1 minute.

It would be a tragedy to interrupt this progress by transferring this ogram to an agency unprepared to continue it. The EEOC will have hands full setting up its new procedures to handle its newly granted se-and-desist powers.

I, therefore, urge that the amendment be adopted so that Senate bill 15 will truly advance the cause of civil rights.

I have, I believe, pointed out the basic reasons why EEOC does not nt this transfer. Primarily—and this is supported by a number of il rights leaders—that agency believes that progress has been made ler the present contract compliance, and that this progress will be errupted if the transfer is made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, the ie for the quorum call to be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The rk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that request so an have a minute's time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum call is in progress.

Mr. SAXBE. Is the Senator opposed to or for the amendment?

Mr. JAVITS. I will get time from the Senator from New Jersey.

The roll call was resumed.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield 2 minutes?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I have expressed grave reservations ut the transfer, and I am now in the process of coming to a deter-nation as to what to do about this very vexing matter. In the mean-e, in order to help Senators who may be similarly troubled by the ciencies as well as the attractions of the proposed transfer, I would to submit for the Record, and ask unanimous consent to have uded in the Record, a letter addressed to me, which I think Mem-s of the Senate should have, and both the manager of the bill and the proponent of the amendment, from the Secretary of La in which he wishes us to believe that his recent action to shift Rich Grunewald to the position of Assistant Secretary for Employm Standards was a calculated move to really shake up the OFCC to see to it that its management be made more aggresive than it been, which implies that whatever other shifts are necessary in p sonnel will be made in order to give it backbone, and is undertaken the Secretary to have that effect.

For whatever effect it may have, I believe each Member of Senate should have that letter available to him, and I have as unanimous consent that it be printed in the Record as a part of remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in Record, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
Washington, D.C., January 25, 197

HON. JACOB K. JAVITS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JAVITS: The Senate this week resumed its consideration S. 2515, the Equal Employment Opportunities Act. I am taking this opportunity register my strong support for Senator Saxbe's amendment which deletes t language in Section 10 of the Bill transferring the Office of Federal Contr Compliance from the Department of Labor to the EEOC. I firmly believe t the transfer of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance would be a ma setback to equal employment opportunity efforts.

I urge you to consider very carefully the impact which the passage of S tion 10 of S. 2515 would have upon the thousands of men and women in nation who benefit from affirmative action programs designed to remedy crimination in employment.

Last October 4, Under Secretary Laurence Silberman stated before t Subcommittee on Labor, "I firmly believe that the contract compliance progr is, at long last, well on the road. We all recognize, however, that much rema to be done before the goal of equal employment opportunity is achieved. T program is clearly capable of improvement, and the Department of Labor w continue to strive to improve the quality and magnitude of our efforts."

We know full well that a successful OFCC compliance program requi aggressive and imaginative leadership. My recent action to shift Richard Gru wald to the position of Assistant Secretary for Employment Standards wa calculated move to assure that sound management principles be applied to t operation of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance.

Grunewald's years of experience in management, along with his personal r ord in Urban Affairs designed to better the living and working conditions minority citizens constitute the necessary background for "getting the job do in the compliance field.

I am confident that he and a competent and aggressive OFCC manageme team will build on the improving record of compliance efforts initiated by t department.

Sincerely,

J. D. HODGSON,
Secretary of Labor

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a questio

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will that be his only assignment?

Mr. JAVITS. No, he has other assignments. If the Senator w be kind enough to read the letter, he will see that he makes so pretty strong promises on what he proposes to do.

I yield back my time.

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, t time to be equally divided.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered. The erk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. Saxbe. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order r the quorum call be rescinded.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Saxbe. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New York ch time as he may require.

Mr. Javits. Just 1 minute.

Mr. President, again to help Senators decide how they vote, I in- nd—because of the parliamentary situation I cannot do it now—if e Saxbe amendment is acted on and it should succeed, to propose an nendment to establish an Equal Opportunity Coordination Council be composed of Secretary of Labor, the Chairman of the Equal nployment Opportunity Commission, the Attorney General, and e Chairman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission.

I hope that that will result in meeting what seems to be the main mplaint, that is, that it will coordinate the activities of the various dies concerned, and I shall offer it for that purpose. For the infor- ation of Senators, the amendment will be at the desk.

I thank my colleague.

Mr. Saxbe. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, the ne to be equally divided.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered. The rk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. Saxbe. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order r the quorum call be rescinded.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Saxbe. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The Presiding Officer. The Senator has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. Saxbe. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. Percy. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment fered by Senator Saxbe to delete section 10 from S. 2515, because my enduring commitment to the cause of civil rights.

Section 10 would cut the equal employment program for Govern- nt contractors by transferring the Secretary of Labor's respon- ilities under Executive Order 11246 to the Equal Employment pportunity Commission.

Administration of the Executive order program by the Depart- nt of Labor facilitates coordination with other complementary ograms which are vitally important to the success of the Executive der.

The availability of manpower training assistance has been critical the accomplishments of the Executive order program, particularly regards the construction industry. Very often an employer will not in a position to undertake a necessary "affirmative action" program insure equal employment opportunity unless there exists an ade- ate pool of trained applicants. Close coordination between Federal npower and equal employment opportunity programs by Govern- nt contractors is essential. Both of these programs are now centered the Department of Labor.

During the past 2 years, the resources of the Manpower Adminis- tion have been focused with increasing effectiveness in assisting equal employment opportunity programs involving Government co tractors. At the direction of the Secretary of Labor, the Manpow Administration and the Office of Federal Contract Compliance—t agency within the Department of Labor to which the Secretary h delegated his responsibilities under the Executive order—have be working closely together so that their activities and special expert will complement one another in the development of meaningful affir ative action programs. The coexistence of the OFCC and the Ma power Administration—including the U.S. Training and Emplo ment Service and the Office of National Projects—within the Lab Department makes program coordination and direction more efficie and responsive. To split the equal employment opportunity progra from the Manpower Administration would impair coordination a imperil a program whose value is inestimable.

The Executive order program has also drawn upon the expert of the Labor-Management Services Administration within the D partment of Labor. This expertise—and the unique understanding the Department of Labor as to questions that arise in the context labor-management laws and collective bargaining agreements—h contributed significantly to the solution of some of the difficult pro lems of bringing together employers, unions, and representatives the minority community in a common effort.

Other programs within the Department of Labor also impinge those of the OFCC and it is important to the success of its mission th the OFCC's program remain in close proximity to them. For examp the OFCC deals primarily with inspection and enforcement of wor place standards. Thus, the OFCC program is similar to such oth workplace standards programs administered by the Labor Departme as minimum wage, maximum hours, safety and health, age and equ pay programs. Of course, all these labor standards programs are i timately connected with labor and management as well as on collecti bargaining contracts.

I urge, therefore, that the amendment of my esteemed colleag from the State of Ohio be adopted. Due to the coordination of the multifaceted and related programs within the Department of Labo significant progress has been made in the employment of minoriti and women. It would be a grievous setback to the equal employme opportunity program for Government contractors if the Office of Fe eral Contract Compliance were to be served from these other progra which are vital to its success.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in t Record a brief summation of the important reasons for retaining t OFCC in the Department of Labor and a discussion of the maj achievements of that office.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be print
in the Record, as follows:

SUMMARY ON RETAINING OFCC IN THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

THE OFCC CONTRACT COMPLIANCE PROGRAM IS UNPARALLELED IN THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FIELD

A. The need for affirmative action was first recognized by then Vice Presid Nixon in 1953 as Chairman of the President's Committee on Government C tracts who observed that "overt discrimination" was not the principle obsta to achieving equal generation of citizens.

The affirmative action concept was adopted by President John F. Kennedy in 961 (E. O. 10925) and has since been reaffirmed by Presidents Johnson (E. O. 1246) and Nixon (41 C.F.R. 60–2, etc.).

B. The OFCC's affirmative action programs require that 260,000 government ntractors in all industries adopt positive programs to seek out minorities and omen for new employment opportunities.

The OFCC has utilized the proven technique of establishing "goals and time- bles" to ensure the success of the Executive Order program.

The "goals and timetables" approach, which is unique to the OFCC's efforts in EO, coupled with extensive reporting and monitoring procedures has given the romise of EEO a new credibility.

C. Affirmative action means that all Government contractors must develop rograms to ensure that all share equally in the jobs generated by the Federal overnment's spending. Proof of overt discrimination is not required. The suc- ss of the OFCC's affirmative action program requirement is evident among the ation's leading industries.

As a result of OFCC requirements for construction industry, 46 voluntary and posed plans have been created to bring more than 30,000 minority workers to the skilled construction trades.

Special efforts in the textile industry resulted in an increase of minority em- yment rate from 12.8 percent in 1968 to 18.4 percent of the total 1971.

In education, 101 monitored universities had established a goal of 10,784 new es for minorities and women and actually hired 17,889.

The 2,400 largest banks covered by the Executive Order increased minority ployment from 8 percent in 1966 to 14 percent in 1970.

E OFCC MISSION TO INSURE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY CAN BE ADEQUATELY PERFORMED ONLY WITHIN THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH —AND WITHIN THAT BRANCH, THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR IS CLEARLY THE MOST APPROPRIATE AGENCY TO FUR- THER THAT MISSION

A. To be effective the contract compliance program must be an integral part the procurement process. The process of procuring goods and services is culiarly a function of the Executive Branch.

B. Equal employment opportunity is a workplace standard—the Department Labor is the Government's expert administrator of workplace standards. Occupational training programs are the keys to successful employment and Department's Manpower Administration plays a critical role in the imple- ntation of the Executive Order program.

The Department has been a leader in developing programs designed to assist men in the work force—witness the Department's vigorous enforcement of the ual Pay Act and the functioning of the Women's Bureau within the Depart- nt. Cooperation between OFCC and the Women's Bureau was an essential ject of OFCC's recent order to contractors requiring development of goals for w hire and upgrading opportunities for women.

Cabinet level direction by the Secretary of Labor has achieved the vital pro- am coordination necessary to program success.

The OFCC is funded and staffed through the Department of Labor and may aw upon the full range of staff and resources of a cabinet agency.

E PROPOSED TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS UNDER EXECUTIVE ORDER 11246 FROM THE OFCC TO THE EEOC WOULD JEOPARDIZE THE CONTRACT COMPLIANCE PROGRAM

A. The EEOC is ill-equipped to assume the responsibilities for the implementa- n of the Executive Order program. Chairman Brown of the EEOC has stated t the assumption of Executive Order responsibilities by the EEOC is adminis- tively impracticable.[1] He has given four reasons:

. An ever increasing number of cases pending before the EEOC which has eady resulted in a two-year backlog.

. The incompatability of agency functions: EEOC is a regulatory agency ler Title VII—OFCC is a procurement program manager under the Executive ler.

. New and different responsibilities would disrupt coordination in Title VII l its administration would suffer, and perhaps most importantly there might be serious problems of conflict in both the area of remedies and the area of investigation.

4. There is a great potential conflict in the assumption by EEOC of the Executive Order program responsibility. Chairman Brown described a situation where no violation of Title VII might be found but where a violation of the contract compliance standards would be evident.

B. The affirmative action concept as innovatively and successfully employed by the OFCC has been challenged as a violation of Title VII—the courts have responded by stating that the Executive Order program is independent of Title VII and not subject to some of its more restrictive provisions.

The proposed bill would place the entire Executive Order program under Title VII and might well result in renewed challenges to the many important programs established thereunder—e.g., the "Philadelphia Plan."

C. The proposed bill would endanger the survival of the contract compliance program by making its resources dependent upon the EEOC—an independent hybrid agency with limited manpower and economic resources.

OFCC HAS ADMINISTERED A RESULT-ORIENTED, HIGHLY PROGRESSIVE AND SUCCESSFUL PROGRAM

A. Chronology of Recent Major Administrative and Management Achievements

1. The Philadelphia Plan imposed on September 22, 1969, and followed by imposed plans in Washington, Atlanta, San Francisco, and St. Louis, set forth definite affirmative action standards for construction.

2. Compliance responsibility for individual contracts revised on October 24, 1969. Compliance responsibility divided among 15 agencies on the basis of standard industrial classification codes.

3. Order No. 4, first promulgated on February 5, 1970, defined in specific terms the affirmative action obligations of non-construction contractors.

4. Minimum standards for voluntary area-wide construction plans were issued on February 9, 1970, and have been implemented in approximately 40 cities throughout the country by the development of "hometown" plans in those areas.

5. Sex discrimination guidelines issued on June 2, 1970.

6. A policy statement on religious and national origin discrimination issued on May 20, 1971.

7. On June 7, 1971, precise standards for the conduct of construction compliance review were sent to the agencies.

8. A new testing order was issued on October 2, 1971.

9. Order No. 4, was substantially revised on December 1, 1971, to provide inter alia, for the development of affirmative action programs to deal specifically with the problem of sex discrimination.

10. Specific religious and national origin guidelines published in the Federal Register on December 29, 1971.

11. Bid Conditions incorporating "hometown" solutions to minority under utilization in construction crafts continue to be issued. In excess of twenty sets of Bid Conditions have been issued.

12. New reporting procedures for agencies and contractors are now being devised to facilitate program management.

13. OFCC has developed a program budget system which unifies the entire contract compliance program for budgetary purposes. OFCC reviews the agencies' budget estimates in light of anticipated requirements and projected workloads and recommends budget levels for each agency. It then works closely with OMB throughout the budget cycle.

14. A target selection system under which nationwide minority employment and promotional opportunities are estimated for purposes of scheduling enforcement activity, projecting agency workloads, and evaluating program efforts has been implemented by OFCC.

15. Agencies are now required to report their compliance activities, including the initiation of reviews made, affirmative action programs accepted, and show-cause notices issued, to OFCC on a quarterly basis.

16. Systems for reporting minority man-hours worked on construction sites covered by imposed and voluntary plans have been devised and recently issued.

17. Final Draft of Compliance Officer's Manual in clearance—printing arrangements underway.

18. Target city selection programs, to assist contracting agencies to direct their resources toward areas with special problems (or where large numbers o achievable opportunities exist for members, minority groups and women) has been developed and is already underway.

19. OFCC is cooperating with the Manpower Administration in a National Planning Association study to develop a system for projecting employment, and upgrading opportunities generated by Government contracts.

B. OFCC's Progress in Administering the Executive Order is Apparent from the Following Data which also Highlights the Direct Correlation between Compliance Activity and the Funding Provided for the Contract Compliance Program.

	Compliance reviews conducted	Budget
Fiscal year:
1969	7,000	$10,600
1970	8,000	11,600
1971	31,265	16,045
1972	44,203	24,226

During FY '71, the 31,265 compliance reviews conducted included on-site reviews of contractors with a total employment of over 14 million persons. These contractors have committed themselves to goals for approximately 280,000 minority hires and promotions.

If, as a result of an on-site compliance review, a contractor's affirmative action program is found to be unacceptable, a notice to show why sanctions should not be instituted is issued. The following table sets forth the number of show cause notices issued by each compliance agency through September 1971, and indicates how many notices were issued against construction contractors.

Agency	Total	Construction
Department of Defense	109	13
Department of Commerce	2	0
Veterans' Administration	0	0
Small Business Administration	8	8
Department of Health, Education, and Welfare	120	97
Postal Service	0	0
Department of Interior	1	0
Agency for International Development	1	1
Department of Agriculture	21	0
General Services Administration	90	43
Environmental Protection Agency	0	0
Atomic Energy Commission	7	0
Department of Housing and Urban Development	253	253
Department of Transportation	33	29
Treasury Department	0	0
National Aeronautics and Space Administration	4	4
Total	649	448

The import of these figures becomes clear when one considers that from the inception of the Executive Order Program thru August 1970, only 15 contractors had been sent thirty-day notices to show cause why sanctions should not be imposed.

C. There Has Been an Increased Readiness on the Part of the Agencies to Resort to Formal Proceedings as a Means of Assuring Compliance Although Most Contractors in Receipt of a Show Cause Notice Choose to Come into Compliance.

1. The Matter of Edgely Air Products, Inc., HEW Dkt. No. CC–71, resulted in a decision by the Secretary of HEW holding that the contractor had failed to make good faith efforts to meet its goal under the Philadelphia Plan and terminating the contract in question and debarring the contractor from the award of future Federal contracts and subcontracts.

2. The Matter of ARO, Inc., OFCC Dkt. No. 71–100, resulted in a decision by the Secretary of Labor ordering the adoption of a specific seniority remedy.

3. The contractors performing on construction contracts in the Philadelphia area have been served with formal notices of HUD's intent to terminate their contracts and debar them from future contract awards on October 15, 1971; they were afforded ten days in which to request a formal hearing. The two contractors involved are Randeb, Inc., and Russell Associates, both identified as "persiste violators" of the Philadelphia Plan. Randeb defaulted in appearing at the he ing which it requested and formal hearings are scheduled to begin in late Ja ary regarding the compliance of Russell Associates.

4. Additionally, the Director OFCC has assumed jurisdiction in two cases volving possible violations of the Executive Order; in one case involving air carrier, a compliance review was begun on January 3, 1972. The oth matter is currently being investigated.

5. Investigations are also being conducted by the OFCC in several cases arisi under the Philadelphia and Washington Plans, Order No. 4 and the Execut Order Program generally. The contractors involved include a major steel fab cator, an elevator constructor and contractors in both the railroad and airli industries.

D. These Activities on the Part of OFCC and the Contracting Agencies Co plement the Important Preaward Program for Obtaining Compliance.

1. The compliance postures of prospective contractors are evaluated pri to award and a determination made whether they are capable of complying wi the Executive Order. A prospective contractor having an inadequate affirmati action program is categorically unable to comply and is in danger of being d clared nonresponsible under Order No. 4. OFCC's use of the preaward mechanis apart from the use of this devise by the agencies, has resulted in the tempora suspension of many billions of dollars in contract awards pending the submi sion of acceptable affirmative action program and a large number of the mo far-reaching commitments for compliance have been obtained in this fashion.

2. No fewer than thirty-six preaward notices have been issued by OFCC again firms with poor compliance postures.

E. Preaward and Post-Award Conciliation Efforts on the Part of OFCC a the Contracting Agencies Backed by the Awesome Contract Suspension, Te mination and Debarment Powers, Have Been Successful in obtaining Full Co pliance with the Executive Order.

The following cases in which OFCC was the moving party are illustrative those dealth with in the contract compliance program.

1. Integration of company-owned housing (3 cases).

2. Elimination of discriminatory seniority systems to allow competition f promotion, layoff and recall by minority employees on the basis of their full co pany seniority (12 cases).

3. Elimination of discriminatory qualification criteria, such as tests, educati and experience requirements (8 cases).

4. Elimination of direct recruitment, hiring or promotional discrimination (cases).

F. In Cases Based Upon a Failure to Take Affirmative Action Rather than Finding of Discrimination, OFCC Required the Establishment of Goals and Tim tables for All Job Classifications Which Resulted in a Sharp Increase in Minorit Employment Opportunities.

1. OFCC completed negotiations with a large aircraft manufacturer in Januar 1971. Since that time, the contractor has employed 2,396 new employees, of whe 636 were minority group members. This 26.5 percent minority hiring rate exceede the goals and timetables established during negotiations.

2. A prominent brewing company, maintaining eight facilities across th country, committed itself to goals requiring a 35 percent minority hiring ra following conciliation with OFCC on February 11, 1971. These goals are bein met by all facilities, and the contractor is ahead of his timetable for thei achievement.

3. A multi-purpose corporation entered into a national agreement with OFC covering over 200 separate facilities. During the year ending October 1, 197 the ratio of minority to total hires at virtually all establishments is equivale to the percentage of minorities in the population within commuting distance each facility.

4. After committing itself to an affirmative action program containing goals an timetables, a large shipbuilder increased its minority employment from 11.8 pe cent to 17.7 percent over a 2.5 year period. A large percentage of this growt occurred in white collar jobs: The employment of black males in white colla jobs rose from 3.2 to 6.1 percent, while the employment of black females in thes jobs rose to 15.4 from 5.3 percent.

G. These Examples of Large Cases, Processed to a Successful Conclusion wit OFCC's Assistance, Do Not Represent OFCC's Total Effort Let Along the Routine But More Important Activities of the Compliance Agencies.

The Defense Department's Los Angeles Region recently completed reviews of 79 contractors who had submitted affirmative action plans during 1970. All of hese 279 contractors were meeting their goals and timetables. Since January 1, 971, they have employed a total of 26,131 persons, of whom 6,049 were minority roup members (2,401 blacks, 3,034 Spanish-Americans, and 614 orientals).

H. The Continued Success of this Program is assured by the Augmentation f OFCC's Capabilities by OMB.

1. OFCC will have a staff of 119 in FY '72, as compared to 26 in FY '69, about 500 percent increase.

2. It will develop a capability of handling over 400 conciliations and 25 hearings er year itself.

3. It will be amply equipped to monitor effectively the programs of the com- liance agencies, and its Operations Office will provide close communications ith, and technical assistance to, the compliance agencies.

4. In FY '72, the total compliance program will involve 1,504 individuals and a rojected expenditure of $24,000,000—a dramatic increase of more than 200 per- nt over the 643 individuals and $9,766,000 committed to the program in FY '70.

5. The 1971–72 compliance program has set targets of 580,000 new minority res and promotions by Government contractors and subcontractors.

6. The reorganization recently effected within the Department of Labor will ve a direct and beneficial impact upon the OFCC in its administration of the xecutive Program.

THE PURPOSE AND EFFECT OF THE OFCC'S PROGRAM HAS BEEN TO PROMOTE CIVIL RIGHTS AND EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

The purpose and effect of the OFCC's program has been to promote civil rights d equal employment opportunities. Because of the many successes which the FCC has had in the implementation of the Executive Order Program, it is parent that the transfer of its functions and responsibilities to the EEOC ould be detrimental to the cause of civil rights.

From an administrative, management and legal standpoint, persons concerned th the cause of civil rights should show great pause and reluctance in voting the proposed Section 715, of S. 2515 and its contemplated transfer of OFCC nctions to the EEOC. Even one of the strongest advocates of civil rights, Con- esswoman Shirley Chisholm, has stated:

"We must recognize this move to put the functions of OFCC under EEOC for hat it is: a building trades amendment which was generated by their outrage er the Philadelphia Plan." National Journal, November 13, 1971, at 2251.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Brock). All time has now expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from nio (Mr. Saxbe).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk ll call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. Chiles (after having voted in the affirmative). On this vote have a pair with the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. umphrey). If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay." If were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea." I withdraw my vote.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from vada (Mr. Cannon), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson), e Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), the Senator from inois (Mr. Stevenson), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Pell), e Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Pastore), the Senator from aine (Mr. Muskie), and the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Hum- rey) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from ode Island (Mr. Pastore), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. ll), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson), the Senator from inois (Mr. Stevenson), and the Senator from Washington (Mr. agnuson) would each vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from New York (M Buckley) is absent on official business.

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater) is absent by lea of the Senate.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Mundt) is absent becau of illness.

The Senators from Colorado (Mr. Allott and Mr. Dominick) a necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 37, as follows:

So Mr. Saxbe's amendment was agreed to.

* * * * * * *

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for Ameri can workers.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and sk that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further ading of the amendment be dispensed with. I will explain the mendment, and I would appreciate it if the clerk would return the mendment to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Saxbe). Without objection, it is so rdered. The amendment will be printed in the Record.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 61, after line 23 add the following:

SEC. 715. There shall be established an Equal Employment Opportunity Coordinating Council (hereinafter referred to in this paragraph as the Council) mposed of the Secretary of Labor, the Chairman of the Equal Employment pportunity Commission, and the Attorney General, and the Chairman of the nited States Civil Rights Commission, or their respective delegates. The uncil shall have the responsibility for developing and implementing agreeents, policies and practices designed to maximize effort, promote efficiency, d eliminate conflict, competition, duplication and inconsistency among the erations, functions and jurisdictions of the various departments, agencies d branches of the Federal government responsible for the implementation and forcement of equal employment opportunity legislation, orders, and policies. r or before July 1 of each year, the Council shall transmit to the President d to the Congress a report of its activities, together with such recommendations legislative or administrative changes as it concludes are desirable to further omote the purposes of this section.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is not under control unless the nator wants to make an agreement for control.

Mr. JAVITS. I shall only take a few minutes. I do not think it is cessary for a control of time.

Mr. President, this amendment proposes to establish an Equal nployment Opportunity Coordinating Council composed of the cretary of Labor, the Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportnity Commission, the Attorney General of the United States, and e Chairman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission, or their respective delegates. The Council will have the responsibility of deloping and implementing agreements, policies, and practices deigned to maximize the efficiency and effectiveness of the whole equal nployment opportunity program of the Federal Government, inuding, of course, the program covering Federal contractors under xecutive Order 11246.

On or before July 1 of each year, the Council is required to report the President and to the Congress.

Mr. President, when we were debating the amendment which was st agreed to, I said that I would submit an amendment. It seemed me to be a balance of equity. I voted for the Saxbe amendment with-t any particular joy in my heart. I know how deeply how many ople, including the civil rights organizations, felt about the trans- of OFCC, and I am all for the bill, as is well known. However, this particular situation, I felt that the backlog was such that in rency to my own argument that cease and desist was necessary break the backlog, I should not add to it. This is a totally new reonsibility and would add to it. Therefore, as we can make this transfer at any time. I felt that in sustaining that point of view a in sustaining my own feeling——

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, may we have ord in the Chamber?

The Presiding Officer. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. Javits. Therefore, since we can make this transfer at any tim
I felt that in sustaining that point of view and in sustaining my ow feelings about the so-called Philadelphia plan, for which I fought a bled successfully on this floor, I felt consistently that we had to lea this particular office at this time where it was. But it was a legitima point made by Father Hesburgh in the testimony and report whi the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) so very properly call to our attention, that there is an inadequacy of coordination betwe this effort and the efforts of the Equal Employment Opportunity Co mission. And in view of the fact that the Chairman of the Civil Righ Commission himself made this point, I thought that the best way handle it if the amendment succeeded, as it has, was to create so kind of high-level agency, not in a money sense or an institutional sen but as a body to ride herd on this particular proposition.

So I announced during the debate on the amendment of the Senat from Ohio (Mr. Saxbe) that I would make this proposal. I hope ver much that under the circumstances of the amendment having bee adopted it will be found acceptable to both sides. I do not feel that is an oppositional thing at all; I think it will help both sides to de with the situation.

Finally, all of us are, I think, agreed on the question whether th administration of this particular office by the Department of Labo has left very much to be desired. The Secretary of Labor himse recognizes that. I read into the Record the letter which he wrote me, in which he proposes really to shake up this whole office. I thin that may have been a matter of influence in respect of how Senato voted. I believe that the office of a high-level council, accountable the country, will give us a greater sense of assurance that the def ciencies which the office has admittedly had may be more likely to b corrected by the composition of the Council, because of the equal voi of the Secretary of Labor, in whose office it now is, as well as of th coordinating functions of the Chairman of the Equal Employmen Opportunity Commission and the corrective functions of the Attorne General and of the Chairman of the U.S. Civil Rights Commissio who did recommend the transfer.

For all these reasons, I hope very much that the amendment, in vie of the adoption of the previous amendment, will be adopted with th consent of both sides; I yield the floor.

Mr. Randolph. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. Javits. I yield.

Mr. Randolph. As I understand, the able Senator from New Yor is saying, in essence, that in no wise would this be a competitive ap proach; it would be an approach of coordination, with certain func tions allotted to the several agencies mentioned.

Mr. Javits. I would take the first statement completely—that it in no wise a competitive approach; it is a question of coordination. I is not even an allotment of functions. The functions will stay with th office in the Department of Labor. But at least we will have the securit knowing, first, that it is effectively tied into the Equal Employment pportunity Commission; and second, that someone on a high level ll be riding herd, to see to it that the office is really effective where is.

Mr. Randolph. I think the purpose of the amendment is excellent.
one who supported the Saxbe amendment, I certainly intended to pport the effort of the distinguished Senator from New York.
It is critical that employers be in a position to rely on a coordinated vernment position on all matters, not the least of which is equal ployment opportunity. It is just as vital to employees who feel that y have been subjected to discriminatory employment practices that relevant agencies of government coordinate their efforts. It is also ar that the Government's effectiveness can be improved significantly. elieve the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from w York (Mr. Javits) will help achieve these objectives.

Ir. Javits. I thank the Senator from West Virginia very much. I e the amendment will be accepted, because I think it is almost ically dictated by what we have previously done.

Ir. Williams. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York ld?

Ir. Javits. I yield.

Ir. Williams. The amendment would create an Equal Employment portunity Coordinating Council made up of the Secretary of La-
, the Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commisn, the Attorney General, and the Chairman of the U.S. Civil Rights mmission.

Ir. Javits. The Senator is correct.

Ir. Williams. Or their respective delegates.

Ir. Javits. The Senator is correct.

Ir. Williams. I merely wanted to inquire about the term "their pective delegates." I am wondering whether we should name the ncy or department and require that a delegate be the representa-of the office. The delegation at this point somewhat disturbs me. ave the feeling, frankly, that I would rather not see someone out-of the Civil Rights Commission be the delegate of the Chairman he U.S. Civil Rights Commission.

Ir. Javits. There are no hidden motives in the amendment. I would as soon strike that part. My purpose was to use my best recollec-n, because I had to write the amendment rather quickly. I had no portunity to use what we consider "boilerplate." If the Senator's stant or mine can give us the usual "boilerplate" in this regard, I uld be glad to use it. There is no desire to add another dimension he amendment. We do not do it in other cases of high level inter-artmental committees.

The amendment will be in conference, and the Senator from New sey and I will be conferees. My suggestion is that we work out there atever is agreeable and convenient to the officials concerned. The pose and intent of the amendment is to have attendance at the hest level. Unless the officials object very seriously, it would be with me if they are required to attend.

am just concerned about doing this in the first instance, as I just not know. But I would assure the Senator that I will join with in conference in making it entirely agreeable to the officials. If y are willing, we will strike out the reference to any delegation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, the Senator from New York has put finger on my concern. It should be focused at the highest level.

Mr. JAVITS. I thoroughly agree, and I will join with the Senator doing whatever is necessary for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. JAVITS. I am ready to yield back my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

Mr. EASTLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Mississip a question? I shall not take more than 2 minutes.

Does the Senator from Mississippi desire the yeas and nays? Th will be fine with me, although I do not think there is any real disagre ment. I am willing to let the question be decided on a voice vote.

Mr. EASTLAND. I simply wanted to be recorded as voting "No."

Mr. JAVITS. Then, I think, the Senator is so recorded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amen ment of the Senator from New York (putting the question).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by whi the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERCY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAVITS). Is there objection? The Cha hears none. The motion to reconsider is in order, and the Senat from West Virginia has moved to table that motion. The question on agreeing to the motion to table (putting the question).

The ayes appear to have it; the ayes have it, and the motion to tab is agreed to.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, why was unanimous co sent needed to enable the distinguished Senator from Ohio to move reconsider the vote on this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it was n needed.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, in support of the pre dents, I should like, with the Chair's help, to clarify that matter: it my understanding that only if another amendment to the pending b is before the Senate at the time is unanimous consent required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is corre and that is the rule.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I thank the Chair.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, apparently the amendment which I pro-sed, and which was adopted, requires a technical correction, in that section to which it had reference had been stricken by the Saxbe endment, and my amendment did not refer to that.

I ask unanimous consent that, preceding the action on the amend-nt which I have just had adopted, the following words be inserted:

AMENDMENT NO. 597

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 597.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read amendment No. 597.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further ding of the amendment be omitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I modify my amendment so that it will d as follows:

On page 61, after line 23, insert the following new section:

EC. 10. No Government contract, or portion thereof, with any employer, shall lenied, withheld, terminated, or superseded, by any agency or officer of the ed States under any equal employment opportunity law or order, where such loyer has an affirmative action plan which has previously been accepted by Government, without first according such employer full hearing and adjudi-on under the provisions of 5 U.S.C. section 554 and the following pertinent ion: Provided, however, That if such employer shall deviate substantially n such previously agreed to affirmative action plan, this section shall not apply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator request that this modifi-on be made?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I believe I can modify my own amend-nt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. I modify my amendment to read as I have stated, and d the amendment to the desk in that form.

I have had many complaints from employers seeking Government tracts that, after long negotiations with the Office of Contract Com-ance of the Department of Labor, they have filed affirmative action ns in full compliance with all of the suggestions made by the Office Contract Compliance and that such affirmative action plans have n approved by the Office of Contract Compliance, and that after all se procedures have been complied with, the Office of Contract Com-ance, without any warning or any notice of any further opportu-y to be heard, has refused to approve the contract sought by those loyers.

This amendment would merely give some semblance to fair play in es where employers had filed and had approved by the Office of ntract Compliance an affirmative action plan, and provide that er it had approved it the Office of Contract Compliance could not reject that plan without giving the employer an opportunity to heard under the Administrative Procedure Act.

The amendment safeguards the Office of Contract Compliance providing that if there is a substantial deviation from the approv affirmative action plan, this section, which gives the employer in su cases the right to a hearing and adjudication under the Administ tive Procedure Act, does not apply.

It seems to me this is a fair amendment and that it ought to be su ported by any Senator who believes in fair play under those circu stances. I sincerely hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, as I heard the amendment stated thought I heard the word "superseded," so that the amendment wo read:

No Government contract, or portion thereof, with any employer, shall be nied, withheld, terminated, or superseded, by any agency . . .

I believe the word should be "suspended."

Mr. ERVIN. Suspended. I will modify the amendment and chan the word from "superseded" to "suspended."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, as I understand the amendment, it brings t Administrative Procedure Act due process provisions to bear wh there is an action to cancel a contract and an affirmative action pl is already in effect with that employer.

Mr. ERVIN. That is the objective.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the objective of the amendment.

Frankly, it strikes me as an eminently fair requirement where employer is working under an agreement for affirmative action. T kind of suspension could sweep away his contract even though thought he was complying.

Mr. ERVIN. That is correct. It affords an escape value for the Offi of Contract Compliance by providing that this provision is not bin ing on the Office of Contract Compliance in the event the employ substantially departs from the agreed to affirmative action plan.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the objective—provided, however, that such employer shall deviate substantially from such previously agre to affirmative action plan, this section—which is the amendment shall not apply.

It strikes me on its face as a fair procedure.

We have no testimony on it, I will say to the Senator from Nor Carolina, and no opinions from departments or agencies or otherwi

I know the Senator from New York, with the best of his good leg mind, is at work on this amendment at the moment, and so I will yie to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. The Senator can practically see my wheels turning.
he can see the wheels of the Senator from North Carolina turning.

There are a few questions I would like to ask the author of t amendment, if he will indulge me. By the way, we are checking up the question of whether this may not be attributable to the very sa section I dealt with, but that will not matter. I will agree with t Senator about writing it so that it will conform to the amendme which was offered by me.

Mr. ERVIN. I tried to conform it. It may be that it deals with t same section. I think we can straighten that out by applying it to t same subsection.

Mr. Javits. We do not have any problem, but I wanted to ask the nator a couple of questions.

There are two things which strike me at first impression, and again, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) said, it is new mat-, first impression, so I hope the Senator will not feel I am just en-ging in supererogation. I really do not know.

The Senator speaks, in line 5, of an affirmative action plan. It would m to me that in order to have it appropriate, the words "in effect" ould appear after the word "plan." I do not know whether these ns are limited in time or what is the situation, just off the top of my d, but I certainly believe that it would be necessary to have a plan going at the time, rather than merely qualifying under this section ause at one time there was an agreement.

Mr. Ervin. If they have a plan that has been approved by the Office Contract Compliance, it has been approved and there it is, it would in effect.

Mr. Javits. Not necessarily, because if it had a time limit, and that e limit had expired, it would still be an affirmative plan which had n approved, but might not be in effect.

t just strikes me as a lawyer that we ought to include the fact that as been an ongoing plan.

Mr. Ervin. I think it is implied that it is in effect, but the trouble it is, if we put that word in there, it may be construed to give them right to repudiate, and get them back to the very position that the endment is intended to safeguard the man against.

Mr. Javits. I do not see how that could happen, because the initia-y action is on the part of the employer; he can demand a hearing.

n other words, the Government is in a position where, if he gets a ring, that operates this section. But all I am saying is, I think we ght to be protected against that situation.

Mr. Ervin. Well, here is the difficulty: The Office of Contract Com-nce has been approving plans, time after time they approve a plan l then, after approving the plan, they refuse to give a man a con-ct based on the plan that they have approved.

The objective of the plan is to prevent discrimination, and all this s is that after they have approved a plan, they cannot deny the n the contract as long as he is willing to comply with it, and it gives man the right to go into court and let the court decide whether plan that has been approved by the Office of Contract Compliance, ich they seek to repudiate, complies with the provisions of the Ex-tive order or the provisions of the law outlawing discrimination.

The trouble is that under the present circumstances you cannot sue the courts because when you offer to give a contract it is not ap-ved; and this is an effort to give some legal remedy where the com-nce contract has been approved by the agency, and then the agency ks to repudiate it. It is to try to get out from that arbitrary prac-which they now have.

have many complaints about this. The trouble with the Office of ntract Compliance, so I have been informed by many employers, is t they will never put in writing what they require, but they make employer come and put his plan in action, and then they either ept it or repudiate it. This ends repudiating it after they have ac-ted it, and gives him a legal remedy, and allows the court to say whether the contract complies with the Executive order and the l instead of leaving that matter to be determined solely by the O of Contract Compliance.

Mr. JAVITS. Well, Mr. President, there is nothing which the Sena has stated which, it seems to me, answers the point which I make, less he says that by implication, though I do not know where it ari it must be a plan, to wit an affirmative action plan, which is in effe because if the contracting agency, in making and approving the pl has limited the time of its approval—suppose, for example, that making and accepting the plan and approving the plan, they s "We approve it for 1 year" or "We approve it for 2 years," after expiration of that time, certainly, I would expect that the mover the amendment does not expect this section to be effective if the ti of approval given to the plan has expired.

That is all I am asking. In other words, that it is an affirmative act plan that is in effect.

Mr. ERVIN. The trouble of it is, since the Office of Contract Co pliance is the one that makes the contract, they can say, "We have cided that we have changed our mind, and although we have appro this in the past as a sufficient compliance, we now change our mind a demand that you submit another plan"; and if we have "in effect." is implied that this whole arbitrary power of changing the rules compliance will be perpetuated.

Mr. JAVITS. As I understand the Senator, then, he expects that g ernment agencies will be forever bound, without any opportunity change any kind of plan with any contractor, once they have act Under those circumstances, they would never approve a plan; th would be foolish if they did.

Mr. ERVIN. Well, they have to approve a plan.

Mr. JAVITS. If they would approve something more permanent th the Constitution of the United States, which is what the Senator arguing for; if, once they approve the plan, that is the end of it forev and ever, I just cannot see that.

Mr. ERVIN. No; the amendment does not provide that. It says th once they have approved a plan, the Office of Contract Complian cannot repudiate its approval, but, instead of having them repudi it, once they have approved it, the matter is for the courts to deci

Mr. JAVITS. I am glad to get that construction. Then the amen ment says that once they have granted approval, it is approval f ever and ever unless otherwise ordered by the courts. I could not a prove it on that ground.

Second, Mr. President, I asked the Senator whether it is his int tion, and I gather from the language that it is, that nothing may done about the contract whatever under such a plan—which is, incide tally, a "forever plan"—without an extended court proceeding, o court proceeding, no matter how long it takes, even if successful a peals to the U.S. Supreme Court may take years—no limitati whatever upon the time taken in respect to court adjudication a hearing, et cetera. Is that not true?

Mr. ERVIN. Yes; if you have a legal remedy afforded a man. I not know how you can take it away.

Mr. JAVITS. That is all right. I understand.

Mr. ERVIN. I just do not believe in arbitrary action. Under the sent circumstances, the Office of Contract Compliance has the ar- rary power to deny a man a Government contract, even though the n is complying fully with the Executive order and the law. It de- s access to the courts, and gives to the Office of Contract Compliance rbitrary power which any absolute eastern potentate would envy.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I do not see that the amendment of the ator gives the courts an opportunity to review an affirmative action n, that is, make a judicial review of an affirmative action plan, at time that such a plan takes effect, or at any time that it is effective. What I see is that there is an absolute mandate, without any possi- ty of it even being changed by the court itself, that so long as e are legal proceedings pending, no matter how dilatory they be in the conduct of them, nothing may be done about that con- t.

n that basis, Mr. President, I think the prejudice is very strongly nst the enforcement of the law; it gives any contractor an oppor- ty just to make the claim, he need prove nothing else; then he into court, and just as long as he takes, he takes, and no penalty tever ensues.

hat is a pretty easy deal for anybody who wants to break his mative action plan, or has a disagreement about what it means, there is no penalty whatever—to just take it to the courts and keep it there. We certainly have a great deal of experience with court cases. If that is the construction of the amendment, I ld feel, in conscience, that I would have to be very strongly nst it. I would have no reason to be against an amendment to give cial review.

o simply suspend any possibility of action of any kind during the duct of legal proceedings—I cannot conceive of that as being con- ve to fair enforcement of the law, and I shall oppose the amend- t.

r. ERVIN. Mr. President, if this amendment is not adopted, the e of Contract Compliance of the Department of Labor has arbi- y, tyrannical power that cannot be reviewed by any court on the of the earth. If they can deny due process, they can deny hearing, no power on the face of this earth can interfere with them, even gh the affirmative action plan which the office has approved is in compliance with the law and would be so adjudged by a court of under the Administrative Procedure Act.

think that every Member of the Senate who does not think the thouse door should be totally nailed shut and the Office of Con- t Compliance given power which nobody on earth can review, as whether it is in compliance with the law, ought to vote for this ndment.

r. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

r. ERVIN. I yield.

r. WILLIAMS. On line 5 of the Senator's amendment, it reads ere such employer has an affirmative action plan." The word "has" gests the present tense to me, and that suggests an affirmative ac- plan that is in effect.

r. ERVIN. That is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought that was one of the questions that Senator from New York asked. I thought he was suggesting that th was a possibility that under this amendment there could have be former affirmative action plan but one that was not in effect at the ment when a contract might have been denied or suspended.

Mr. ERVIN. I think the Senator's interpretation is absolutely corr
It must have been approved by the Office of Contract Compliance must be in existence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That clarifies that part of it for me.

The other question I have is as to the impact of the words "un the provisions of Title 5, United States Code, section 554, and the lowing section thereto." The Senator from New York was develop the suggestion that action on a contract could be held up follow long, long court procedures. Is this a procedure going to court o this the hearing——

Mr. ERVIN. It would go to the court on the record already made the Office of Contract Compliance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. These are the Administrative Procedure Act p visions of an administrative hearing?

Mr. ERVIN. Yes; all the court would have the power to co sider would be the record already made in the Office of Contr Compliance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On another matter, we were on other sides of issue of the dignity of an administrative hearing, and I wanted clarify that. But that refers to the Administrative Procedure A agency hearing, with all its provisions.

Mr. ERVIN. Yes; so there cannot be anything very long about th
They already have in writing all the evidence that can be consider

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the section 554 hearing, which I have even had a minute to check out, assuming even what the Senator sa which is set up in the appendix to our own report—I do not kn whether it is complete or partial here—represents an adjudicati which relates to an agency proceeding.

Those cases can take years, and there is no way, if we adopt th amendment and leave it this way, in which that process can changed. A man might be able to go on violating as much as he lik so long as he claims he is not.

Mr. President, I have just stood with leaving OFCC in the Depa ment of Labor, and that is why it is my duty to question this amen ment. I want to find out if it would nullify or put in the hands of a contractor the ability to nullify any effort to really get a remedy. O other thing: The proviso at the end says:

Provided, however, that if such employer shall deviate substantially fr such previously agreed to affirmative action plan, this section shall not apply.

In other words, if the agency is trying to penalize him becau he has deviated, then he is home free under this amendment, and t only time he can be dealt with is if he shall deviate after he says did not deviate; and the previous transaction is completely ov looked, if you follow the words of this amendment.

So, Mr. President, under these circumstances, I respect the Senat from New Jersey—he has had this matter under first impression, have I; but I could not be a party to accepting the amendment wit out further study, especially in view of the good faith involved just having adopted an amendment which leaves the authority in the Department of Labor. I certainly could not see my way clear to, in my judgment, just emasculate it by this amendment.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I can understand the Senator from New York favoring nailing the courthouse door shut. But it would mean injustice because of nonreviewable arbitrary exercise of power by a public official. It is a very peculiar position for a lawyer of his distinguished record to take.

These contracts are referred to the Office of Federal Contract Compliance for only one purpose. Otherwise, the contracts are worked out by the other agencies of the Federal Government. They are referred to the Office of Federal Contract Compliance merely for the purpose of affording that office an opportunity to determine whether the affirmative action plan which is required is in compliance with the laws, the Executive order, and the regulations prohibiting discrimination in employment. That is the only function of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance in the matter. Here they approve an affirmative action plan. They say it is in compliance with the laws, the Executive order, and the regulations. All this says is that after they have approved, they cannot repudiate the approval without affording the employer who has satisfied the other agencies of Government with the terms of the contract the opportunity to have the question determined, not by arbitrary action on the part of an executive office but by a court of justice.

With all due respect to my good friend from New York, the contention that there will be any protracted litigation in a case of this kind is absurd. That is so because that court hears the matter and determines whether there is sufficient compliance with the laws, the Executive order, and the regulations prohibiting discrimination. It has to hear it and determine it on the record. Otherwise the Office of Contract Compliance can dictate and lay down terms that are absolutely inconsistent with the laws, terms which are inconsistent with the Executive order, and inconsistent with their own regulations on the subject. American citizens who have supported this Government by their taxes are powerless and have no remedy this side of heaven.

Thus, Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment and I suggest the absence of a quorum so that we can get a roll-call on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Schweiker). The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, in my judgment, the import of the amendment—and that is the reason I oppose it at this time and perhaps will propose a substitute to it—will not have the effect of fairly and equitably getting a judicial review of a contested situation where an individual government contractor feels that he is being imposed on notwithstanding the fact that he is complying with the affirmative action plan which is in effect.

74-699 O - 72 - 62

Now the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) argued that the words which he used, "has an affirmative plan which has previously been accepted by the Government," complies in effect with what was told the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams), but with me, he denied that. He says, once there had been affirmative action, then there was affirmative action forever. That is one of the things I cannot accept.

Second is the proviso which is tacked on at the end here which says that "if such employer shall deviate substantially from such previously agreed to affirmative action," thereby reiterating the point which the Senator certainly would not concede, in my judgment, but which I think has to be conceded in language, in view of the argument about it—to wit, that once the plan is previously agreed to, it remains forever, the plan to which the Government is bound, even though the Government may not wish further to be bound and the plan itself might have a definite time limitation on it which the parties would have a perfect right to insert. The words "shall deviate" also may indicate that whatever has been the violation with which the contractor is charged is forgiven.

It only means that he shall not have the advantage of this section for any future violation. I certainly think that would vitiate the intent of fairness, especially if there is no limitation whatever in the power of any court to terminate this immunity which is granted to the individual contractor once he makes the claim—that is all he has to do. It seems to me that we can then completely nullify the whole enforcement scheme which is incorporated in the Executive order simply by making a complaint that the Government is penalizing us unduly in respect of the affirmative plan that was approved—God knows when—and whether it is still in effect, and then there is no penalty whatever on the contractor of any kind or character and he can get all the Government contracts he wants.

That certainly is making a real mockery of the whole idea that the Government will have any authority to enforce its Executive order. It is entirely possible—and I do not say that it is not—perhaps to put this particular proposition—although it is one of first impression—into shape, because we do not even know right now, and I do not know and I cannot represent to the Senate whether it is or is not any right of judicial review in respect of this matter at this time. This is a very important question so that we may at least juxtapose the remedy which is sought here with the remedy now in effect. Therefore I really want a little while to have a good look at this. It may be possible to work out an amendment, or by amending the amendment, or by agreement with the Senator from North Carolina which will make a fair disposition of this matter. I have every desire to do so, but I am not going to be rushed into acting on this matter up or down without having some opportunity to see what should be done about it.

For that reason, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that amendment No. 957 be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 819, offered by the senior Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) and myself, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 59, strike out lines 23, 24, and 25.

On page 60, strike out lines 1 and 2; and reletter subsections (f), (g), and (h) of section 8 appropriately.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I am glad to yield.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. It is my understanding that the distinguished Senator from Alabama is willing to enter into a limitation of 40 minutes on the amendment, to be equally divided between the mover of the amendment and the manager of the bill. Is that agreeable?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I shall withhold my request momentarily. I thank the Senator from Alabama for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the amendment seeks to strike from the bill words that were added by the committee to the bill as a proposed addition to the present law. These are the words which the committee seeks to enact and the amendment seeks to prevent from becoming law. The Commission is given the authority—

And to accept voluntary and uncompensated services, notwithstanding the provisions of Section 3679(b) of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. 665(b)).

What is that section of the code from which the committee substitute seeks to exempt the EEOC? The present law, going back to the year 1870, in the section cited:

No officer or employee of the United States shall accept voluntary service for the United States or employ personnel service in excess of that authorized by law, except in cases of emergency involving the safety of human life or the protection of property.

I was not on the committee which brought forth this substitute, but I have read some of the hearings, and I did not come across any testimony in the hearings. I am not saying that some testimony was not there that I did not see, but I would invite the manager of the bill to cite to me those pages. I do not see one single bit of testimony in favor of this language that seeks to give the Commission the authority to accept voluntary and uncompensated service from individuals.

What is the purpose of this language? Why should the EEOC come out from under the law that applies to every other Federal agency in the country? So far as the junior Senator from Alabama knows, no agency, no branch of the Government, is authorized to call in hordes of individuals off the streets and, in effect, to accept their services and give them the power, the authority, and the indicia of office as Federal employees. Obviously, there would be no volunteers unless the persons volunteering were biased or prejudiced or had some ax to grind. Why would they come forward and volunteer to work for the EEOC? There is no reason in the world, except that they would have an ax to grind. They would have a prejudice or a bias, or else they would not offer their services. They would not offer their services to any other branch of the Government, so far as the junior Senator from Alabama is concerned.

Furthermore, Congress is supposed to have the power to circumscribe or to limit the power, the authority, and the scope of the work of any agency of Government by controlling the amount of money appropriated to that department or agency. But in this instance the EEOC would have the authority, unless this amendment shall be adopted, to accept the voluntary and uncompensated services of hundreds of thousands of people—people with prejudices, people with biases, people subsidized by interested organizations, people subsidized by foundations which have an interest in carrying on this work.

So, Mr. President, the EEOC might have 1,000, 2,000, 3,000, or 4,000 Federal employees on the payroll, but there would be nothing whatsoever in the absence of this amendment, to prevent the EEOC from availing itself of the services of tens of thousands of individuals who would be sent out over the country like a swarm of locusts to harass business and industry—small business, persons employing as few as eight people.

So since the year 1870, according to the footnote to this section, this provision of law has applied to the agencies of the Federal Government—that they shall not have the authority to reach out and get voluntary employees, uncompensated employees, and put them to work.

Does that make sense, Mr. President? Is it not necessary for a Federal employee to pass a civil service examination? Is it not necessary that some check be made as to his reputation, his loyalty to the Government, his educational qualifications, his personality, his fitness for Government employment?

But, under this committee substitute, Mr. President, which we are seeking to change by this amendment, no check need be made, and the agency could become a colossus, a Frankenstein, of volunteer and uncompensated employees, uncompensated so far as the Government is concerned.

Who would be paying these uncompensated employees and volunteer employees? Not the Federal Government, but someone having an interest in seeking harassment of business and industry and of employees and employers.

Mr. Prsident, all the amendment seeks to do is to take out the language that has been added by the committee. I showed this language to a distinguished member of the committee just the other day. He said:

I was on that committee and heard the hearings. I did not know we had a section like that in the bill.

A very learned member of the committee, a very able Member of the Senate, said:

I had no idea such a section was in the bill.

I hope the manager of the bill will accept the amendment; that he will not insist on taking out the provisions of law which prohibit the use of uncompensated and voluntary employees with respect to this one agency of Government.

Why should it stand on any basis higher than the Justice Department? Do they accept volunteer employment? Can any zealous person come to the Justice Department and say, "I am interested in this activity of the Federal Government and I want to go out as a volunteer worker for the Government"? What would be the liability of the Government for the acts of such employees? Who would be responsible for what they did? Would the Government be liable or responsible for the act of such employees? What would it be?

There must be some reason—and I think we have suggested some of them—why for 100 years there has been a prohibition against the use of volunteer and uncompensated employees by any branch of the Federal Government, and the bill before the Senate would take the EEOC out from under this very fine safeguard against such a practice.

I would be interested in learning from the manager of the bill why this section was put in. Is not the EEOC going to be satisfied with the appropriations made by the Congress? Is it not going to be satisfied to limit its activity to the scope envisioned by the Congress in setting the appropriation? The machinery set up in the committee substitute would give the EEOC the authority to enlarge this department, to enlarge the scope of its activities, 50 percent, 100 percent, 200 percent—any amount of enlargement that it would care to have—through the use of volunteer employees, compensated by someone else, because you can rest assured that they are going to be compensated. They are not going to work for nothing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, would the Senator like me to reply to the question?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why is this necessary and whether there is enough money to hire the personnel needed? Was that the question?

Mr. ALLEN. No. I asked the Senator to respond to my inquiry as to why the committee put in the provision giving the EEOC the authority to use volunteer or uncompensated employees when no other branch of the Federal Government has that authority and when there is an express provision in the code prohibiting the use of such employees.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not sure whether that is accurate as to any other agency.

Mr. ALLEN. There is a law on it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know, but there are exceptions made for other agencies. My understanding is that Title VII, when enacted in 1964, said that the Commission shall have power to cooperate with, and with their consent utilize, regional, State, local, and other agencies, both public and private, and individuals. Under this provision, individuals were used who were volunteers. Some question was raised and, in order to insure that volunteers could be used in limited circumstances, this provision was put in the bill, as we had it 2 years ago. It was preserved in this bill. It was in the bill that we voted on and which passed the Senate 2 years ago.

Mr. ERVIN. Is the Senator saying this is not new language?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was in the bill as introduced.

Mr. ERVIN. The committee report shows otherwise, Senator. It is in italic, which indicates that it was inserted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. While this is being walked over to the Senator, I could say that the following is the situation: This could be called the Johnny Cash amendment in the bill. This provides that a Johnny Cash or a Bill Cosby who wants to use his talent to deal with the idea of equal opportunity in a song, or prose, or poetry, can do so however he wants to: "You fellows have an Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and, if you are being denied, that Commission is there on your side." That is what it is.

That is what it is. It is the Bill Cosby provision of the EEOC bill that is before us.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, now, if the Senator would allow me to engage in a little colloquy with him on this point, was there any testimony before the committee as to the desirability of putting this section or this language in? If so, I would like him to cite it to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that it was formalized in the hearing, but certainly the information reached us that a question had been raised about the procedure being used by the Commission, and to clarify it so there would be no mistaking the authority, this language had been put in, and it was put in when we drafted the bill, yes.

Mr. ALLEN. So the committee decided, then, that it would be necessary to take them out from under the provisions of the code forbidding that practice, is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To make it clear that volunteers could participate yes.

Mr. ALLEN. Who pays these volunteers? Would the Senator enlighten the junior Senator from Alabama on that question? Do they have any volunteers from industry or business?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot answer that. I would hope so. I would imagine that there are people from the ministry, from business, from entertainment, and just people who might——

Mr. ALLEN. Who think that discrimination exists throughout the country, and they want to cure that evil?

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand it, those who have been used have been helpful in publicizing the fact that this country has an Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Mr. ALLEN. Who pays those individuals?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is it. This is to be noncompensated. These are volunteers.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand, but most of them have to eat, I suppose. Who pays them?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, now, there are as I understand it, 100 of the major companies, business organizations, which have been combined in the plans for progress organization, have volunteered their people, their names, themselves. Who pays them for this work? Nobody.

Mr. ALLEN. That is to go out and check other industries and businesses, is it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, it is not investigation. It is to publicize the fact of the existence of an Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Mr. ALLEN. There is nothing in here that would prevent them from doing some investigating, is there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ALLEN. There is nothing in the bill to prevent them from doing anything the Commission wanted them to do, including investigation.

Mr. Williams. Well, there is nothing in there because it is so wholly unlikely. There are many things that are not in there that are obviously not needed.

Mr. Allen. Would the Senator feel that there would be a chance that, through the use of volunteer uncompensated-by-the-Commission employees, it would be possible for the Commission to double its size without coming to Congress?

Mr. Williams. No.

Mr. Allen. Why not?

Mr. Williams. Because it would violate every reason known to man. That is why.

Mr. Allen. The Senator said 100 industries were turning their employees loose. How many from each industry?

Mr. Williams. As I have seen it work, a vice president may be assigned to this worthy, worthy activity, without major staff, but he, with his commitment and with the backing of his company, will come to the activity and publicize its support of the work of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Mr. Allen. How many employees does the EEOC have now, does the Senator know?

Mr. Williams. At this point?

Mr. Allen. Yes.

Mr. Williams. The last figure that reached me was just over 1,000 employees.

Mr. Allen. Well, how many does the Senator feel it would take to carry on the expanded work, the expandoed scope of the Commission, if this bill passes as it now stands?

Mr. Williams. Well, we have a judgment on that out of the hearings—and I believe it is stated in the committee report. Page 32 shows the estimate of costs, and that could be, with the employees we have now, the increase could be, roughly estimated, it would be an increase over the years projected—1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976—it would be an increase, over the next 4 years, doubling the number of employees. With the 1,000 now, it would be 2,000 then. That is an estimate.

Mr. Allen. The Senator would not feel it would be possible for the Commission to utilize another 2,000 from the ranks of volunteer and uncompensated employees?

Mr. Williams. Well, I do not know where—I think it is most unreasonable to assume that there is any possibility of that. In fact, it is just plain unreasonable to think in those terms.

Mr. Allen. Could the Senator say how many volunteer employees the commission is using now, without the sanction of this section?

Mr. Williams. Well, the major -the area of greatest impact is one man and his talents: the entertainer, Bill Cosby.

Mr. Allen. I understood the Senator to say there were 100 industries.

Mr. Williams. One hundred businesses have been associated, and I think it is high-level executives; I have already estimated that at 100.

Mr. Allen. One hundred businesses, but how many from each business?

Mr. Williams. That is on a part-time basis. I would say, on a strictly part-time basis, as I have observed it, for every vice president, there may be three people working with him, and it is obviously not full time.

Mr. ALLEN. That would be about 300, then? Three for each one of the businesses?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it were 100, and they each had a total of three, that would add up to 300.

Mr. ALLEN. Under the present law, though, they are not taken out from under this section of the United States Code, are they?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. Now, if it is 300 without any sanction of law, then without any bill taking them out from under the Code section, there would be no limit to the number of voluntary employees that they could use. Is that correct, there would be no limit?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, there is not any limit in the bill as it applies itself, no.

Mr. ALLEN. No. What would these people be? Would they be Federal employees, or what would their status be?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ALLEN. What would the status of these voluntary persons be? Would they be Federal employees?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. ALLEN. They would not be Federal employees?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the president of United States Steel wanted to voluntarily make an announcement of his association or his company's association with the objectives of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, that would be permitted under this act.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. Well, now, if the Southern Christian Leadership Conference wanted to furnish the EEOC with 200 or 300 volunteer employees to go out over the country working on this project——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Which project?

Mr. ALLEN (continuing). They could be accepted, could they not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, what is the project? Which project?

Mr. ALLEN. Well, the matter of bringing equal economic opportunities to the people in the country. That is what the bill is for, is it not? That is what I understood.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator mean to publicize and——

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know what they would do. They could investigate if they wanted to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, no, no, these are not investigators by any means.

Mr. ALLEN. Where does the bill say that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. These are not employees. The law provides for the employment of people, and the employment of people for all of the procedures of this Commission. Volunteers are not to go to court or to investigate.

Mr. ALLEN. Where does the bill say that? The bill does not say that. They want to get 10 attorneys in the General Counsel's office.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is in the report, and that does not have the force of law. I would be happy if the Senator would want to offer another amendment to further define the volunteer.

Mr. ALLEN. No. I would rather eliminate the entire section.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous con-nt that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.
The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.

* * * * * * *

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515), a ill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American orkers.
Mr. Allen. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amend-ent.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment. I think it is repugnant to the first principle of sound government allow volunteers to exercise governmental power. The provision hich the amendment—which has been ably discussed by the distin-ished Senator from Alabama—seeks to strike is found on the last ree lines of page 59, lines 23, 24 and 25, and the first two lines of ge 60. This provides that the Commission can accept voluntary and compensated services notwithstanding the provisions of section 49(b) of the revised statutes.
I respectfully submit that it is extremely unwise for a commission, hich is charged with the performance of a judicial function and hich exercises the power of judges, to have the assistance of volun-rs who are so biased in favor of the enforcement of the law that they willing to work for nothing, provided they are allowed to exercise vernmental functions and assist a commission that is supposed to sit n impartial judge of a cause.
For these reasons, I think the amendment of the Senator from Ala-ma should be adopted and that the Commission should not be accept-the services of biased people whose bias prompts them to volunteer ir services. I think it is essentially incompatible with sound govern-nt for nongovernmental officials to be performing a governmental nction. This provision should be stricken from the bill.
The Presiding Officer. The question is on agreeing to the amend-nt of the Senator from Alabama. On this question the yeas and nays ve been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.
The legislative clerk called the roll.
Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from New xico (Mr. Anderson), the Senators from Nevada (Mr. Bible and . Cannon), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Eastland), the Sena-from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), the Senator from Washington r. Jackson), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), the ator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), the Senator from Maine r. Muskie), the Senators from Rhode Island (Mr. Pastore and Mr. l), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), and the Senator m California (Mr. Tunney), are necessarily absent.
On this vote, the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Eastland) is paired h the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson). If present, and ing, the Senator from Mississippi would vote "yea," and the Sena-from Washington would vote "nay."
further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from ode Island (Mr. Pastore), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Steven-), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), and the Senator m California (Mr. Tunney) would each vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from New York (M Buckley) is absent on official business.

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater) is absent by leave o the Senate.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Mundt) is absent because o illness.

The Senators from Colorado (Mr. Allott and Mr. Dominick), th Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cook), the Senator from Maryland (Mr Mathias), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr Young) are neces sarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 53, as follows:

So Mr. Allen's amendment (No. 819) was rejected.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bentsen). Mr. President, the question now occurs on amendment No. 597, as modified.

Order of Business

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, there will be no more llcall votes today. There will be rollcall votes tomorrow. May I ask e distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) ether it will be agreeable with him and with others concerned—
r. President, may we have order?
The Presiding Officer. There will be order in the Senate so that can understand the program for the remainder of the day.
Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, the pending amend-nt, offered earlier by the distinguished senior Senator from North rolina (Mr. Ervin), was temporarily laid aside. May I inquire ether the senior Senator from New York (Mr. Javits), the senior nator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin), and the manager of the l would be willing to dispense with any further action with respect he bill today and proceed with the resumption of morning business?
The amendment of the senior Senator from North Carolina would ntinue in its temporarily laid-aside status and would be the pend-question tomorrow.
Mr. Ervin. That is satisfactory.

National Commitment To Eliminate Job Discrimination

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, on September 14, 1971, ntroduced S. 2515 for the distinguished junior Senator from New rsey (Mr. Williams) and for 32 other Senators. Although I was a cosponsor of that bill, I support the bill which is now before the nate, and I shall vote for it on final passage.
There are some features of the bill with which I am not in comte accord. Nonetheless, I hope that the bill can be improved when conference with the other body.
I do not favor special treatment or special consideration or favored ployment of any individual on the basis of that person's being black white, male or female. Nor do I believe that every charge of disnination in employment is valid. In many instances, a charge of crimination is used as a crutch to cover incompetence and unfit-s for a particular job. Discrimination is often blamed also for lure of promotion, whereas in reality, such failure is not because color but because of conduct.
Notwithstanding what I have just said, the fact remains that crimination in employment, on the basis of race, does exist, and crimination against sex does persist. Wherever there is such disnination in employment, it is violative of the Constitution of the ited States. I believe that, where jobs and promotions are concerned, ry person should be judged on the basis of his ability to do the
, his willingness to diligently apply himself, his appearance as to nliness, his attitude, and his personal conduct insofar as speech, nners, and morals are concerned. In other words, he should rise or on the basis of merit, not on the basis of race or religion or sex.
ery qualified individual—black, white, or else—should be given an al chance—not preferential treatment—at employment.
There is no question but that the unemployment rate for Negroes nsiderably higher than that for whites. Figures available for 1970 show that the unemployment rate for whites was 5.4 percent, whi 9.3 percent of Negroes were unemployed. Likewise, in 1970, the m dian family income for Negroes was $6,279, while the median inco for whites was $10,236.

While statistics on Spanish-speaking Americans are not nearly current or complete, it is interesting to note that in 1969, the medi family income for Spanish-speaking American families was $5,641.

The situation for working women is no less serious. Women contin to be relegated to low-paying positions and the rate of advanceme is slower than for men in similar positions. I am informed that percent of all employed women work in order to provide primary su port for themselves or to provide a supplement to the income of the husbands which may be needed to meet household expenses. Howeve within established, occupational categories, women are paid less fo doing the same jobs as are done by men. For example, in 1968, th latest year for which extensive data are available, the median salar for all scientists was $13,200, but for women scientists, the media salary was $10,000. Similarly, the median salary for a full-time ma factory worker was $6,738, while his female counterpart was pai $3,991. This economic disparity is further emphasized by figures whic show that while 28 percent of men earn $10,000 per year or more, onl 3 percent of the women do so.

Discrimination against women is obviously no less serious than an other prohibitive form of discrimination.

Enactment of this bill will not automatically end employment dis crimination. Nor do I believe it to be the Federal Government's respon sibility or function to dictate to every little private employer wha his employment guidelines should be. The United States Constitutio does not outlaw discrimination when practiced by an individual per son. But job discrimination based on race, sex, nationality or religio cannot be countenanced with respect to the actions of Federal, State and local governments, or corporations, or even private employer where a substantial number of employees are concerned.

The bill before the Senate would broaden the jurisdictional coverag of the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission, and would de lete the existing exemptions for State and local government employees

The U.S. Attorney General would be given the authority to brin civil actions involving unlawful employment practices committed b
State and local governmental agencies.

Employees of State and local governments are entitled to the sam benefits and protections in regard to equal employment as are the em ployees in the private sector of the economy.

There are presently approximately 10.1 million persons employe by State and local governmental units. This figure represents an in crease of over 2 million since 1964, and all indications are that th number of State and local employees will continue to increase mor rapidly during the next few years. Few of these employees, however are afforded the protection of an effective Federal forum for assuring equal employment opportunity. It is an injustice to provide employee in the private sector with the assistance of an agency of the Federa Government in redressing their grievances while at the same time denying assistance similarly to State and local government employees
The bill before the Senate would provide such assistance.

The Federal Government, with 2.6 million employees, is the single rgest employer in the Nation. The prohibition against discrimination the Federal Government, based on the due process clause of the fifth nendment, was judicially recognized in Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 7 (1954) and cases cited therein.

Minorities represent 19.4 percent of the total employment in the deral Government—15 percent are Negroes, 2.9 percent are Spanish-rnamed, 0.7 percent are American Indians, and 0.8 percent are riental. Their concentration in the lower grade levels indicates that eir ability to advance to the higher levels has in many instances, been stricted.

In many areas, the pattern at regional levels is worse than the na-nal pattern. For example, a particularly low percentage of Federal s are held by Spanish-surnamed persons in areas of high residential ncentration of such persons, particularly in California and the uthwestern States.

The position of women in the Federal Government has not fared y better. While women constitute 34 percent, or approximately ,000 of the total number of Federal employees, 77 percent of the men are employed in jobs which are rated GS 1 through GS 6. enty-two percent are in grades GS-7 through GS 12, and only 1 cent are in grades GS 13 and above. The inordinate concentration women in the lower grade levels, and their conspicuous absence m the higher grades is again evident.

The bill before the Senate should make possible the rectification of h situations wherein discrimination based on race, nationality, or is involved.

Recognizing the importance that the concept of due process places on American ideal of justice, the bill insures fairness to the employer. arges must be in writing. The allegations will not be made public the Commission while it is investigating such, and the Commission l undertake to resolve each matter by informal means before issuing omplaint. Commission hearings must be on the record and will be ered by the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act so as provide maximum protection to all parties to the proceedings. The pondent would have the right to seek judicial review of a Commis-n decision which rules against him.

believe that the Senate bill will provide the instrument for fulfill-nt of our national commitment to eliminate job discrimination based race, nationality, religion, and sex. I, therefore, will vote for the bill.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

NOVEMBER 3, 1971
Ordered to lie on the table and to be printed

JANUARY 26, 1972
Ordered to be printed as modified.

AMENDMENT

Proposed by Mr. ERVIN to S. 2515, a bill to further promote the equal employment opportunities for American workers, viz:

On page 61, after line 23 insert the following new section:

SEC. 10. No Government contract, or portion thereof, with any employer, shall be denied, withheld, terminated, or superseded, by any agency or officer of the United States under any equal employment opportunity law or order, where such employer has an affirmative action plan which has previously been accepted by the Government, without first according such employer full hearing and adjudication under the provisions of section 554, title 5, United States Code and the following pertinent section: Provided, however, That if such employer shall deviate substantially from such previously agreed to affirmative action plan, this section shall not apply.

Amdt. No. 597 – (As Modified)

UAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

he ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. In accordance with the previous er, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, S. 2515, ch the clerk will please state by title.

he assistant legislative clerk read the bill by title, as follows:

bill (S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportunities for Amer- workers.

he ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on eeing to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from th Carolina (Mr. Ervin), amendment No. 597.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of orum.

he ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will please call the

he second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous con- that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

he ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ered.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the distinguished ator from North Carolina yield to me?

r. ERVIN. I am delighted to yield to the assistant majority leader.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. I thank the distinguished Senator from th Carolina.

r. President, the yeas and nays have been ordered on the pending ndment by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. in). It is my understanding that all sides are about ready for that to occur. Therefore, I take the floor at this time just to alert the rkrooms on the respective sides of the aisle that they may know that vote is about to take place and, in turn, may inform Senators, so they may come to the floor.

r. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, overnight my f and that of Senator Williams and the staff of Senator Ervin and agencies concerned—to wit, the Equal Employment Opportunity nmission and Government procurement people—have been in touch h each other. That is, the agency of the Department of Labor deal- with Government contractors and equal employment opportunity e been in touch with each other, and they have now produced a ft of a revised Ervin amendment which takes account of the prob- s raised by the Senator, with which there was substantial agree- nt by the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) and myself, ept that I could not see that the way in which the amendment had n drafted solved the problems. I now believe that it solves the problems equitably, technically, and appropriately and I am prepa on a rollcall vote, to vote for the amendment.

I would hope that perhaps right now the Senator from North Ca lina could revise his amendment according to the new draft, so t when we come out of the next quorum call we will be ready to v for it without further delay.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator fr
New York. Inasmuch as the rollcall vote has been ordered on original amendment, the Senator from North Carolina has lost capacity to modify his original amendment without unanimous c sent by the Senate.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. I therefore ask unanimous consent that my amendm
No. 597 be modified to conform to the draft agreed upon by the st of the Senator from New Jersey, the staff of the Senator from N York, and my staff. I send to the desk a copy of the revised draft a ask the clerk to state it so that the Senate may know what modificatio are being made.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification will be stat for the information of Senators and then the question will be put to whether unanimous consent is granted for the modification.

The legislative clerk read the modified amendment as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section.

SEC. 14. No Government contract, or portion thereof, with any employer, sh be denied, withheld, terminated, or suspended, by any agency or officer of t United States under any equal employment opportunity law or order, whe such employer has an affirmative action plan which has previously been accept by the Government for the same facility within the past twelve months withe first according such employer full hearing and adjudication under the provisio of 5 U.S.C. § 554, and the following pertinent sections. Provided, however, Th if such employer has deviated substantially from such previously agreed affirmative action plan, this section shall not apply. Provided further, That f the purposes of this section an affirmative action plan shall be deemed to ha been accepted by the government at the time the appropriate compliance agen has accepted such plan unless within 45 days thereafter the Office of Feder Contract Compliance has disapproved such plan.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, perhaps I should clarify the remarks made about the manner in which the compromise draft was reache
I stated that it was worked out by the staffs of the Senator from Ne York, the Senator from New Jersey, and myself. I might state th they did so under our direction. The staffs did a remarkable job i putting in understandable phraseology, the agreement which we ha reached in respect to this very important matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wanted to say that rather late la evening I was working with the Senators' staffs. I think that we ca all be grateful for their faithfulness to the observations made by th Senator from North Carolina on the floor and after we left the floo
It represents, in my judgment, a solution to the question and some o the anxieties felt which prompted the Senator to offer the origina amendment in the spirit in which I agreed with it yesterday with ce tain reservations. The reservations have now been removed. I thin that this modification is necessary as part of this legislation to insur that the objectives are reached and the process of scrupulous fairnes preserved.

Mr. ERVIN. I thank the Senator. I would suggest, so early in the session, with so few Senators in the Chamber, that it might be advisable to have a quorum call before we vote. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will excuse the Chair, unanimous consent has not yet been given.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to modify my amendment in accordance with the compromise draft worked out by the Senator from New Jersey, the Senator from New York, and myself, with our respective staffs.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the modification proposed by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum so that the cloakrooms can inform Senators that a rollcall vote will be held shortly.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina as modified. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Bayh), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Church), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Eagleton), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Gravel), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. Inouye), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGovern), the Senator from Montana (Mr. Metcalf), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Montoya), the Senator from Maine (Mr. Muskie), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Randolph), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), and the Senator from California (Mr. Tunney) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Eastland) is absent because of illness.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Eastland), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Montoya) and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), and the Senator from California (Mr. Tunney) would each vote yea.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley) is absent on official business.

The Senators from Colorado (Mr. Allott and Mr. Dominick) and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Packwood) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater) is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Mundt) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Maryland (Mr. Mathias) is detained on offic business.

The result was announced—yeas 77, nays 0, as follows:

So Mr. Ervin's amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider th vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Javits. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the follow ing members of my staff be permitted to be on the floor of the Senate to assist me during the remainder of the consideration of the bill: Rufus Edmisten, William P. Goodwin, Jr., and Walker Nolan.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Hollings). Without objection, it is s ordered.

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.
The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Gambrell). Without objection, it is ordered.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.
Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I call up an amendment at the desk and k that it be stated. It is an amendment offered on behalf of myself d the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN).
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.
The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:
In lieu of the language proposed to be substituted for the original nguage of the bill by the committee substitute, as amended, substitute the following:
(The amendment referred to, as introduced is S. 2617, introduced Senator Dominick and may be found on p. 553.)
Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state it.
Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the amendment which has been offered the Senator from North Carolina and myself is a substitute for the mmittee substitute. The substitute is the exact language of the ouse bill, H.R. 1746, as it passed the House.
The question I wish to propound to the Chair is: Will the amendnt which has just been offered itself be subject to amendment?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Gambrell). The Senator is correct. will be subject to amendment.
Mr. ALLEN. Then, as long as this amendment is pending, it will be vehicle by which amendments may be offered to the pending bill. can be used as a vehicle for the introduction of amendments sepate from the other measures pending; is that not correct?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment can be used as vehicle for amendments to the bill, but also perfecting amendments n be offered to the committee amendment while the Senator's endment is pending.
Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield so t we can clarify this matter?
Mr. ALLEN. I yield.
Mr. JAVITS. When the Chair refers to the committee amendment, rather it refers to S. 2515 as reported to the Senate, Calendar 412.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.
Mr. JAVITS. So amendments will lie to S. 2515 as well as or in the ernative to the substitute of the Senator from Alabama. Will endments to the bill of the committee, that is, Calendar No. 412, also amendments in the second degree?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment to the committee substitute an amendment in the first degree.
Mr. JAVITS. But amendments to the Allen substitute are amendments the second degree.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. So that amendments to the committee substitute may turn be amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. That is, if they are submitted at this time, under th framework.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct

Mr. JAVITS. However, the Senate decision will then have to be mut ally conclusive, am I correct, in that if the Allen amendment, amended, is carried, that would preempt the committee bill amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JAVITS. Just so that we have everything clear, I thought th should be explained. I have one other thing to bring out. How wou the votes come? Would amendments to the committee amendment, i cluding amendments to those amendments, be voted on first; or is it i discriminate, depending upon when they are offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Perfecting amendments to the committe substitute will have preference over the Allen substitute.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the amendment which is at the des and up for consideration seeks to substitute for the pending committe amendment the language of House bill H.R. 1746 entitled, "A bill t promote equal employment opportunities for American workers."

The bill, S. 2515, introduced in the Senate and referred to the Healt and Education Subcommittees of the Committee on Labor and Publi Welfare, was amended in the committee by the writing of an entirel new bill, and that is what was the pending business until the pendin amendment was offered, which would substitute the House languag for the language which the committee seeks to substitute for the bill a originally introduced.

Mr. President, I feel that every Member of this body wants to se fair and equal employment opportunity for every citizen in this coun try. I feel that every Senator wants to see any man or woman, or an boy or girl, go just as far in life as his abilities, energies, and ambition will take him. All of us want to see every person receive fair and equa treatment before the law.

The EEOC was set up some 7 years ago as a Federal agency, a advisory agency, and an investigatory agency to aid in the matter o seeing that everyone had an equal opportunity to obtain fortune an receive promotion. This Commission does not have the power to mak orders which it cannot enforce. Some sort of machinery needs to b set up to allow the EEOC to obtain enforcement of its orders base upon its findings.

So the purpose of S. 2515 and the purpose of H.R. 1746 is to provid enforcement machinery for the orders of the EEOC. It is not a ques tion of which one offers more substantive right. Neither bill woul create a different degree or weight for equal employment opportunity The law would be the same with regard to the enforcement procedur under either bill.

One method provides that the Commission — and this is in S. 2515 — receive the charge, make the investigation, and, as now amended, refer the complaint over to the General Counsel who files charges before the Commission which received the complaint originally and which made the investigation. And this Commission — under S. 2515, but not under e amendment introduced by the Senator from North Carolina and yself—receives the complaint, investigates it, and forms a judgment th respect to it, or it would not bother to send it to the General Coun-l for the filing of charges. Then the General Counsel files a charge fore the Commission which, the junior Senator from Alabama sub-its, the Commission has already formed a judgment on. Then they oceed to reach a decision and issue a cease-and-desist order that the ployer must comply with.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at at point?

Mr. ALLEN. I would be delighted to yield to the distinguished senior nator from North Carolina.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, is it not a principle of the common law ich prevails in the overwhelming majority of the States of the ion that no man can be a judge in his own case?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, the committee bill authorizes members of Commission to file charges of unlawful employment practices.
en these charges, if approved by the General Counsel, would be pros-ted before the Commission itself, sitting as a jury and judge, and Commission is to make a judicial decision based upon the charges ich its members have filed.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is correct. That is what S. 2515 provides.
are trying to get that changed.

Mr. ERVIN. As I understand it, one of the fundamental principles of substitute offered by the Senator from Alabama on behalf of him-f and myself is to make certain that, instead of having the judicial ction exercised by the members of the Commission who have pre-red the charges or whose associates have preferred the charges, the idity should be determined by the district courts of the United ates as in all other civil actions.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. Does not the fundamental principle of justice say that ry person is entitled to have his cause judged, to borrow a quotation m Edmund Burke, "with the cold neutrality of an impartial dge"?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. Does the Senator from Alabama agree with the Senator m North Carolina that when one attempts to weigh the power to fer charges—to conduct an investigation and prefer charges—with power to judge the validity of those charges, he sets up a system ich absolutely divorces the agency empowered to act in the matter m the fundamental principles upon which any fair system of justice st necessarily rest?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. So the substitute amendment of the Senator from Ala-ma is offered for the purpose of insuring that there shall be a fair d a just determination of the charges by an impartial tribunal in-ad of by a tribunal which is empowered to investigate charges and ke charges?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; that is correct. This tribunal would not be an ncy that is not sympathetic to civil rights. On the contrary, the deral district courts throughout the country have displayed great compassion, great interest, great belief in, and great determination enforce, the civil rights of all citizens. So it would not be an unfrien ly tribunal by which those charges or complaints would be heard. The would be heard by the Federal district courts.

Mr. ERVIN. The Senator from Alabama is conscious of the solicitud of the Federal courts for civil rights, is he not?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. But he is also conscious of the fact that Federal court are also more likely to enforce civil rights by procedures that do no in and of themselves constitute civil wrongs?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolin for giving me the benefit of his views and for participating in thi colloquy.

Mr. President, an effort was made previously in the Senate to amend S. 2515, so as to do away with the procedure by which the Commissio is judge, jury, and prosecutor, and to require that the forum for deter mining the rights of the parties involved would be not the Commissio which received the complaint, considered it, and passed it on to th General Counsel for action. It would not be that body which had al ready, in effect formed some sort of opinion about the matter. It would be a Federal district court of the place where the alleged unfair em ployment practice took place.

At one time, it looked as though the Senate were going to accept tha amendment, because then it did reconsider the vote by which the amendment failed of adoption. But then, on a second vote on the mat ter, by a vote of 48 to 46, it failed to agree to the amendment, if the memory of the junior Senator from Alabama is correct.

So the strong sentiment of just about an equal number of Senators is that the forum for settling and determining the rights of citizens shall be the Federal judiciary, starting at the courts closest home.

The Dominick amendment failed of adoption. The proponents o cease and desist by Commission fiat won that battle. It may have been a most expensive victory, becase, if the junior Senator from Alabama correctly interprets the feelings and the determination of a large num ber of Senators, this bill may not—and he says "may not"—be forced to a vote in the Senate. That would be a tragic happening. In many respects, that would be a reaching out for more than the Senate is willing to give, going farther than public opinion would require.

For 7 years, the Commission has operated without the power of cease and desist. Why does it need that power now, is this fashion? Why will it not accept going into court to prove its charges? Why does it want to try its charges itself? That just depends on the thoughts, ideas, and concepts of due process and of our Anglo-Saxon system of jurisprudence. Why not be satisfied to go into Federal court and make out the charges? "Oh," they say, "the Federal courts are just clogged with work. That would make it very difficult to get a man's rights adjudged."

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point without losing his right to the floor, so that I may call his attention to an editorial published in the New York Times of January 25, 1972?

Mr. ALLEN. I am delighted to yield for that purpose.

Mr. ERVIN. This editorial reads:

Superficially, the cease-and-desist route holds out the promise of swifter action d more uniform administration of the law, but experience with N.L.R.B. hear-g examiners suggests that they do not dispose of cases more rapidly than deral district judges.

I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if the record does t show that, notwithstanding the fact that the powers of the EEOC e limited by present law to the investigation of charges and the aking of charges—and I might add, in the absence of an amend-nt like the one of the Senator from Ohio, the prosecution of charges those who made the accusatory charges—nevertheless, the Com-ssion is some 18 months behind in its work.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I understand it is 18 to 24 months behind.

Mr. ERVIN. And if the committee bill passes, giving the Commission risdiction over 10 million employees of State and political subdivins, and, in addition, giving jurisdiction over the activities of every le businessman in American who employs as many as eight persons, we not look forward to a delay of 10, 15, or 20 years in the process-by the Commission of its work unless we multiply its employees to h an extent that they will be comparable to a plague of locusts who abroad throughout this land and eat up the substance of the taxyers?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; that is correct. The Commission does not now have hority under S. 2515, to take into the Federal service or to avail lf of the use of unpaid or voluntary workers, who would have to e prejudice or bias or they would not be volunteering their services.

Mr. ERVIN. Does not the Senator from Alabama share the belief the Senator from North Carolina that the reason why the Congress ied the EEOC cease-and-desist power when it enacted Title VII of Civil Rights Act of 1964 was to divorce the investigatory and the secutal power from the power to make judicial decisions?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. Is the Senator from Alabama not familiar with the ision in the case of Wong Yang Sung v. McGrath, 339 United tes 33, where the Supreme Court quoted with approval a report the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure ich declared:

hese types of commingling of functions of investigation or advocacy with the tion of deciding are thus plainly undesirable. But they are also avoidable should be avoided by appropriate internal division of labor. For the disqualitions produced by investigation or advocacy are personal psychological ones ch result from engaging in those types of activity; and the problem is simply of isolating those who engage in the activity. Creation of independent hear-commissioners insulated from all phases of a case other than hearing and ding will, the Committee believes, go far toward solving this problem at level of the initial hearing provided that proper safeguards are established ssure the insulation.

s not the Senator from Alabama familiar with that decision?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I am.

Mr. ERVIN. I ask the Senator from Alabama if the committee bill s not leave the Commission in such a situation that it has the power nvestigate and also the power to try the validity of the charges ch it may initiate.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. Was not that separation considered desirable by the orney General's committee, which was quoted by the Supreme rt with approval in the opinion from which I have just read?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. Does not the Senator from Alabama agree with th Senator from North Carolina that the citation of that report is strong indication that the members of the Supreme Court who partic pated in the McGrath decision may have believed that a situatio permitting the same persons who exercise the investigating power an the power to prefer charges and the power to decide those charge even though the individual who may have preferred the charges ma be excluded from the trial process, is hardly consistent with the du process clause of the fifth amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. I certainly agree with the Senator from Nort Carolina.

Mr. ERVIN. Does not the Senator from Alabama believe that th members of an agency which is charged with the enforcement of particular type of law and which is empowered to investigate allege violations of the law and to charge violations of the law and to judg violations of the law necessarily have an interest in a decision whic tends to support the charges which they or their fellow members ma have filed?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, it certainly seems that way to the junior Senato from Alabama.

Mr. ERVIN. Therefore, does not the Senator from Alabama agre that, under a setup like that, members of the agency, no matter how well-intentioned they are to do justice, are under a psychologica handicap which does not permit them to hold the scales of justic evenly?

Mr. ALLEN. I certainly agree.

Mr. ERVIN. Does the Senator agree that those people would cer tainly have a psychological tendency toward supporting the charges which they or their fellow members have filed?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. Does the Senator from Alabama recall that a few years ago the State of Michigan enacted a law which enabled a Michigan State judge to sit as a grand jury, and that under that law a Michigan judge charged that a certain individual who had appeared before him in court had been guilty of a contempt of his court, and that therefore that judge appointed himself a one-man grand jury to investigate the charge whether this individual had committed a contempt of court against the court, which was heard in that one-man grand jury, and the case went to the Supreme Court, which held that that act of the State of Michigan permitting the judge to act as a one man grand jury under those circumstances violated the due process clause of the fifth amendment, which was identical in meaning to the due-process clause of the fifth amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. And does not the Senator from Alabama agree with the Senator from North Carolina that, if there is going to be a law providing for the adjudication of rights created by law, it is essential for that law and for law enforcement in general to be respected by the people of the United States, to make certain that the judging of the charges of violation of that law is done by a tribunal which is unbiased and impartial and which, to quote the words of Edmund Burke, is conducted by "the cold impartiality of a neutral judge"?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, it should be, and it is not under S. 2515, and would come that way under the amendment we have offered.

Mr. ERVIN. I would like to suggest to the Senator from Alabama, I may do so without losing his right to the floor, that he insert in the record as a part of his speech the editorial from the New York Times, om which I have quoted, which states in substance that the New York mes thinks that the best way to enforce the law is through the courts.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I make the request.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in e Record, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Jan. 25, 1972]

t is more than seven years since Congress enacted a comprehensive Civil hts Act banning discriminatory practices in many fields including employ- nt. But the latest job statistics show that the rate of unemployment is twice igh for Negroes as for whites. In part, this lag is attributable to the inferior cation and deprivation which many blacks have suffered in the past. Unfor- ately, however, it is also due to concealed racial bias on the part of some ployers and some unions.

he Equal Employment Opportunity Commission established by the 1964 lacks effective power to reach and overcome prejudice in the job market. onciliation fails, it is up to the individual who filed the complaint to pursue the ter in the courts by suing the employer or the union. The Justice Department the power to sue only if it can show that a pattern or consistent practice of rimination exists.

he House last year passed a bill authorizing the commission to institute a suit he courts at public expense on behalf of the individual. The issue is now before Senate. A bipartisan coalition of liberals on the Senate Labor Committee has orted a different bill which would give the E.E.O.C. authority to issue a se-and-desist order, the same authority which the National Labor Relations rd has in the area of collective bargaining. The bill would also transfer to commission the power now lodged with the Justice Department to move inst broad patterns of discriminations.

the past, The Times has favored giving the commission this power to en- e its own findings. We are still convinced that such an arrangement would resent a vast improvement over the present ineffectual method. But a strong can be made for the idea that effective, nonpartisan enforcement of the law in the long run be more certain through reliance upon the courts than upon olitically appointed commission whose members change with each ainistration.

dministrative agencies were given broad enforcement powers in the labor field use it used to be thought that the Federal judiciary had an antilabor bias. atever the truth of that estimate as applied to the courts in the 1930s, it is rly untrue concerning their approach to racial discrimination today. Of the e branches of government, the judiciary has consistently been most vigilant consistent in protecting minority rights in recent decades.

uperficially, the cease-and-desist route holds out the promise of swifter action more uniform administration of the law but experience with N.L.R.B. hear- examiners suggests that they do not dispose of cases more rapidly than Fed- district judges. As for uniformity of interpretation, the harder issues will be settled by appeal to the Supreme Court whether they originate in E.E.O.C. rs or in district court lawsuits.

closely divided Senate will decide today whether to substitute the court roach for the cease-and-desist order. If the final Senate vote is for cease-and- st orders, the question will go to a House-Senate conference. There is satisfac- at least in the knowledge that either version of the bill would bring about an rovement over the existing feeble arrangement.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not find myself too often in agree- nt with the New York Times, but this one I find highly enlightening.

Mr. ERVIN. The Senator from North Carolina will concede that metimes the New York Times does seem to be right.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, that is right, and in this case they did. I appre
that.

I believe I was discussing the matter of the charge that the dis courts might be too busy, their dockets might be clogged, and there there could not be a determination, a settlement, an adjudicatio these disputes by requiring that the Commission go into the Fe district courts to prosecute these charges.

It so happens that there is only one Equal Employment Opportu Commission, whereas there are 398 Federal district judges. So we one commission here in Washington, to have a final determinatio charges and complaints, and they have built up a backlog already, w out bringing in this extra work of from 1½ to 2 years' workload.

They anticipate, I assume under the terms of the present law, 32 additional cases this year—that is, this fiscal year, to July 1, 1972—they anticipate 45,000, again I assume under the existing law, in next fiscal year.

If we are going to bring in 10 million State, county, city, and l agency employees, if we are going to bring in every teacher in country, if we are going to bring in every employer who employs many as eight persons, reducing that from the present 25, busines going to pick up at the EEOC.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And also labor unions with eight members.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, that is correct. Labor unions are governed b
S. 2515. I appreciate the Senator's bringing that to my attention.

In that sense, however, I might say to the distinguished Sena from New Jersey, labor unions would be employers, I assume, to extent that they employed people in their operations. So the w "employer" actually covers the labor unions. Labor unions can be e ployers as well as being representatives of their members. But be t as it may——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I think there should be a little clarification that. It is broader than the labor union as a wage-paying employ This runs to membership, too.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So it is broader than is indicated by the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, did the Senator think it would be necessary to p in a special provision for labor unions? Was that the theory?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. In perfect equity, on the labor-management si the present law applies to both businesses and labor unions, and as amend that to broaden the coverage to smaller businesses, we a amend it to broaden it to smaller unions.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But they are both in the present law.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Unions and businesses.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, now, if they went beyond the role of employer—

Mr. WILLIAMS. As it is now. There is no change in that. It was just thought, a bit of a misstatement of the present law when the Senat was referring to unions only as employers.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, I did not refer to the unions. The Senator fr
New Jersey first mentioned them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, but in his reply to that, the Senator suggested at it was only the union as employer.
Mr. ALLEN. Well, why would it not be?
Mr. WILLIAMS. The law has a prohibition against discrimination ainst members.
Mr. ALLEN. Would the Senator say, then, that that would mean that nion could not discriminate in admitting to union membership cern individuals? Is that right?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Exactly. That is the whole point.
Mr. ALLEN. Would that, then, have the effect of requiring unions that predominantly white unions, composed of white members, to open ir membership ranks to all minority citizens?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.
Mr. ALLEN. Yes. That is the purpose of the bill at that point?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Where there is discrimination, that is exactly correct.
Mr. ALLEN. Yes. Well, would the Senator feel that it would be disnination if a labor union, by one method or another, prevented black sons, refused to allow them to have membership in the union?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I am not going to sit as judge on hypotheticals. ry case depends on its facts. But that is exactly what we are trying liminate, exclusion or discrimination that is based on the various ified reasons that are listed in the bill.
Mr. ALLEN. A lot of the building trades unions, are they not comed largely of white citizens?
Mr. WILLIAMS. I would think that is accurate. But if they discrimi-they are running contrary to the law.
Mr. ALLEN. Well, now, how would they discriminate? John Jones, a k employee on a construction project, applies to a union for mem-ship in the union, or a nonworker, a man who wants to get work, a black citizen. Would he then, under this bill, be able to require the n to accept him into membership?
Mr. WILLIAMS. If he thought he was discriminated against, he could a charge.
Mr. ALLEN. I guess he would be discriminated against if he was admitted to union membership and given a job. That would seem ne to be discrimination. Is that the opinion of the Senator from Jersey?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, again, this is the guts of the factual determion, whether he was discriminated against and kept out because as black. If he was, that is contrary to the law.
Mr. ALLEN. The Senator would not have any doubt that that was riminating against him because he was black, if he applied for bership in the union and was turned down? Would not the Sen-feel that that individual was discriminated against?
Mr. WILLIAMS. If he was turned down for that reason, that is con-y to the law.
Mr. ALLEN. Well, suppose they used another reason, but that was real reason.
Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what the process of complaint, full hearing, due process is all about. It is for him to have the opportunity to e a case in support of a complaint that he was discriminated inst because of his race.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. I appreciate this enlightenment very much the distinguished Senator from New Jersey has given on the sub

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I do not know if it was enlightenment. Al this speaks for itself, really. But it is interesting.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; it has enlightened me, I say that in all fairn and I appreciate the enlightenment. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I appreciate the opportunity of enlightening Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ALLEN. For further enlightenment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. This is to enlighten me.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has offered the House bill as a s stitute.

Mr. ALLEN. In effect, yes—the language of the House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator whether the substitute he offered would cover labor unions as the bill does and as we described it. Would labor unions with eight members or more covered under the substitute offered by the Senator from Alaban

Mr. ALLEN. I will say to the Senator that I am sure he knows answer to that question, because he is the chairman of the commit to which the bill was referred, and the committee has put out a rep on the bill consisting of four lines. I am sure that he read the bill that time, or he would not have reported the bill. It is the very sa provision of the House bill which the Senator studied in the co mittee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is the report to accompany H.R. 1746, in whi the committee says:

The Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, to which was referred that b reports thereon without recommendation.

As chairman of the committee, I joined the committee, withe recommendation. But now the Senator from Alabama is recommen ing that bill to us, and that is why I want to know at this poi whether labor unions down to eight members are covered.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not sure whether or not the bill provides tha and I was hoping that the Senator, inasmuch as he had studied it the time the bill was considered by his committee and extensi hearings were held on these bills—could further enlighten the Sen tor from Alabama.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not recommending the House-passed bill. I a recommending the Senate reported bill, and in that we extend cove age to unions with eight members.

I am advised that the House bill does not reach discrimination wi respect to men who want to be in a union where there are only eig members.

Mr. ALLEN. It would cover the union as an employer of person would it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Again, under present law, not the smaller ones. The have to be 25 or more employees.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand. But this bill would still apply, or the la would still apply, to labor unions as employers, would it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes.

Mr. ALLEN. It does not go into the matter of who can and who cannot n a union—the language of the House bill. Is that right?
Mr. WILLIAMS. The House bill does not change the present law.
der the present law, there cannot be discrimination in a union of size of 25 members or more. We want to reach more working peoin unions as well as on the job.
Mr. ALLEN. There are many particulars in which the House bill did cover the same ground as did the Senate bill. For example, it does put the Senate, county, and city employees, under the provisions of OC, as does the committee bill espoused by the distinguished Senr from New Jersey.
Mr. WILLIAMS. That is one of the greatest oversights of the House
Mr. ALLEN. It does not cover teachers.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Another grave oversight. Of all the people who uld be entitled to the protection of law and equality, it is the teach-of our young people.
Mr. ALLEN. The Senator does not seem to realize that in Alabama in the South, the Federal district courts already, in effect, control hiring and firing of teachers there—it is already controlled by one ncy—and the placement of pupils.
was going to go on and point out, on the matter of the overclogging he dockets of the district courts, that whereas a large number of gration cases are pending in the district courts of Alabama and the th, very few such suits are pending in areas outside the South. So e would be plenty of time for these 398 Federal district judges to s on some of these charges of unfair employment practices.
o it occurs to the junior Senator from Alabama that that is in the l in which the House bill seeks to act—that is, arming the Commis-with the power to obtain enforcement of their efforts to eliminate ticular instances of unfair employment practices. That is what the se bill seeks to do. It does give to the Commission power that it s not now have. It does not take any power away from the Commis-
. All it does is add to it. It finds the Commission, after 7 years, with nforcement authority; and it gives it the authority to move into the eral court and obtain Federal decisions and the long arm of the eral Government, the Federal judiciary, to seek to eliminate unfair loyment practices throughout the country.
lso, if a final determination is to be made on a charge of unfair loyment practice, it occurs to the junior Senator from Alabama it would be much more equitable to all concerned to have that ter tried in the area where the alleged unfair employment practice place, rather than to have the matter finally adjudicated by a five-commission in the city of Washington. They already have a 2-year klog. They do not need more coverage. They need to get rid of some he backlog they have or, under the provisions of the House bill ch we are seeking to substitute, have these matters decided in the eral district court.
would seem to the junior Senator from Alabama that the Com-ion would welcome this opportunity to obtain this additional er, that it would accept this additional power to better enable it to ide for equal employment opportunities throughout the country.
r. President, yesterday, an amendment was debated on the floor the ability or the power of the Commission to avail itself of the use of voluntary and uncompensated employees, and the Senate decid that it was going to continue this power in the hands of the Commissi so that it could avail itself of the use of volunteer workers who wo be taken off the street and sent out over the country in connection w alleged unfair employment practices. Possibly, that is the way they going to get rid of this tremendous backlog of cases—through the

of these voluntary employees.

Mr. President, it is one thing to introduce a bill with all these ra fications: We are going to bring in State, county, and city employe we are going to bring in employees of all State agencies, all gove mental agencies at the local level. We have a special provision for F eral employees. We are going to bring in all teachers throughout t country. It is estimated that over 10 million employees of local gover ments—and there is no telling how many hundreds of thousands teachers—are being covered for the first time.

Now, Mr. President, one of the easiest ways for an institution higher learning, or any public school for that matter, to lose its accre tation—and that is most important to young men and young ladies w are in school, it is most important to the school itself, the faculty, a all who are connected with it—it is important to the State in which educational institution is located, that it be accredited.

One of the easiest ways for a school to lose its accreditation is to ha its affairs always embroiled with governmental agencies. If the Go ernor of a State interferes with an institution so that politics becom the word of the day rather than excellence in education, we will fi that that institution very quickly will lose its accreditation.

Academic freedom is something we hear about quite often—ple that we have academic freedom in our institutions of higher learnin not to interfere with the professor's right to express his opinion, n to interfere with his right to have a different opinion from our ow We have freedom of expression, freedom of thought, and freedom association. But if we turn over to the EEOC the matter of determi ing the employment practices and promotion practices in our instit tions of higher learning, and have a big wrangle over the school's rig to employ the members of the faculty that they want, we will soon ha that college or that institution without any academic freedom a without any accreditation.

The amendment which the Senator from North Carolina and I ha offered would not extend the power and authority of the EEOC ov educational institutions. It would not extend their power over Sta and local governments. It would not have in it the power to emplo voluntary and uncompensated employees who, of necessity, would ha some interest in the work of the Commission that they were doing they would not come in and apply to that work. Someone would ha to be paying them. Very few of them would work without compens tion. Some group, some foundation, or some person with an ulterio motive, prejudice, or bias, of necessity would have to be paying the volunteer workers who, if they felt that some organizations or bus nesses throughout the country, small employers throughout the cou try, were not giving equal employment opportunities to minorit groups, or to women, can volunteer their services to the Commissio and the Commission could avail itself of their services and send the out throughout the country arming them with the power of Federa authority.

Would they be Federal employees? They would be doing the work of deral employees. As was brought out yesterday, right now the EEOC 1,000 employees. It is suggested by the manager of the bill that in next couple of years that will go up to 2,000.

nder the provisions of the bill we are seeking to amend, if we leave all this additional authority, the Commission could employ 5,000 or uld arrange for the services of 5,000 people.

Well now, Congress has the power to set the limit on the activities the scope of the work of any of its agencies.

Ir. GAMBRELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield a question?

he PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Chiles). Does the Senator from Ala-a yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Ir. ALLEN. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Georgia for a stion.

r. GAMBRELL. I should like to ask the junior Senator from Ala-a if I understand correctly the purpose of the amendment, or one he primary purposes of the amendment which he is offering, that to substitute the court enforcement procedure recommended by House of Representatives in its version of the bill for the cease-desist Commission enforcement procedure as recommended by Senate committee on this subject.

r. ALLEN. That is correct.

r. GAMBRELL. That was my understanding.

I may ask another question of the Senator from Alabama with rence to the New York Times editorial of January 25, 1972, which printed in the Record a short while back by the Senator from ama, I should like to ask if it is not consistent with the Sena-approach to this matter which, I might say, I share, that is, ring enforcement procedures. Is it not also consistent with the osophy in the statement made in the New York Times editorial, is effect:

ut a strong case can be made for the idea that effective, non-isan enforcement of the law may in the long run be more certain ugh reliance upon the courts than upon a politically appointed mission whose members change with each Administration.

dministrative agencies were given broad enforcement powers in abor field because it used to be thought that the Federal judiciary an antilabor bias. Whatever the truth of that estimate as applied e courts in the 1930's, it is clearly untrue concerning their ap-ch to racial discrimination today. Of the three branches of gov-ent, the judiciary has consistently been most vigilant and istent in protecting minority rights in recent decades.

r. ALLEN. Yes, sir; that is correct.

r. GAMBRELL. I ask the Senator from Alabama if he would not e that the New York Times editorial in that respect has concisely essed the reason for supporting the court enforcement approach that, in fact, what the Senate committee bill undertakes to do violence to the separation of powers of our Government and, in icular, in instances where the courts have shown vigorous and, ct, in some cases, over vigorous and overzealous efforts to pur-he protection of minority rights.

r. ALLEN. Mr. President, I certainly agree with the junior Sena-from Georgia (Mr. Gambrell). He is making an important contribution to the case for the use of the language in the House b instead of this broad, scatter-shot approach of the committ substitute.

Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the distinguished Sen tor from Georgia on this subject. He very ably points out that t Federal judiciary, more than either of the other branches of t Government, has shown a concern for the civil rights of our peop
He points out that placing executive and judicial functions in o department or in one agency of the Government would do violence the doctrine of separation of powers. Certainly under the committ substitute to S. 2515, the Commission is judge, jury, and prosecut

Mr. President, an amendment was agreed to by the Senate a d or so ago that was supposed to have taken out from the bill t prosecutor role for the Commission. They set up what they call an independent General Counsel. He will be independent of the Com mission, and therefore the Commission would not have the role prosecutor, judge, and jury combined in one department.

It was provided under the amendment—and it is part of the sub stitute as amended—that under the provisions of that amendmen the President appoints a general counsel. Well, to show his indepen ence then, I assume that he would have a right to appoint his region attorneys all over the country, because I assume that the Commissio is going to operate all over the country. It is doing that now and h been for the last 7 years. But we assume that since it is an ind pendent General Counsel, he would have the right to name his region attorneys throughout the country. That is not so at all. Before h appoints anyone under him, he has to have the concurrence of th Commission.

That seems passing strange to me if they are going to be ind pendent. When it comes to appointing them, the General Counsel wi have to go to the Commission. To show his independence, the firs time he tries to appoint somebody under him, he has to come in an ask the Chairman of the Commission, "Will you join with me i appointing John Jones as regional attorney for the Commission?"

The Commission says, "No, I will not do that. I do not like him He is not zealous enough. I can't do that."

He then has to come up with another name. All of that is allowe under the bill as it exists now, the committee substitute which we ar seeking to amend. So what is the position? Well, we had a colloqu on the floor, and I was asking one of the authors of the amendmen about it.

Under the substitute as it exists now, in regard to the assertion tha the Commission is judge, jury, and prosecutor, what is the procedure A man comes in to a representative of the Commission and report that he feels he was denied a job. Or, a woman comes in and say that she was denied a job because she was a woman. A man comes in and says that he was denied employment, that, although there wa a job there, he was denied employment because he was a member o the minority.

The Commission receives the complaint, starts a file on it, I assume investigates it, and if it feels that a case of discrimination exists, the charge or complaint is turned over to the independent General Coun sel, so called.

Then he files charges in such cases as are referred to him by the ommission. Then this independent General Counsel—and I doubt independent counsel is going to do too much of it himself, because will be working with these attorneys and through the attorneys ppointed by him with the concurrence of the Commission—with file harges with the Commission. Then the Commission sits in judgment n these charges and renders its decision.

It is stipulated in the present law that the Commission, if it finds hat an unfair labor practice has been engaged in, will try to com-romise or conciliate the matter.

That is fine. I think that is spendid. That is wonderful if there is a atant case of discrimination and that can be pointed out to the em-loyer. Whether he agrees with it or not, if he feels that the best way t of the matter is to compromise it or settle it or conciliate it, then at is done. And that much of it is fine. But if we go on and turn e complaint or grievance over to the General Counsel for the filing a charge, once they make their finding, they have no way to en-rce it under the present law.

I am inclined to the opinion that this agency should be more than st a conciliation agency and that it should have some way to carry rough on its findings, if they are properly arrived at; and that ings on the amendment.

I feel that some enforcement procedure should be established, and at is the reason for the amendment that has been submitted. It does ovide a method by which the charge of unfair labor practice is ought before a court for the taking of testimony and for a deter-ination of the issues. Then there is a decree by a Federal court. hat will demand and command much more respect than an order the EEOC, arrived at through the performance of its threefold nction—prosecutor, judge, and jury.

Why should not the judiciary perform judicial functions? Why ould not the Commission exercise its investigatory powers? Why ould not the Commission investigate? Why should it not receive mplaints, and let it prosecute. Let it perform those two functions. t it receive complaints, and let it prosecute the complaints, but osecute them in a Federal court, before one of the 398 Federal dis-ct judges. Do not let the Commission make a judicial finding. The esent law allows the Commission to investigate, to judge, to define, d to seek to conciliate. But it does not give the Commission any forcement powers.

The Commission can go in one of two ways. The committee bill uld permit the Commission to investigate and prosecute the matter d to issue a cease-and-desist order. It would have the power of the deral Government assigned to it, and that must be appealed to the irt of appeals before it will be enforceable as the law or the mind the Federal Government.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I am happy to yield to the Senator from North rolina.

Mr. ERVIN. The U.S. court of appeals is the Federal appellate court ving jurisdiction between the U.S. district court and the Supreme urt. Its jurisdiction covers a vast territory comprising many States, es it not?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, that is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. The territory of one U.S. court of appeals—I think it is the fifth circuit—starts on the Atlantic coast and runs out through the State of Texas—all that distance.

Mr. ALLEN. I am sorry to say that it covers Alabama, also.

Mr. ERVIN. Yes, it does cover Alabama. I can understand why the Senator from Alabama expresses his opinion about the circuit court of appeals for that circuit.

Does not the Bill of Rights provide that before a man can be tried for a Federal crime, the case must be tried in a district court close to the city in which the man lives?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. Under the bill, an employer of eight men, a man who has invested his meager resources in his business, can be taken all the way from the coast of Georgia or the Everglades of Florida clear over to Texas to have his day in court.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; and the trial would be on a record; it would not be a trial de novo.

Mr. ERVIN. Can the Senator from Alabama explain to the Senator from North Carolina why, when we have a Bill of Rights, for which we have so much veneration, a Bill of Rights which provides that a person charged with crime shall have a reasonable opportunity to present his case, the proponents want to drag a poor little businessman halfway across the continent to a strange court, in a strange city, to defend his human right to employ persons to make his little business a success rather than a failure?

Mr. ALLEN. It is a bad departure from the concept of our Founding Fathers. It is a return to despotism, from which our Founding Fathers sought to extricate themselves when they separated from the mother country and the tyranny of King George III.

Mr. ERVIN. If there is to be a judicial trial, then the trial should be held in court, if the bill is intended to provide justice.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. The trial should occur in the district near the city where the business involved is located, should it not?

Mr. ALLEN. That is only fair. More facts can be obtained from both sides—the employer and the employee—in that way. Take the case of an employee who is supposedly discriminating against. He certainly would benefit by being able to have the case tried on his home ground, among his peers.

Mr. ERVIN. The case should be tried by witnesses who can come in person, not tried on a record.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. ERVIN. Does the Senator from Alabama agree with the Senator from North Carolina that if we reduced to cold writing, in the form of a record, the testimony of a man as truthful as George Washington is reputed to have been, and the testimony of as big a liar as Ananias was said to be, we could not tell the difference between the two?

Mr. ALLEN. In cold print, they would look very much alike.

Mr. ERVIN. Does the Senator from Alabama recognize that if truth is to be developed by the testimony of witnesses, the body which is to determine what the truth is should have the right to observe the conduct and demeanor of witnesses while they are testifying?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; even a criminal has a right to be confronted in erson by his accusers, not by persons who have testified somewhere se.

Mr. ERVIN. Does not the Senator from Alabama agree with the Sen- tor from North Carolina that it makes a mockery of justice to require at a court hearing be held on a printed record, in the absence of itnesses, and before a tribunal which may be located hundreds and undreds and hundreds of miles away from the place where the busi- ess is located?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes: that is mockery and a travesty of justice.

I thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolina for his ge comments. I know that he has not said all that he wants to say this subject. For that reason, I yield to the distinguished Senator om North Carolina, who has other remarks to make with regard the bill and the amendment.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I advocate the adoption of the amend- ent in the nature of a substitute offered by the distinguished Senator om Alabama in his own behalf and in my behalf.

I should like to point out that the substitute bill, which is in identi- l form to that passed by the House of Representatives, makes a very bstantial change in the method of enforcing Title VII of the Civil ghts Act of 1964. As I construe Title VII of the Civil Rights Act 1964, the aggrieved party—that is, the party who complained that had been discriminated against on the ground of race or religion national origin or sex—would have to bring the action in the dis- ict court in his own behalf to obtain a remedy for the discrimination. The substitute, which is identical with the House-passed bill, has bstantially different provisions on this point. It still preserves the ght of the party aggrieved to bring a suit in the district court for lief against the discrimination allegedly practiced against him, but contains these additional provisions, and I read from page 4 of e substitute:

"(e) If within thirty days after a charge is filed with the Commission or thin thirty days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection), the Commission has been unable to obtain voluntary compliance with this r, the Commission may bring a civil action against the respondent named in charge . . .

Mind you, Mr. President, the Commission brings the action in the strict court at the expense of the taxpayers, because it is a public ency, supported with tax funds, whereas the poor little business- n, with as few as eight employees under the Senate bill, or even der the substitute, would have to bear the entire expense of defend- g against the charges of the Commission in the district court.

Then the substitute further provides, on page 6:

"(h) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is entionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the com- int, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful ployment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, ich may include reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay ayable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case y be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice).

And here the Commission is given full authority, under the substi- te, to sue in the Federal district court, at the expense of the tax- yers, to obtain relief for the aggrieved party, and the right of the aggrieved party, as defined under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, is still retained in full force.

The substitute, which has already passed the House, also contains these further provisions, and I read from the top of page 6:

> Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending final disposition of such charge and the court having jurisdiction over such action shall have the authority to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as is deems just and proper: Provided, That no temporary restraining order or other preliminary or temporary relief shall be issued absent a showing that substantial and irreparable injury to the aggrieved party will be unavoidable.

The last proviso is merely a statement of the rule of equity which ordinarily exists in any suit brought for a temporary restraining order or a temporary injunction, and is a very just and time-honored principle of equity.

The constitution of my State of North Carolina contains a statement of undeniable truth. It says that a frequent recurrence to fundamental principles is absolutely necessary to preserve the blessings of liberty.

I should like to direct the attention of the Senate to the Preamble to the Constitution of the United States of America. I read the Preamble:

> We the people of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

The Preamble to the Constitution states that the people established and ordained that instrument for the following purposes: First, to form a more perfect Union; second, to establish justice; third, to insure domestic tranquility; fourth, to provide for the common defense; fifth, to promote the general welfare; and sixth, to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.

I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that the bill reported by the Senate committee and now pending before the Senate is utterly repugnant in a number of respects to the objectives which the people of the United States had in mind when they ordained and established the Constitution of the United States. From what has been said, the committee bill is incompatible with the objective of the people of the United States to ordain and establish a Constitution to form a more perfect Union.

The Constitution of the United States was drawn to create the United States of America, not to create one centralized, united state. I shall elaborate in detail at a subsequent time why this bill is incompatible with the objective of the Founding Fathers to form a more perfect union of 13 colonies and the States subsequently admitted to the United States of America.

Here we have a Federal agency, which has headquaters in the city of Washington, given power under the committee bill to dictate to every one of the 50 States in the United States, to every county within those 50 States, to every city and town within the borders of those 50 States, to every school board operating within the boundaries of hose 50 States, to every educational institution, in addition to the ublic schools, which undertakes to afford education even at the higher evels, whom they must hire, whom they must promote, and whom they annot discharge.

If Congress should give such concentrated and dictatorial powers o a Federal agency over all the States of America, over all the poli- ical subdivisions of all the States of America, and over the employ- ment practices of every person within the borders of these 50 States who invests his talents or his resources in an enterprise which employs s many as eight or more persons, Congress would do more to destroy han to improve the perfect Union which the people of the United States drafted and ratified the Constitution to ordain and establish.

The committee bill is also utterly repugnant to the objective of the American people expressed in the Preamble to the Constitution to stablish justice. The bill is cleverly contrived to make it virtually mpossible to achieve justice in the employment area which is com- mitted to the jurisdiction of the EEOC by the Senate committee bill. say this for a number of reasons.

In the first place, the Senate committee bill is inconsistent with the ncient principle of the common law that no man can be a judge in his wn case. The common law decreed that no man could be a judge of a ase in which he has an interest in the outcome of the case. The Senate ill clearly would set up a politically appointed commission, which hanges as the national administration changes, composed of men who re responsible to nobody on earth for their official actions, men who re not elected by the people to exercise any governmental function hatever, and who are not answerable to the people in any respect hatsoever; and this provision of the Senate committee bill is not only nconsistent with the purpose of the people who drafted and ratified he Constitution to establish justice, but it is also contrary to the prin- ple of the Declaration of Independence that all just power is derived rom the consent of the governed.

Another reason that the Senate committee bill is repugnant to the bjectives of the people of the United States who drafted and ratified e Constitution to establish justice is that it concentrates in this agency e duty to enforce a specific law, and thereby gives them the same terest in the enforcement of the law that field prohibition agents had the enforcement of the Volstead Act, and which the Alcohol Board mployees had in the enforcement of our revenue laws. It gives this oard the same interest in the enforcement of the law prohibiting dis- imination that the Internal Revenue Service has in the act of ongress which provides for the levying and the collection of revenues. et nobody could be so presumptuous as to say that the Internal Reve- ue Service should have the power to make judicial determination in spect of controversies between the Internal Revenue Service and a xpayer with respect to the validity of the amount of a tax.

It is incompatible with any fair system of justice to vest the power judge whether violations of law have been committed in the people ho are empowered to charge violations of such law, and to judge ether such violations have occurred.

The Supreme Court of the United States declared in the McGrath se, reported in 339 U.S., commencing at page 339, that the function being a prosecutor and a judge—uniting those functions in one agency or one individual—is indefensible; and they struck down th regulations of the Immigration Service which had so united these tw inconsistent and repugnant functions in agents of the Immigratio Service.

The proponents of this bill will assert that they have divorced th function of a prosecutor from that of a judge by the milquetoa amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New Yor (Mr. Javits) and the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania (M Schweiker). The amendment undertakes to create the office of Gener Counsel and undertakes, in a rather specious way, to declare that th General Counsel shall be independent of the EEOC. But the same para graph which engages in this unattained objective makes the Gener Counsel dependent upon the consent of the Commission in respect to th appointment of the regional counsel who are to act on behalf of the supposedly independent General Counsel in the various regions of the United States.

So I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that notwith standing the good motives which actuated these distinguished Senators to offer this amendment to the committee bill, this amendment, in its ultimate analysis, merely represents the symbol of an homage which unrighteousness pays to righteousness.

I have elaborated upon some of the provisions of the Senate-passed bill which I say are absolutely inconsistent with the purpose expressed in the Preamble to the Constitution to establish justice. Let me elaborate a little more on this aspect of the bill.

After charges have been filed with the Commission, and after the charges have been investigated by the commission or some of its members or some of its agents, members of the Commission can prefer charges, based upon their investigation, in which they charge that the respondent has discriminated against some person in employment on the basis of his race or his national origin or his religion or his sex.

It is the Commission which sets in motion the action of the supposedly independent General Counsel; and when the General Counsel, after being so set in motion by the Commission, prosecutes the case, he has to prosecute it before the members of the Commission, who sit as a jury and as a judge—I might add that, under the terms of the Senate bill, they also sit as executioners—of the poor, little businessman who is haled before them by the might of the United States of America and who has to defend himself against the charges investigated, preferred, and judged by the same agency which investigated and preferred the charges.

With all due respect to the proponents of the bill, I would have to submit that, in my judgment, a respondent's chances to obtain a fair trial and a just judgment under these circumstances are about on a par with the chances of a snowball to exist throughout the month of August in the hottest spot in hell.

So I say that this bill commits what I consider—and rightly consider—the greatest affront which can be committed against justice, and that is that it prostitutes the judicial process in order to make as certain as possible that only one side of a proceeding instituted before the Commission can have any reasonable opportunity to win a favorable decision.

To be sure, the Senate committee bill provides that after the members of the Commission or their agents have preferred charges against the respondent and have investigated those charges and have ruled as judges on those charges, the respondent can take an appeal to the Court for redress.

I will proceed further on this in a moment. Before doing so, however, I invite the attention of the Senate again to what the Supreme Court said in the McGrath case, by way of quotation from the report of a committee appointed by the Attorney General of the United States to consider the abominable practice in certain executive departments and agencies of concentrating the investigatory power, the prosecuting power, and the judging power in one individual or one agency.

I read from page 44 of the McGrath decision. It is a quotation from the report of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure which the court cited with approval:

> These types of commingling of functions of investigation or advocacy with the function of deciding are thus plainly undesirable. But they are also avoidable and should be avoided by appropriate internal division of labor. For the disqualifications produced by investigation or advocacy are personal psychological bias which result from engaging in those types of activity; and the problem is simply one of isolating those who engage in the activity. Creation of independent hearing commissioners insulated from all phases of a case other than hearing and deciding will, the Committee believes, go far toward solving this problem at the level of the initial hearing provided the proper safeguards are established to assure the insulation.

Now the Senate committee bill leaves the investigating function and the judging function to the members of the Commission. To be sure, it states, in effect, that a member of the commission or an agent of the commission who has investigated a matter and made charges shall not sit on the trial of those charges, but that provision does not get away from the evil which the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Practices pointed out. It still leaves each member of the commission and each agent of the Commission with investigatory powers in some cases and with judicial powers in other cases. The Supreme Court, by citing this statement of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedures and Practices, has stated that that is not sufficient, that we have to separate the hearing power—not the person that does the hearing—but the hearing power rather than the investigatory power and the adjudicatory power from each other, and that the evil of such a system is not removed by merely allowing the members of the Commission to judge cases which some of them have investigated, and to hear the charges which some of them have made, merely precluding those who exercise the adjudicatory power, rather, on a particular occasion, from exercising the investigatory and charging power on other occasions.

When people desire to accomplish an objective which they fear cannot be accomplished by fair methods, they adopt procedures which are inconsistent with fairness but which at the same time give a little appearance of some remote relationship to fairness.

So the Senate bill says that after the biased Commission and its agents who are charged with the duty of enforcing the law have investigated charges and have preferred charges and have rendered decisions adverse to the respondent on the charges which the Commission or some of its members have preferred against him, that m spondent can apply to the circuit court for some pretended relief.

I pointed out a moment ago, in colloquy with the distinguish Senator from Alabama, that when the provisions of the Constitutio were written to govern the places where criminal trials were to be h in Federal court, the sixth amendment declared:

> In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a spee > and public trial by an impartial judge of the State and district wherein t > crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously a > certained by law.

That amendment sets forth the places where those who drafted an ratified the Constitution thought that criminal charges should tried and determined. They said it had to be in the district in whic the trial was alleged to have been committed. Yet, under the Senat committee bill, the review of the decisions of the Commission on th charges investigated by it, preferred by it, and judged by it, mus be in a circuit court. Some of the circuit courts sit at points hundred of miles away from the place where the alleged unfair or discrimi natory practice occurred. That is bad enough. In my judgment, th old adage, "All seasons for justice and in every place a temple," would require as a matter of fairplay that a man be given a trial, or th right of review from an adverse judgment of the Commission in a court which sits somewhere in the neighborhood of where he reside or where his alleged illegal act occurred. So that these provisions giving jurisdiction to the circuit courts, are an affront to any fai system of justice which contemplates, as the sixth amendment does that a man shall be tried somewhere in the locality where the crim is being investigated and reviewed and obviously somewhere in the lo cality where he resides. But the attempt of this bill to frustrate th purpose of the men and women who drafted the Constitution to estab lish justice does not stop there.

I invite the attention of the Senate to certain provisions on page 42, 43, 44, and 45 of the Senate committee bill, that provide that an employer has been condemned for alleged discriminatory practices in employment by the EEOC on charges investigated and made by the EEOC and if he goes to a distant court of appeals seeking re lief from a judgment that the law ought not to have ever permitted to have been made—that is, a judgment by biased, willful judges—he finds that he cannot get any relief whatever if there is more than a scintilla of evidence tending to support the conclusion of a biased commission.

Page 42 of the Senate committee bill, in lines 16, 17, 18, and 19 reads

> The findings of the commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported > by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive

Page 43 of the bill has a similar provision with respect to the burden of evidence where the Commission hears additional evidence and modi fies the original findings. It states on page 43, beginning with line 1 and ending with line 6:

> The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new find > ings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such > modified or new findings, which finds with respect to questions of fact, if sup > ported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be > conclusive.

Mr. President, I charge that those provisions are placed in the bill disable the court from reversing the findings of fact in decisions of Commission even in cases where the court finds that the findings of Commission are repugnant to the greater weight or preponance of the evidence. To be sure, some similar provisions with reect to the version of the evidence can be found in some of the laws acted by Congress at the instance of regulatory bodies. But I subt that the fact that iniquitous legislation had been enacted by Conss in times past is no justification for enacting new iniquitous islation, as Congress would do if it should pass the Senate comttee bill.

To argue that because iniquitous legislation appears in other areas ere regulatory bodies wish to compel courts to affirm their rulings re much that may be repugnant to the preponderance of the evice or its greater weight is no justification for doing so here.

We might as well argue that we can argue with equal intelligence t because murder and stealing have occurred in times past, we ght to declare that murder is meritorious and larceny is legal.

In reference to reviewing the other circumstances by the courts, it stated on page 44 of the Senate bill that:

he findings of the commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive.

On page 45 we find this additional provision with respect to these er cases under review:

he commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new find-, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such ified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact, if ported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be clusive . . .

These are provisions which are designed to bar a court which rews the findings and judgments of the EEOC to discover what is with respect to such findings. They are designed to make the rt accept as conclusive 1, 2, 3, 4, or 5 percent of the evidence in the even though 95 percent of the other evidence shows that the findss of the Commission are untrue.

I submit here that if the substitute amendment offered by the disguished junior Senator from Alabama and myself is not agreed to the Senate, I shall offer an amendment to the Senate bill which uld strike out these clauses I have read concerning substantial evice being conclusive and would provide that where a court reviews findings and judgment of the Commission, the court shall be at lib- to disregard the findings of fact of the Commission if it concludes those findings of fact are not supported by the preponderance of evidence.

I could site multitudes of cases on this point, but it is the case of Ling Hosiery Company, Inc., v. Margulies, 364 Pennsylvania 45, Atlantic 2d 854, which says that:

roof by a preponderance of evidence is the lowest degree of evidence recogd in the administration of justice, and that the evidence which the burdened y offers does not become proof unless it preponderates in evidentiary weight ist the opposing evidence.

In other words, the court there declares what is recognized as the in all civil cases in the United States—that the prevailing party—that is, the party who makes the charges—must establish that cha by a preponderance of evidence; and that he fails to establish charge unless the evidence he offers preponderates in evidenti weight against the opposing evidence. This is a far different requi ment from the provisions of the bill, which burdens the courts in th research for proof when a respondent seeks review from the findi of fact and judgment entered by the Commission on charges inve gated and preferred by the Commission itself.

What is proof by a preponderance of evidence?

Proof by a preponderance of evidence means that the jury must believe t the facts asserted are more probably true than false. Preponderance of evide is a phrase which, in the last analysis, means probability of the truth.

The first of this quotation was from the Oregon case of Cook v. Michael, 214 Oregon 513, 330 Pacific 2d 1026, 1032. The second w from a Kentucky Federal court case, Asher v. Fox, 424 Federal 2 727, 729.

Then, in the cases of Marcantal v. Aetna Casualty and Surety Co pany, a Louisiana case reported in 219 Southern 2d, 180, at page 18 we have this definition of "preponderance of evidence."

By a preponderance of evidence is meant simply, evidence which is of great weight, or more convincing, that that which is offered in opposition to it; th is, evidence which is, as a whole, shows the fact of causation sought to be prov is more probable than not.

I could multiply the quotations of what is meant by "preponderan of evidence" scores and scores—yes, hundreds—of times. Let us s what "substantial evidence" is.

In the case of Kelly v. Celebreze, 420 Federal 2d, page 614, we rea

Substantial evidence is more than a scintilla but less than a preponderanc

In the case of Carpenter v. Flemming, 178 Federal Supplementar 791, page 793, a Federal court sitting in West Virginia declared:

Under a statute providing for final decision of a social security disabilit claim must be accepted as conclusive if there is substantial evidence to suppor Substantial evidence is more than a scintilla but less than a preponderance.

I could cite scores and scores of cases to the effect that substantia evidence is merely evidence which is not entirely imaginary or whic is more than a scintilla but is less than a greater weight or preponde ance of the evidence.

Some courts define "substantial evidence" as evidence which i merely sufficient to carry a case to a jury and resist a nonsuit. Unde that ruling, if 5 percent of the evidence is to one effect, and 95 pe cent of the evidence tends to show that that effect is not true, then ther is a substantial degree of evidence.

So everything in the procedures which the Senate bill designe to authorize for the avowed purpose, the professed purpose, the pla purpose of doing justice is repugnant to every sound rule devised b the experience of the English-speaking race to secure justice and re veal truth.

The Senate passed bill is repugnant to the purpose declared in th Preamble of the Constitution, "to form a more perfect union," an the purpose, also declared in the Preamble of the Constitution, "t establish justice." It simply rapes and ravishes the provision of th assertion in the Preamble of the Constitution that "the people of th ited States ordain and establish this Constitution for the United tes" and to "secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our terity."

have had the privilege of serving in three legislative bodies: nely, the Legislature of North Carolina, the House of Representa- s of the United States for a brief period and the Senate of the ited States for 17 years.

assert, without fear of contradiction, that this bill does more to troy the freedom of the American people than any legislative pro- al which ever came before any of those three legislative bodies ile I was privileged to be a member of them.

say the entire foundation underlying this bill is unsound. The bill s not make illegal the hiring of any person by any employer as . Under the terms of this bill and under the terms of every other ciple of law, the hiring of one man by another to perform serv- for an employer is a perfectly legal external act. Under the law an can hire anybody he pleases and under this bill he can hire body he pleases, as long as he does not have some intent down in innermost recesses of his mind that accompanies that act.

have a right, if I am an employer, even under the Senate bill, to anybody I please as long as I am not moved to hire him because of race or because of his religion or because of his national origin or use of his sex. It is only the intent or the motive which accom- ies the hiring which makes the hiring illegal under this bill and er the original Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

r. President, I respectfully submit that there is nothing iniquitous free American preferring to hire a man of one race rather than a of another race, or preferring to hire a man of one religion rather a man of another religion, or preferring to hire a man of one onal origin rather than a man of another national origin, or pre- ing to hire a person of one sex rather than a person of another But under this bill a hiring prompted by any of these prefer- s—and all discrimination is a preference for one man over an- r—is made illegal. A commission is selected because it is biased rn itself into a psychologist and determine from innermost recesses man's mind, which they cannot see, whether the innocent motive h Congress declares iniquitous accompanied the hiring.

his is a dangerous law for that reason. In the first place, it makes gal acts which are entirely natural for a human being to do. I k it is natural, and certainly not iniquitous, for an American em- er to prefer a person whose national origin is American rather a person whose national origin is foreign. Yet under this bill, if American employer prefers to employ an American, and does em- an American, in preference to a person of foreign origin, he is ared to be an iniquitous man, performing an illegal act, and he have charges preferred against him by the Commission and have Commission judge the validity of the charges which it has already stigated and found to be true. The notion that he can get any ce at the hands of such a Commission is unrealistic. Rather than justice in court and have the court determine the truth by the evi- e, which shows what is true rather than false, they create artificial s to prevent the court from being free to search for the truth.

I have very little faith in the capacity of people to determine motives of other people. In this respect, the bill is different from ev other law. Under every other law we punish people for external a which are iniquitous, and under this bill we castigate and punish p ple, by unfair methods, for thoughts. I do not think men are qu capable of doing that.

I want to read from the 7th verse of the 16th Chapter of the Fi Book of Samuel:

> But the Lord said unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the hei of his stature; because I have refused him: for the Lord seeth not as n seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh the heart.

Here a commission is to be appointed that is going to assume exercise the power of the Almighty—not to judge men by extern appearances, not to judge men by their external acts, not to judg men because they hire this man or that, but to judge men on the bas of what the commission thinks or imagines they had in their hear at the time they did what was otherwise a perfectly natural and pe fectly legal act, namely, hiring an individual to perform service f them.

One of the proponents of the bill stated on the floor that he su ported this bill because it was designed to enforce human rights. W have a habit of using cliches to explain or justify our actions.

Mr. President, I submit that if a man belonging to a minority rac or professing a minority religion, or having a particular racial origi or a person of a particular sex, has a human right to seek employmen because of those factors, that is, because he is a member of a minorit race or of a minority religion, or of a foreign national origin, then, b the same token, a man of a majority race, or a man of a majority re ligion, or a man of American origin, has an equal human right t seek employment; and that any law which undertakes to compel em ployers to hire people of a minority race or a minority religion or minority national ancestry in preference to a man of a majority rac or a majority religion or a majority national origin is not a law to pro mote equality, but a law to promote discrimination.

I also submit that there are such things as human rights, and maintain there is no kind of rights recognized in the law except huma rights. But if there is such a thing as a human right, the supposed free American who has a little capital or has some talent, who invest his resources and talents in a little business for the purpose of makin a livelihood for himself and his family and a profit, has a right t select as his employees the persons who he believes will aid him t make his business a success rather than a failure; and I say that whe the Federal Government undertakes to deny him that right, it i denying him a human right, and is engaged in a course of conduc which is incompatible with freedom.

You know, when I hear people advocate bills which are repugnan to freedom, they so often prate about the superiority of human rights over property rights. In 1946, when I had the privilege of servin a few months in the House of Representatives, there was a Congress man who claimed to be a liberal in the modern use of that very much abused and misleading term who used to rise on the floor of the House

Representatives every time he had an opportunity and proclaim his nviction that human rights are superior to property rights.
One day, however, a Member of the House who might be described something of a moth-eaten conservative, in the much-abused modn-day use of that term "conservative," became aroused while the ngressman was expounding superiority of human rights over prop-y rights, and silenced him with a question. I shall never forget that asion.
This person I have designated as having the appearance, in the dern parlance, of being a moth-eaten conservative, arose and stated s question:
He said, "In the early days of this Nation, a settler would go out o the wilderness and carry his rifle to protect himself and his family ainst the Indians, his Bible so that he might strengthen his faith the Divine, and an ax which he might use for material purposes." said, "This frontiersman, when he got out into the forest, took ax and cut down some trees, and he fashioned those trees into a le cabin which he used to shelter himself, his wife, and his children."
This old man who I say could be described as a moth-eaten convative then said, "Now, all of us, including my friend who extols an rights over property rights, will agree, I think, that that fron-sman had a right to use that cabin erected by his own hands in wilderness as a shelter for himself, his wife, and his children." en he said, "Mr. Speaker, the question I put to my friend is this:
s the right of that frontiersman to occupy that cabin as a home for iself and his family a property right or a human right?"
Well, the person to whom the question was addressed never answered question, and I would have to testify on his behalf that subsequent hat time, he did not so frequently extol the superiority of human hts over property rights.
As a matter of fact, there is no such thing as a property right. There ot a single piece of property or a single inanimate object of any d which has any rights in this Nation under the law of this Nation.
ery right belongs to a human being, and in that sense is a human ht.
t is a human right which the law gives to a man to acquire, to own, se, or to dispose of property, and it is this legal right which has le this Nation the most powerful economic entity the earth has ever wn.
There is a professor of law at New York University who is one of most valiant fighters for the preservation of freedom in human hts of any man of my acquaintance. He wrote a book entitled "The or Policy of the Free Society." This is Prof. Sylvester Petro. I t to read some words from a chapter of his book entitled "Property hts, Human Rights, and the State." He says:

migration of the right of private property usually begins with a sharp dis-ion between "human rights" and "property rights." Those who habitually e this distinction normally go on to contend that society—and by society persons usually mean government—may qualify property rights without usly affecting the "essential human freedoms." They argue, indeed, that restrictions on property rights which they favor will in fact expand the ntial human freedoms."
ere is no truth in any of these assertions. Property rights are human rights, nothing else. The various human rights, comprehended in the general right of private property cannot be neatly distinguished, portioned out, and separ in the real world of action; those are things which cannot be done satisfacto even in analytical abstraction. Pruning and excisions, divestitures and re-all tions of property rights, all necessarily amount to arbitrary action which re human freedom and social productivity. Everyone now realizes that slaver arbitrary; but few, apparently, know why it is arbitrary. For most people oppose slavery are in favor of discriminatory taxation, in spite of the fact such taxation is arbitrary in exactly the same sense that slavery is arbitrar

I digress from the reading a moment to note this. If the law say A, "You must work for B even though you do not choose to do s that is slavery, by any definition of the term. If the law says to "You must hire B to work for you, even in a small personal compa even though you do not want to do so or even though you pre someone else of another race or religion or national origin," you m not call that slavery, but you certainly cannot call it freedom. It only a question of degree between the servitude you impose up the one man and the servitude you impose upon another. Either one these servitudes is an infringement of freedom.

I continue reading from Dr. Petro's book:

Some objections to the right of private property are of a relatively superfic kind, easily cleared up by placing the right in its appropriate social context. T right of private property did not spring full-blown upon the world. Nor did t intimately related idea of the strictly enforceable contract have an easy ti of it. Sir Henry Maine was of the opinion, indeed, that "the positive duty sulting from one man's reliance on the word of another is among the slowe conquests of advancing civilization." As defined in this book, property a contract rights are the end products of a long and fitful evolutionary proces they are understood and appreciated only by men in a relatively sophisticat stage of development.

The evolution to the final, symmetrical form was dictated by the necessiti which presented themselves to our forebears who wished to live in free a productive societies. Private property in its broad form commended itself to tho men because it worked. It offered both freedom and order. It set loose the co structive energies of men, and at the same time constituted a rational, soci basis for the integration of the activities of all men. It was a great centr organizing principle that carried within itself the idea of the society which mig be both free and harmonious. Private property in its comprehensive form is n merely indispensable to the free society: it is the free society itself. Once th is perceived, a good many of the objections disappear.

Yet there are still many who rebel against the comprehensive definitio who insist that the "good of society" -a concept which they never define-absolutely requires that the state be generally empowered at all time to expand diminish or revise the right of private property. These are the people who s red when they hear the words "inalienable property rights," no matter how car fully those words may be used. The idea of property rights secured to all pe sons against invasion by the state or anyone else, seems hopelessly "dated," eve "totalitarianism" and comprehensive property rights as the central principles o social organization, they call themselves "liberals," "progressives," or some othe such modest name, and announce that they have found a "middle way."

Beyond any question, application of the private property principle does crea difficult problems at times. Emotional and intellectual difficulties present them selves even when the general principle itself is rightly understood. The mor complicated the society, moreover, the more frequently do difficulties of applic this arise. But this kind of thing is unavoidable. As a matter of fact, in the fre society it really reflects the existence of a state of affairs which most find highl desirable. For property problems become the more complicated the more widel diffused the property rights happen to be, and the more intensely human affair are interrelated. Restrict property rights narrowly, reduce personal autonom to the minimum, and you will have a minimum of property problems. Take awa private property rights completely, destroy entirely the autonomy of the perso and you have no private property problems at all. If no person legally owns controls anything, including himself, the problem of control is solved quite simpl by force. If all property rights are vested in the state (that is, in the strongest ce in the community) problems of personal right likewise do not arise to plicate the social structure. A monolithic structure of this kind may appeal to e. But it is no way to achieve personal freedom, well-being, and security.

s to the so-called "middle way" in current usage, this is actually a misnomer. sonal private-property rights, in the sense of the common-law doctrines and fashioned liberal political theory, represent as meaningful a pursuit of the ddle way" between the political absolutes of anarchy and socialism as straight king has yet produced. One may, in short, make a respectable argument to the ct that the private-property way is the only meaningful "middle way," since litarianism and anarchy are the only other pure forms of social organization ich may be meaningfully conceived.

But the "middle way" as used in current debate is only a semantically attrac- synonym for the interventionist state. It defines a condition in which the e is at all times authorized to modify personal property rights at will: the e may expand or contract the rights of persons as political exigency may n to dictate to those in public office. The perpetual dynamic equilibrium of sonal rights as here defined is anathema to the interventionists.

Many interventionists insist, it is true, upon respect for the rights of free ch, free thought, and free press. But they are apparently not aware of the y of all personal rights. They do not see that all personal rights have a com- core in the autonomy of the person, that the so-called "human rights" are ely one surface manifestation of the elemental right of private property.

he interventionist state is actually a state moving intermittently toward the plete destruction of all the personal freedom which it can reach. As such, in s of formal analysis it must be defined as a totalitarian state, since its own ponents insist that the state is the source of all rights. In empirical terms it ot be called a potential totalitarian state.

ow long will freedom of the press endure, if interventionism finally triumphs? edom of the press is nothing more nor less than the condition which exists n publishers have their property rights intact. Even in the United States y, when interventionism is still struggling to substitute political exigency for ate property rights, interventionists have unconsciously shown what they inely think of freedom of the press. The term "captive press" gets a great of use from trade unionists and from politicians who consider themselves derates."

interventionism finally triumphs, will its less moderate apostles limit them- es to this mere vilification of those who oppose them? Have interventionists, n they have come to full power and when political conditions have been pro- us, ever so limited themselves? Is not vilification always the first step— only the first step—of demagogues? When Juan Peron tired of freedom of press in Buenos Aires, he expropriated the publishers. If "it" happens here, opriation in one form or another will be the means used. The basis for such opriation exists in the way that interventionists look at property rights, king of them as subject to revision whenever the "good of society" so re- es. The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics may very well today have a law bill of rights which "guarantees" both freedom of speech and freedom of the s. But what good is such a guarantee when no private person or group may a printing establishment?

is inaccurate to describe a press based on private property rights as "cap- " Publishers under such conditions are limited in what they print only by r own personal views or interests and by the libel laws—and those laws are iselves an expression of the property right in the integrity of one's character. inaccurate also to say that the editorial policies of newspapers are deter- d by advertisers. Businessmen may be the greatest source of advertising rev- of one branch of the press, the dailies and the other periodicals. But adver- g revenues rise and fall in accordance with the circulation of the particular spaper or magazine, not with the secret or public ideology of the publisher . . . e in the United States compose a still largely free society, based on private erty and freedom of contract. But, as a matter of history, the distortions of principles of property and contract which mar our society trace to the pgoguery implicit in the characterization of our pioneering businessmen as ber barons" and "malefactors of great wealth."

Mr. President, Professor Petro expounds the doctrine that the right private property and the right to contracts are human rights and each is essential to the existence of the country as a free society.

This bill would interfere very greatly with the right of contract cannot see why, as an American, there is anything iniquitous in ploying a fellow American, because I prefer to do so, rather t having to employ a person of another national origin. I do not th there is anything iniquitous in a person preferring to employ a m ber of his own race, or of his own religion, or a person of the sa national origin as himself.

Just calling it iniquitous does not make it so, but, unfortunat when the country embarks upon a policy of restricting freedom order to deprive people of their liberty to choose those whom t seek to employ to make their business a success, no one can again the fact that it is not iniquitous. It is only iniquitous because i declared by act of Congress to be so. An act of Congress does not ma that iniquitous which is natural and the right of every American.

The trouble with laws of this kind is well illustrated in an acti which is frequently taken in employment cases. We have the Office Federal Contract Compliance in virtually every case, and the EE in many cases, compelling businessmen of America to practice d crimination in employment. Congress attempted to prevent that. C gress attempted to make it so that each case would be judged on merits, that it be judged as an individual case. So Congress wr into the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that no employer should be co pelled to employ people of any race, religion, national origin, or s by quotas; and yet we have decisions made almost every day in t Office of Federal Contract Compliance to order the businessmen America to practice discrimination in reverse by hiring a person of particular race, a particular religion, of a particular national orig of a particular sex. That is discrimination in reverse.

I say, in all seriousness, that I do not see how we can expect cri inally minded people to obey the laws when men in public office d obey the very laws and the very Executive order they are supposed enforce. The Executive order which the Office of Federal Contra Compliance in the Department of Labor is charged with enforci is an Executive order which says that there shall be no discriminati in Government employment or by a person having Government co tracts, on the basis of race, religion, national origin, or sex. Yet t very Office of Federal Contract Compliance makes it a consistent pra tice to violate the very Executive order it is charged with the duty enforcing. It orders businessmen who desire Government contracts employ persons of a particular race, or a particular religion, or particular national origin, or a particular sex—or particularly pe sons of a particular race according to fixed or variable numbers, pr portions, percentages, quotas, goals, or ranges, and thus violates t very Executive order it is charged with the duty of enforcing. T same thing on occasion can be said about the EEOC.

I do not see how we can better conditions in America and promot law and order while governmental agencies created for the avowe purposes of preventing discrimination in employment may discri inate in employment.

I expect to offer an amendment to the original bill in the eve the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama behalf of himself and myself is rejected by the Senate. I hope th this substitute amendment will be agreed to. It provides that we wi ve enforcement in the courts. It affords an adequate procedure by ich the EEOC, suing at the expense of the American taxpayers, n have a right of vindication in the court according to the estabhed rules of procedure and the established rules of evidence. And it is all that any American ought to ask for. He ought not to ask have specific procedures established for or designed to prevent the lfillment of the men and women who drafted the Constitution to ablish justice.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and suggest the absence of a orum.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator with-d his request?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I withhold my request.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) ill to further promote equal employment opportunities for Ameriworkers.

Ir. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to announce on the part of the ator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) and myself that at 3:30 hall move to table the substitute.

Ir. President, I would like to state to the Senate our reasons for s action. No one knows better than I the feelings of Senators with ard to a tabling motion.

ersonally, I do not remember having made, perhaps, more than or two. I have had a long career, and I am very respectful of ators' opportunities to debate and consider questions at the greatest gth they feel they should. I have myself been cut off far more often tabling motions than I have ever cut off other Senators. But in particular case, I will explain why, not because I am an advocate he bill, but because I think this is almost a classic example of the per use of the tabling motion.

Ve have been given notice that this is the beginning of a filibuster.
the notice has been given in unequivocal terms. I invite the ntion of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen) to his words I am about to read to the Senate. I have the written record from Official Reporter. The Senator from Alabama said as follows:

ie Dominick amendment failed of adoption. The proponents of cease and st by commission fiat won that battle. It may have been a most expensive ory, because if the junior Senator from Alabama correctly interprets the ng and the determination of a large number of Senators, this bill may not — he says "may not"—be forced to a vote in the Senate. That would be a ie happening. In many respects that would be a reaching out for more the Senate is willing to give, going farther than public opinion would ire.

seems to be obvious that the Senator from Alabama would not e said that if it did not represent his own feeling; and from the cations of the debate which we have already heard, coupled with statement, I think we get the point. I do not think we need to e a finger put in our eyes to understand exactly what to expect.
addition, the move which has been made is clearly an unnecessary
We have voted five times. When we take into consideration first vote, the vote on the motion to table the first vote, the vote he reconsideration of the first vote, then the second vote, then the motion to table reconsideration of that second vote, we have vo five times on the Dominick amendment. It seems to me that that a very adequate expression by the Senate.

The Senator from Alabama himself admitted, when he submitt the substitute, that it is open to any amendment to which the origi bill is open. He also said—and the Chair confirmed this—that original bill also is open to amendment in any respect. Indeed, Chair ruled that it is open in two degrees. So nothing whatever accomplished by substitutes of any kind of character except an opp tunity to reargue and revote on the Dominick amendment.

After all, I think we have a right to vote on a tabling motion cause an unnecessary action is being asked of the Senate, an acti which does not represent any decision by the Senate, which iss substantial requirement for a decision on a procedural ground; th is, no conceivable opportunity to amend is cut off, or to table, to move in any way that the opponents of the legislation desire, tabling; and obviously, as they themselves were entirely recepti to any amendment that would substitute in the shape it ought to in, they do not have to extend, as far as they are concerned, as is very clear that the essential argument is that it is simply a "re-d of the Dominick amendment.

It is entirely the privilege of the opponents to talk as long as th can and as long as the rules will allow. If we wish to invoke clotur we know exactly how to do it. That is fine and legitimate. But least the Senate ought to take a direct approach to that questio Has it heard enough upon this measure, and does it now want t restrict amendments to those which are at the desk? Second, does wish to provide 1 hour for each of the 100 Senators? Or does it wis to hear more debate? Those are legitimate questions, and we may required to decide them. From what I see, we probably will. Bu why have the screen of this substitute as the subject for debate whe its only purpose, obviously, is to reconsider the amendment, whic as I say, has already been voted on five times?

For these reasons, I believe a tabling motion is perfectly prope
I speak of this in a sense of explanation, because I am not happ about such a motion; I do not like it; as I say, I have been the victi of a tabling motion far more often than I have been the beneficiary
I seek to justify the reason why, in this particular case, such a motio is proper.

Also, as a very necessary part of making this motion, I wish t spread upon the Record the differences between the House bill, whic is sought to be substituted, and the Senate bill. The differences ar significant and substantial, the most significant being the difference between cease and desist and court enforcement. In the second place State and local people are covered by the Senate bill, but are no covered by the House bill.

Third, the House bill does not extend coverage to more privat enterprise employers; the Senate bill does, to employers of eight o more persons, as distinguished from 25 in the House bill; and Fourth, educational institutions are included in the Senate bill.

Other amendments which relate to the importance of whether th Senate bill should be the one that prevails include one which deal with the coverage of Federal employees and the extent of coverage ey include one which deals with the transfer of pattern and practice its from the Department of Justice to the Commission after 2 years.

Another deals with backpay limitations for 2 years from the date complaint, which is in the House bill, rather than from the date the charge—that is, the filing of the charge—with the Commission, ich is now in the Senate bill, as it is amended.
There are other differences, but I have given the basic and signifint differences which, it seems to us, dictate that the Senate has superior instrument for working the Senate's will on the House l.
But in the final essence, the matter is very clear. This is simply effort to reargue and revote on the Dominick amendment. It results giving us an issue that is not a substantive issue that ought to tie further debate on the bill. If we are going to get cloture, let us it directly on the fundamental issue involved; namely, does the nate wish to hear further debate on the bill, and how much? Or es it wish to limit debate, remembering that every Senator is liml in his right to speak?

Mr. ALLEN rose.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I will yield for a question, of course.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from w York allow me to speak for some 15 minutes, with the assurance t I will return the floor to the Senator, so that I may make a state-nt with regard to the pending amendment?

Mr. JAVITS. I am sorry to tell the Senator that I am unable to do t, and that I do not wish to yield my right to the floor, because I st make my motion. But I will certainly yield to the Senator and ask nimous consent that he may make a statement in lieu of a question hout my losing my right to the floor. I have talked for 5 or 6 nutes—I will say 5 minutes—and will yield him 5 minutes, if that greeable to the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I appreciate the Senator's position of kindness and cour-. That is all the junior Senator from Alabama was asking for. He ees that the Senator from New York should have the floor back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. It is 5 minutes, then; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New rk made two points, as the junior Senator from Alabama underod his remarks: One, that on account of some remarks by the junior ator from Alabama to the effect that this bill without the minick amendment having been added might be difficult to bring t vote, and that for that reason he is going to move to table this endment, and he indicated that he would go on with a motion of ure, indicating that the remarks of the junior Senator from Ala-a provoked that action. Let me say that the junior Senator from bama, in coming to the Capitol this morning from his home in ginia, heard on the radio that the proponents of the measure were ming to file a cloture motion. So the Senator from Alabama does feel that any action by him has brought the proponents of the meas-to that decision.

The Senator also stated that this is rearguing the Dominick amend-nt and that is all it is. The junior Senator from Alabama begs to er on that point, because the amendment offered by the distin-shed Senator from North Carolina and myself substitutes the language, not of the Dominick amendment, but of the House b which a majority of the Members of the House have passed as t proper method of giving the EEOC more authority to enforce findings.

The junior Senator from Alabama respectfully submits that this amendment is adopted and it does become the bill and the bill passed by the Senate, it will go to the House and, it being the exa language that the House has already approved, we will get earli approval of the bill, and this additional power will have been co ferred on the EEOC; whereas, if the amendment or a similar one not adopted, there is a good chance we will have no bill whatsoeve

So this is not a reargument of the Dominick amendment—far fro it. This is saying that the Senate, if it will agree to the House la guage, in all likelihood will get a bill, there being a chance that bill will be enacted if this amendment is not adopted.

I yield back my time.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, I move to table the pending substitute.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that furthe proceedings under the quorum call be discontinued.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The rollcall was resumed and concluded, and the following Senator answered to their names:

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama seek ognition?

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. Is that in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order. There has been business since last quorum. The ordering of the yeas and nays is business, under Senate precedents, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll, and the following ators answered to their names:

o the motion to table the Allen amendment was agreed to.

Ir. Cotton. Mr. President, before the next amendment is offered, ould like to use not more than 5 minutes for some observations on bill itself. I wish to get these remarks into the Record at this time use I am compelled to be away for at least part of tomorrow.

Ir. President, the Senator from New Hampshire voted for every l rights bill back through the years in the 17 years he has been in Senate except for the so-called omnibus civil rights bill of 1964. reason that the Senator from New Hampshire could not vote for 1964 bill, although he voted for cloture in order that the Senate ld have its opportunity to work its will on the measure, was be- e of Title VII in that bill.

he Senate will recall how the coverage of the Equal Employment portunity Commission was automatically expanded over a 4-year od. The first year after it became law, the application of unfair loyment practices and unfair discrimination between color, sex, onal origin, and so forth, would only apply to those establish- ts employing at least 100 employees. The second year it automati- y would go down to 75. In the third year, it would automatically lown to 50. In the fourth year it would automatically go down 5.

t that time the Senator from New Hampshire approached the dis- uished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), who was man- g the bill. At that time it was the position of the Senator from Hampshire that he could not support a measure that enabled the eral Government to permit discrimination in employment in those blishments employing a small number of employees.

offered an amendment to hold it at 100 instead of dropping it to 25. not want to go into that detail. I was and am perfectly willing to support legislation creating a Commission and creating machinery to prevent discrimination in employment so far as it concerns large plants, plants large enough to permit discrimination by reason of the policies of a corporation, the policies of a labor union, or the policies of a hiring hall.

But I am one who happens to live in a little county-seat town of 10,000 population. In my State there are many small but active communities. When a country bank, for instance, employs only 30 or 40, or even 50 employees, or a small insurance agency has perhaps only 15 or 20 employees, and the proprietor or the organization operating that business selects an employee, that is an intensely personal relationship. It is almost like selecting a partner. For the Federal Government to move into situations involving small business institutions and try to enforce a discriminatory law which forces the employer to deal with this nationality or that nationality, this color or that color, is a naked display of Federal power that goes far beyond the reasonable views of those who framed this Republic.

Furthermore, I feel that it impedes rather than promotes fairness and a lack of discrimination anywhere. For instance, if a black man has worked long and hard, has built up a small business, employs 25, 30, or 35 employees, and is prospering through his ability and his long years of hard work, I would not, for the life of me, want to be a party to going in and saying to him, "You have to employ so many white people. You cannot give persons of your own race a chance in this business that you have built up." I am still referring to a small business, not to a factory, not to an industry, not to a large department store, or any enterprise like that. I cannot understand how any law can be administered justly that applies to small institutions.

Furthermore, there be many a case, as a practical matter, when an employer having a small business wants to give a break, perhaps, to a person of a different color, or to one who has not had many opportunities or much education. That employer also knows that once he admits that he is in need of an extra employee, and he gives such a person a break, he cannot fire him if it develops he is not a good employee.

There are white men who are industrious and white men who are lazy—just as there are black men who are industrious and black men who are lazy. Perhaps I should not say it but there may also be women who are industrious and women who are not industrious.

A person having a small business depends on his associates with almost a family relationship. He is not going to indicate that he needs another employee until he gets the one he wants, if he knows that once he has given a less advantaged person a chance, he is stuck with him; and while he could fire a white Anglo-Saxon Protestant, if he turns around and has to discharge a member of another nationality or another color, he may find himself in trouble with his Government.

So I took the position that unless the limit for Title VII, which I had hoped would be held to 100, was held at 50, I could not vote for the entire measure, and I did not do so.

I was pointed out and subjected to a good deal of attack because I was one of five Senators from north of the Mason-Dixon Line who voted against that particular civil rights bill.

he measure before us reduces the number to eight employees. It oses certain safeguards, but it permits the Commission to go into an's business, if he employs just eight employees. If it is a family ness, he can be harassed, penalized, and handicapped in trying to e his business go, because he does not have the free and full opportty to employ those with whom he has been closely associated and hom he has complete confidence.

will be said, and it probably has been said, that the enforcement of the Commission would not, in its discretion, harass the persons ing a very small business or a family business. That is the reason business institutions that are connected with religious organizas are permitted to discriminate in favor of members of their own gious group. Nevertheless, it is never safe to write into the statutes pportunity for a naked display of Federal power in such a way oppress and harass citizens of this country simply on the assumpthat whoever may be charged with enforcement will do so care- and discretely.

ould not vote for the civil rights bill of 1964, even though I was to support every other title and section in the bill, because of my g objection on the point I have just spoken about—and I feel s strongly about it now.

gardless of any other amendment, if, when we come to the final ge of this measure, it still places in the hands of the Commission ower to deal with small business institutions of eight—which is ulous—or 25 or 35 or 50, I shall be compelled to vote against whole measure, just as I was compelled to vote against the civil s bill of 1964.

ppreciate the patience of the Senate. I wanted to get that state- clearly in the Record at some time during the debate so that the time comes when and if I am compelled to vote against this ure, the reasons will be clear.

ield the floor.

. PEARSON. Mr. President, the Civil Rights Act of 1964 made that every person in this Nation is entitled to equal treatment regard to a job. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commisunder the provisions of that act was charged with a responsibility aking that policy a reality. But the only enforcement power ed the EEOC was the authority to seek voluntary compliance the law, a weakness which the legislation before us today would ct.

ink it is clear that the majority of this Nation's employers recogthe intent of Congress to insure fair employment practices and abided by the law. But it is also clear that unemployment dismination still exists today, a situation which fair-minded people can- nd should not tolerate.

. President, the immediate issue before us is not whether the C should have enforcement powers. Rather the issue is what proes must be used in the exercise of that power. As the Senate is , the House of Representatives has approved a measure which res the EEOC to go court to enforce their rulings. The legislabefore us here, however, would authorize the EEOC, following vestigation of unlawful employment practices and an administrative hearing on such complaints, to issue an appropriate enforcer order. That order would be subject to a full and complete review ir U.S. courts of appeals.

It has been argued that this grant of authority is without prece in the law. But that is not the case. The National Labor Relat Board and the Federal Trade Commission have similar authority. each of these agencies, this grant of authority has improved t capability to protect the public from unfair labor practices and sumer fraud and deception.

Mr. President, the technical nature of this issue should not cov the fact that this is a matter of civil rights. It is a matter which t our commitment to equality and basic human fairness. My record in Senate on civil rights legislation is one which reflects, I believe, a c mitment to these values. And though some would ask me to do so, I v not deviate from the course I have set over the last 10 years.

I support the Equal Employment Opportunity Enforcement Act 1971.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515 bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for Ameri workers.

Mr. Gambrell. Mr. President, I have filed an amendment at t desk. I shall not call it up at this time, but I would like to take th few moments to address myself to the bill as a whole, or the pendi business, and in connection therewith to make some comments in r erence to the amendment which I have offered. The amendment wh I have offered, incidentally, is a revision of a previous amendm which I have on file No. 810. I propose to call up the amendment wh I filed today at a later time in place of calling up No. 810. Howev what I have had to say on a previous occasion in reference to amen ment No. 810 would be equally applicable to the one I have filed tod

Mr. President, on January 21, the date on which I filed the amen ment which now bears the number 810, I addressed myself to the p poses of the bill and also to the purposes of the amendment. I might s we have had some considerable debate, and at least three or four vot which in substance dealt with the question of how the Equal Opp tunity Employment Act was to be enforced. Of course, the Rec will show that I have voted on a number of occasions to substitute t so-called Dominick plan or the House plan for the plan contained the Senate committee report, which now apparently will be the meth of enforcement, the cease and-desist method adopted by the Sen committee and now proposed for adoption by the Senate as a whole.

Of course, as I understand the procedure, if this bill in its pres form is adopted by the Senate as a whole, there will be a conference w the House of Representatives, which adopted the court enforcem procedure called for in the Dominick plan, and there will be so further discussion of the type of enforcement procedure to be used.

This entire question of the method of enforcement seems to me place many Senators, including myself, in a very awkard po tion. I would like to support equal employment opportunities, but bill in its present form does not, I think, permit me to do so. As I s on January 21 when I offered my amendment, there seems to be undue urge toward the adoption of the cease and desist method, wh smacks of an effort to play politics with job discrimination, and e the entire field in a constant uproar, resulting in continued racial ion and consequent disruption of trade and commerce.

r. President, it seems to me, if the present conciliation method of reement has not proved to be effective, that rather than racing in nseemly way to the ultimate enforcement method or technique lable, the cease-and desist method, in an attempt to achieve the s of fair employment practices and conciliation of animosities that between the races, an effort should be made to carry this forward step-by-step basis, to try to demonstrate confidence rather than of confidence in the American court system.
e Senator from Alabama this morning put in the Record an edil from the New York Times which I think very ably set forth one e fundamental concepts in our system of law and law enforcement, d on the separation of powers: That courts, and not executive or nistrative agencies, are much better able to give a consistent en-ment pattern to the enforcement of laws of all kinds; that courts rically and traditionally are not subject to the ebb and flow of pol opinion, they are not nearly as subject as political agencies to ses of enforcement, and the judgments of courts are much more to have acceptance by the people and by the public than are of political bodies, which the public, or parts of the public, would from time to time, to be able to sway either to more aggressive or ggressive, or more conservative or more liberal, interpretations e law.
erefore, for that reason I have concluded in my own mind that I not possibly support the bill in its present form, because the en-ment practice that is set forth in the bill contains this cease-and-provision, which I think is an excess which is only warranted, if by the most extreme and most aggravated condition of noncome with law.
. President, this same thought, the excesses or the possible and I say historically probable excesses of executive or political agen-n enforcing laws of this type, has led me to the introduction of mendment which I have sent to the desk this afternoon.
e amendment which I have offered seeks to grant some relief to businesses and small labor unions which may, under this act, be ed of engaging in unfair, discriminatory employment practices are banned by the act. The amendment does not seek to exempt businesses or small labor unions; it simply seeks to put them on al footing in terms of enforcement with the Federal Government y which confronts them.
ink all of us have files loaded with complaints and concerns ex-d by constituents of Government agencies abusing the tremeneconomic resources available to them to compel and enforce and to achieve so-called compliance with regulatory authority. I in many cases in my own experience as a practicing lawyer of s who have come to my office and said, "You know, we have got mplaint," or, "We are under investigation for thus and so, and it like it is going to cost us thousands and thousands of dollars even d out whether we are liable or responsible or guilty or not, and ly, we would just rather give in, accept whatever they say, and do ir way, rather than try to find out whether we are right or wrong first place, because we can see a swarm of Federal agents coming in here, examining our books, reviewing our practices, interv ing our employees, and churning up our business here, where margin of profit is very small, and we just economically cannot af to combat in the courthouse with a Federal agency, much less con before that same agency which is making the charges."

I have no answer to that. I guess in a sense I may be an idealis would like to tell this client, "Well, you owe it not only to yourself to other businesses similarly situated to make this point of law o try to establish this question of fact that is in issue in this case, bu cannot, in good conscience, tell you to set out to defend your against the many, many very highly qualified experts in this field."

At the same time, Mr. President, I in my practice of law have large corporations come in, under the same circumstances who h told me, "Mr. Attorney, we want you to fight a scorched-earth pol on this subject, if it takes 10 years. We are not going to submit to t and we are willing to set aside the expenses that it takes to defe it."

I have seen that carried out, and I have seen such corporations tain consent judgments, where the Government finally said, "My G we cannot afford this expenditure any more; we have had it out w this company, and we cannot afford to devote all our resources to fig ing with this one company. We could go after all these little bitty f lows and get a lot of precedents established by them giving in, so w should we fight the big fellow? Let's take this consent judgment a let this big guy off with an easy slap on the wrist."

Mr. President, I think that is entirely unfair, and yet I think eve Member of the Senate who has had any experience with Governme activities knows that this type of thing goes on. I do not mean to critical, or contend that it is done with malevolent intent, but in e forcement practices, just like anything else, the line of least resista is the one that people take.

If you have two cases and one is easy to prosecute and one is difficu you take the one that is easy. If your opposition is going to cave in, y push him real hard. If the opposition in the other case is going to fig back, you say, "Let's dodge that as long as we can."

I suggest that we very much need to reconsider and review t matter. When this amendment is called up, I expect to point out number of instances of other enforcement agencies where abuses what I would consider abuses—have been committed, as I say, in go faith in most instances. But in an unknowing effort and an insensit effort to achieve a favorable result, to build a good file, a Governme agent has driven a small business out of business, into bankruptcy, a good faith effort to enforce the law.

Mr. President, at this time I will not call up my amendment, und the understanding with the assistant majority leader that there will no rollcall votes today. But I do intend to call it up in due course the consideration of this bill. I might say that ultimately, and unfo tunately, if the bill finally comes to a vote, with or without t amendment I suggest, it will be necessary for me to vote against it.

I yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, just a word in reference to t amendment that will be called up at a later time by the Senator fro Georgia. It deals with a matter that has been discussed at length in t nittee, relating to attorneys' fees and other costs recoverable by a y who is involved in a complaint and prevails.

at this time some amendments that have been suggested are being idered very carefully. It is my hope that some of the suggestions will be in amendments can be worked out toward the objective of oning a stronger and sounder bill. I know that one which was dered briefly yesterday—we had a record vote on it—dealt with ervices of volunteers. There was limited debate, and the record retained the provision as it is in the bill. It was suggested that is some ambiguity as to exactly what is meant by the authority to t volunteer services. It might well be that we will have further

AMENDMENT NO. 818

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the distinguis
Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN), I call up amendment No. 81
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.
The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 41, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "or in the Court of App

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the ame present the argument in favor of this amendment this evening.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I have the amendment restate
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will restate the amendment.
The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 41, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "or in the Court of Appe

Mr. ERVIN. The effect of the amendment is merely to require th all the reviews be had in the circuit court of the circuit where t proceeding arose, rather than having an option of bringing them in the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia regardless of whe they originated.
Mr. WILLIAMS. It has been announced that there will be no furth votes; so if there is no further debate, this will be something for th Senate to think about over the evening.
Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.
The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the ord for the quorum call be rescinded.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STAFFORD). Without objection, it is

Order That the 1 Hour Under Rule XXII Begin Running at 11:30 A.M. on Tuesday, February 1, 1972

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the 1 hour for debate under rule XXII not begin running on Tuesday next until 11:30 a.m.

The President pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Control of Time Under Rule XXII

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time with respect to the 1 hour under rule XXII on Tuesday next be divided between and controlled by the able manager of the bill (Mr. Williams) and the able Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin).

The President pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The President pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. Javits. Does that mean that the vote on the cloture motion will come at 12:30 p.m. on Tuesday?

The President pro tempore. The Senator is correct, after a quorum call.

Mr. Javits. I thank the Chair.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, at 12:30 p.m. on Tuesday next, the Chair will ask the clerk to call the roll to establish a quorum. The roll call vote also is automatic under the rule.

The President pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. The roll call vote would begin at about 12:40 or 12:45. Is that sufficient?

Mr. Javits. Yes.

Amendments in Order Under Rule XXII

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all amendments which are at the desk on Tuesday next at the time the Chair asks the clerk to establish the presence of a quorum—to wit, at the conclusion of the 1 hour of debate, at 12:30—be considered qualified under rule XXII and otherwise qualify.

The President pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, as I understand it, they shall be considered as having been read under rule XXII and otherwise qualify.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. That is correct.

The President pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the able Senator from North Carolina is willing to have a vote at 11:30 a.m. today on an amendment which he is about to offer. May I ask if all parties are willing to announce that a vote will occur at that time, and if so, we can ask unanimous consent?

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, may I ask special consideration for the business of a commission of the United States of which I am a member, the Commission on Marihuana and Drug Abuse, with respect to the imminent plans of the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from North Carolina?

I am perfectly willing to vote, but I need a half hour to an hour some time this morning to attend that Commission meeting. Would I have a right to expect, assuming that we do vote at 11:30, that the following amendment may be one which is not so heavily involved in legal questions, et cetera?

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, we propose to offer an amendment to provide that the courts are not bound by the findings of fact of the Commission unless they are supported by the preponderance of the evidence. We expect to offer after that an amendment which would exempt from the coverage of the bill employees of educational and religious institutions.

Mr. Javits. May I say to the Senator that on the latter—I shall say and debate the first amendment; I feel that I must, but on the latter amendment, may I ask whether there is going to be any time limitation soon on that?

Mr. Ervin. I doubt it seriously, because I think it will take a certain amount of time to show how ridiculous is the proposal of the bill to give to either Federal judges in respect to State educational institutions or to the commissioners in respect to other educational institutions the power to determine whether or not the institution has hired men who are more competent than others who have been hired to teach the very same subjects, men who are more competent than applicants to seek employment against the will of those institutions. That will require some time, and I would not be willing at this time to agree to a time limitation on it.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I take it that all parties are willing to vote on the amendment the Senator from North Carolina is about to offer at 11:30 a.m. today.

Mr. Williams. Yes.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the amendment which the able Senator from North Carolina is about to offer occur today at 11:30 p.m.

The President pro tempore. The amendment which is the pending business?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I was going to withdraw the pendin amendment, because I consider that it is not of the importance of th amendment I am about to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 811

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 811, which has been proposed by the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen) and myself and ask that it be stated in full, because that will explain what it does

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposal t vote on this amendment at 11:30? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

1. On page 42, lines 17, 18, and 19, strike out the words "if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive," and insert in lieu thereof the words "shall be reveiwed by the court, which shall reject them and make its own findings of fact on the evidence in the record in the event it concludes that the findings of fact of the Commission are not supported by the preponderance of the evidence in the record."

2. On page 43, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive," and insert in lieu thereof the words "shall be reviewed by the court under the rule hereinbefore specified governing its review of other findings of fact of the Commission."

3. On page 44, lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive," and insert in lieu thereof the words "shall be reviewed by the court, which shall reject them and make its own findings of facts on the evidence in the record in the event it concludes that the findings of fact of the Commission are not supported by the preponderance of the evidence in the record."

4. On page 45, lines 5, 6, and 7 strike out the words "if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive," and insert in lieu thereof the words "shall be reviewed by the court under the rule hereinbefore specified governing its review of other findings of fact of the Commission."

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, for the information of the distinguished Senator from New York, I will state that the Senator from Alabama and I, instead of calling up the amendment that I mentioned to exempt employment practices of educational and religious institutions, will call up another amendment, if this amendment should be rejected, which would give the right to the party aggrieved by a decision of the Commission to apply to the court for trial de novo, and the right to a jury trial in the event either party requested it. If the Senator from New York will advise me at what time he wants to go to the meeting of the Commission that he mentioned, we can adjust the debate to suit the convenience of the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, someone stated in a happier day that if he could write the songs of the Nation, he would not care who wrote its laws. I say that if I were allowed to write the verdict on which a judgment is to be based, I do not care who writes the judgment.

During the course of the day yesterday, I pointed out that the pending bill emulates hypocrisy. We are told that hypocrisy pays homage to righteousness and justice by attempting to disguise itself in the garb of righteousness and justice.

I also called attention yesterday to the fact that the men who drafted and ratified the Constitution stated in its preamble that one of their poses in establishing and ordaining that document was to establish ice. I charge without fear of successful contradiction that every redural aspect of the Senate committee bill is designed to stay so away from justice that despite the far-reaching grasp for power his bill, the bill does not get close enough to justice to touch the of its garment.

he truth of it is that this is a bill which seeks to prostitute justice the purpose of making certain the policies of those who believe basic rights should be denied to all American citizens for the sup-d—and I use the word "supposed" advisedly—benefit of one class ur citizens or one segment of our society.
r. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
r. Ervin. I yield.
r. Byrd of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the time he pending amendment be equally divided between the Senator North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) and the Senator from New Jersey . Williams).
r. Ervin. Mr. President, I shall not object to that if the Senator West Virginia will not make his unanimous-consent request as e few remarks I have heretofore made.
r. Byrd of West Virginia. No, beginning only at this point.
he President pro tempore. Without objection, beginning at this ent, the time on the amendment will be equally divided between Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from New Jersey.
ho yields time?
r Ervin. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require of what I construe to be the 20 minutes allotted to those who favor mendment.
he President pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina is gnized for 20 minutes.
r. Ervin. Mr. President, I assert that every provision of this bill signed to enforce the policy of the bill—that is, to rob all American ns of basic liberties—for the supposed benefit of the individuals ituting one segment of our society, for whom certain pressure ps have appointed themselves guardians.
rst, you establish a Commission, a politically appointed Commis-
The history of this Commission down to this date shows that ally all the men who have been appointed to serve on this Com-ion were men who were psychologically incapable of holding the s of justice evenly, because they were so biased in favor of the y of the bill that they could not appraise impartially the truth ved in the proceedings.
, you start out with the creation of a board composed of men of ubted bias, men who would be disqualified to serve on any jury ng on questions of fact which arise in cases of this nature, and would be incapable of doing what the great English statesman und Burke said is the duty of exercising the cold neutrality of the rtial judge. If the men who were selected to serve on this Commis-were impartial and unbiased, the system for administering the s such that it makes it impossible for those men to long remain ased; because it unites the function of the prosecutor and the func-of the judge, and these men are prosecuting, in the sense that they tigate charges and then prefer charges to the General Counsel on some occasions, and on other occasions these men sit as judges rat than investigators.

The Supreme Court of the United States has declared in plain wor in the McGrath case, that when you unite these functions and permi public official 1 day to exercise investigatory powers in some cases a on the next day to exercise the adjudicatory powers in other cases, y cause him to develop a psychological handicap which disables him fr exercising either of these functions in an impartial manner.

I know nothing that is more inconsistent with the purpose p claimed by the men who drafted and ratified the Constitution, and t preamble to that instrument, when they ordained and established th instrument to establish justice, than to create a Commission of th nature, with power to coerce into acceptance of their views with respe to each person employed by them, in all cases throughout the Unit States involving a business enterprise employing from eight to persons, and of every religious institution except in respect to tho who engage simply in religious activities rather than the secular activ ties which are necessary to permit any religious institution to functio

To show the absurdity of the last provision, many churches emplo people to conduct kindergartens for small children in order that th parents of these children may attend divine services. Yet, under th bill, as I construe it, the EEOC would have jurisdiction to supervis the employment practices of the churches in respect to the employmen of these persons.

Furthermore, Mr. President, this bill gives the EEOC power t supervise the employment practices of every private educational insti tution in the United States. This shows another phase of this bil which manifests that the bill is the greatest threat of tyrannical powe ever proposed in any legislative proposal presented to the America Congress throughout the history of this Nation.

For example, I hold in my hand a catalog of an educational institu tion which manifests this absurdity. This educational institution has department of classics in which they teach ancient art, Greek archeo ology, the archeology of the Bible, and Roman art. This bill, insofa as a non-State-supported educational institution is concerned, woul give the EEOC the power to judge whether the person selected by th educational institution to teach these rather abstruse subjects is les competent than a person that the EEOC chooses to teach them in th institution and to find that in employing a person to teach these sub jects, the institution selected a man less competent than the man selecte by the EEOC, and did so because of some mental preference, such as those condemned by this act.

Another thing which illustrates the fact that the bill is not designe to do justice arises out of the fact that, under the bill, the Commissio is acting on behalf of individuals selected by it and the taxpayers o the United States will pay the cost incurred in behalf of these ind viduals, whereas the bill compels the individual employers and the individual employees hired by the individual employees to bear the cost of any efforts to vindicate their rights.

The crowning prostitution of justice sanctioned by this bill is the provision which is designed to prohibit courts of law which review the findings of the Commission to search for the truth with respect to the facts of the case.

On yesterday, I read to the Senate the definitions which are given to terms "substantial evidence" and "preponderance of evidence."

What is the definition of "preponderance"?

It is this: Superiority in weight, quantity, power, importance, or like.

Under the law of every State in the United States, a party suing in civil court to establish a complaint of any kind is required to establish the truth of his cause by the preponderance of the evidence, that by the evidence which outweighs the evidence in opposition and evidence which shows that his allegations are probably true.

Not so with this bill. It disables the courts to search for the truth with respect to the facts by decreeing that the court, no matter how inconsistent the findings of the Commission may be with respect to questions of fact, is bound by its findings if they are supported by substantial evidence.

Now what is "substantial evidence"?

According to the definition of the courts, it is merely evidence which more than a scintilla. It is merely evidence which is a percentage out beyond being purely imaginary. Five percent of the evidence substantial evidence.

Thus, we have a situation here that, in their zeal to deny all Americans rights for the supposed benefit of one segment of our society—for which the pressure groups supporting this bill have appointed themselves guardians—we have a system under which the courts are denied right to search for truth with respect to issues of fact, even if those es of fact are supported by as little as 5 percent of the evidence and shown to be false by at least 95 percent of the evidence.

Mr. President, I do not know what will happen to this country. I uld say, with all due respect to those who support this bill, that one the chief activities of Congress in enacting bills of this character is frustrate another purpose of the Founding Fathers declared in the amble to the Constitution, and that is, to destroy rather than to re the blessing of liberty to the American people.

his bill represents the greatest grab for governmental power in the ory of this Nation. It represents the implementation of the grab power by procedures which constitute an insult to justice which, as ve stated, do not approach close enough to Justice even to touch the of her garment.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to adopt this amendment and thus ble the courts which review the findings of the Commission to ch for truth in accordance with the evidence in the case and thus et aside the findings of fact which are not supported by a preponance of the evidence. In any case, under this amendment, where the ings of the Commission are supported by a preponderance of the dence, the court would be bound by those findings.

ut this amendment would merely provide, where the court finds findings of the Commission are not supported by the greater ght of the evidence, or the more convincing evidence, or the preponderance of the evidence, that the court itself can make findings of is important to have these findings of fact reviewed by an impartribunal composed of men who are capable of acting with the cool rality of the impartial judge.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. ERVIN. I am happy to yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Within the last few seconds, the Senator described in three ways his interpretation of the meaning of the weight of evidence that would be the test here. Could the Senator please repeat which those three ways of describing the weight of the evidence are?

Mr. ERVIN. They all mean the same thing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would the Senator repeat them?

Mr. ERVIN. I tell the Senator that I used to have to charge juries on this. The preponderance of the evidence is the evidence which has more convincing force than the evidence in opposition to it. All I am trying to do is see that the court should be allowed to act in cases where the findings of the Commission are only supported by evidence which is less convincing than the evidence accepted by the Commission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield myself 4 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am glad that I asked the Senator from North Carolina the last question. He did give further meaning to the word "preponderance." Since we talked about the weight of the evidence in charges to the jury—and as I say, the Senator from North Carolina was a most able and distinguished jurist in North Carolina before he came to the Senate—that is one of the points I would like to make.

This description of the weight of the evidence would be the test where it is used in law and used in the jury trial situation. Of course that is not what we are dealing with here. We are dealing with agency administrative action and all of the precedent and all of the practice goes contrary to what the Senator from North Carolina is suggesting as the court of appeals test in connection with the weight of the evidence on an appeal from a Commission decision.

I will say that perhaps if any man can tread where others might fear to tread in this legal area: the Senator from North Carolina perhaps is that one.

Professor Wigmore, whom many of us used as the high authority in evidentiary matters as we went through law school and who used to guide us in the practice of law, found the term "preponderance of the evidence" to be quite impossible to define and subject to much confusion among the courts and those in the legal profession.

If I recall correctly, Professor Wigmore characterized it as a term which jurors could waste years trying to define. Therefore, we have not the time to define it here.

I will say that there is a precedent for this descriptive phrase to be applicable in the trial of a case. This is true in jury cases. However, we are not dealing with jury trials here. We are dealing with trials before an administrative agency or a commission.

We have a precedent in jury trials. Two years ago, as manager of the bill, I accepted an amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to have the preponderance of the evidence as a test for the Commission. That was written into the bill passed by the Senate.

will confess my error in not including that in the bill that was orted to the Senate by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. s an oversight.

will say that if this amendment offered by the Senator from North olina fails on the vote that will be taken shortly, it will be my pur- e to include the preponderance test where it properly belongs, at trial level. Then we will go on to the test at the appellate level as s in all other administrative agencies save one, the Subversive Ac- ties Control Board. And we might look into how many cases they e had to use that test of preponderance in at the appellate level. I bt if there are very many, if any. At any rate, it is at the appellate el. I would like to stick, being a lawyer, with the long-time prec- nts on the evidence rule.

Ir. President, I yield to the Senator from New York.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Ir. Javits. Mr. President, I join with the manager of the bill in the ement that we will include the preponderance of the evidence rule ore the Commission. Second, I must say that the vast majority of missions which have cease-and-desist powers are subject to the stantial evidence rule rather than the preponderance of the evi- e rule, aside from the Subversive Activities Control Board, which manager of the bill has already mentioned.

ndeed, the substantial evidence rule is specifically mandated into as the general standard of review under the Administrative Pro- ure Act. Thus 5 U.S.C. 706 provides:

. Scope of review.

the extent necessary to decision and when presented, the reviewing court decide all relevant questions of law, interpret constitutional and statutory isions, and determine the meaning or applicability of the terms of an agency n. The reviewing court shall—) compel agency action unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed; and ) hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found —

* * * * * * *

) unsupported by substantial evidence in a case subject to sections 556 and f this title or otherwise reviewed on the record of an agency hearing provided atute; or aking the foregoing determinations, the court shall review the whole record ose parts of it cited by a party, and due account shall be taken of the of prejudicial error. (Pub. L. 89-554, Sept. 6, 1966, 80 Stat. 393).

lso, there is a very serious question as to whether this amendment not simply constitute again a reargument of the cases on cease- desist power in an effort to obtain civil suits. We might as well ceed with the nisi prius suit and not circuit court review. In short, amendment is just another way of trying to reverse the Senate's tion so far taken in respect to the so-called Dominick amendment.

r. President, I realize that they do not call witnesses in the trials ose cases. However, they must weigh every shred of evidence as fully as if it were a de novo trial. And if they have a preponder- of the evidence rule, they will have to use that technique time and again because they will have to study and evaluate the evidence. as to meeting the standard of substantiality, but as to which side ponderates on the scale of justice.

Mr. President, if the substantial evidence rule contained as mu gossamer as the Senator from North Carolina would have us belie he would have much more of a point not only against this Commiss but also against every other commission than he actually has.

There is a big, gaping hole in his argument. He said that it i percentage point beyond being purely an imaginary description of substance. Then he said it could be as little as 5 percent of the eviden

Let us see what the substantial evidence rule is. A classic statem on that rule is made in the case of Universal Camera Corp. v. the Lab Board, 340 U.S. 474. At page 488, Mr. Justice Frankfurter, in t classic decision on the subject had this to say about the substant evidence rule:

> To be sure, the requirement for canvassing "the whole record" in order > ascertain substantiality does not furnish a calculus of value by which a revie > ing court can assess the evidence. Nor was it intended to negative the funct > of the Labor Board as one of those agencies presumably equipped or informe > by experience to deal with a specialized field of knowledge, whose findin > within that field carry the authority of an expertness which courts do not posse > and therefore must respect. Nor does it mean that even as to matters n > requiring expertise a court may displace the Board's choice between two fair > conflicting views, even though the court would justifiably have made a differe > choice had the matter been before it de novo. * * *
>
> Congress has merely made it clear that a reviewing court is not barred fro > setting aside a Board decision when it cannot conscientiously find that th > evidence supporting that decision is substantial, when viewed in the light tha > the record in its entirety furnishes, including the body of evidence oppose > to the Board's view.

So the doctrine of substantiality, based upon the Administrativ Procedure Act which will be applicable to this particular Commissio under this bill, as defined by the U.S. Supreme Court means that w take the whole record, the facts for and the facts against, and the see if there is substantial evidence left that backs up the finding of th Commission.

That, Mr. President, is a very different standard, a much mor weighted standard than "a percentage point beyond being purel imaginative." We do not contend for a "percentage point beyond bein purely imaginative," but we do contend that the agency which is tryin the facts presents a complete record to the court, when it weighs th pros and cons and still leaves a substantial amount in favor of th pros; that that will stand with the court; and that the court of appeals should not have to weigh the evidence as it would if it were trying th case de novo, remembering always that the court can send back the cas for further evidence if it does not find that by laying the pros an the cons in the balance—both sides of the evidence, not just one side—there is still a substantial amount to support the findings of the Commission.

Mr. President, there are good reasons why the substantial evidenc rule was included in the Administrative Procedure Act and in thi bill before us.

To quote another case, Conolo v. Federal Maritime Commission, 38
U.S. 607, at 620:

> Congress was very deliberate in adopting this standard of review. It free > the reviewing courts of the time consuming and difficult task of weighing th > evidence, it gives proper respect to the expertise of the administrative tribun > and it helps promote the uniform application of the statute. These policies ar rticularly important when a court is asked to review an agency's fashioning discretionary relief. In this area agency determinations frequently rest upon complex and hard-to review mix of considerations. By giving the agency cretionary power to fashion remedies, Congress places a premium upon ency expertise, and, for the sake of uniformity, it is usually better to minimize opportunity for reviewing courts to substitute their discretion for that of the ncy. These policies would be damaged by the standard of review articulated the court below.

Mr. President, those reasons are fully applicable to the EEOC and erefore I believe we should reject the pending amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have heard an overwhelming weight persuasion by the Senator from New York that this amendment uld be defeated by a preponderance of the statements and by ason of all the precedents.

Mr. President, in the first place, I do not feel that the use of the m "preponderance of the evidence" is at all useful or necessary in context of this bill. It neither clarifies the degree or nature of the dence that we would be dealing with in these situations nor in- duces any added benefit for the resolving of complaints under this in these situations.

n general, Mr. President, the courts have avoided using the term or olying it to any significant number of cases. While it is generally med to be the standard of persuasion in civil cases, its precise mean- or an understanding of its application has never been fully under- en by the courts. The questions still remain. A widely accepted inition is that evidence preponderates when it is more convincing to trier than the opposing evidence. While this kind of commonsense lanation has grown out of repeated use, its applicability has been ricted to jury-trial situations where the jury is led to believe, ough proof by preponderance, that the existence of a contested fact ore probable than its nonexistence. However, this ceases to be ap- able in apellate cases.

his nonapplicability of the term "preponderance of the evidence" be best illustrated by reference to the experiences of the NLRB. ile the National Labor Relations Act contains the requirement that Board make its findings by a "preponderance of the testimony," a rch of the labor board cases as reviewed by the courts discloses no rence to "preponderance." The courts rather refer repeatedly to bstantial" evidence.

econd, Mr. President, I feel that the amendment, as proposed by the inguished Senator from North Carolina, seeks to introduce a new unnecessary element in the courts' reviewing process of administra- decisions. If I understand the amendment correctly Mr. President, ould require the appellate courts to hold, in effect, a trial de novo in se cases where "it concludes that the findings of fact of the Commis- are not supported by the preponderance of the evidence in the ord."

Ir. President, it is one of the fundamental traditions of our system ourts that there is a gulf fixed between the trial court and the re- ving court. The reviewing court examines only questions of law, and rred, except in a few exceptional situations like mandamus actions lisbarment proceedings, from examining issues of fact. This amend- t, Mr. President, would specifically alter this separation of func- s.

The traditional and long-standing procedure of administrative view in this country is that the courts of appeals review an agency de sion by examining the record of the administrative proceeding to det mine whether there is "substantial evidence on the record" to susti the agency's finding. This process is guaranteed by the Administrati Procedure Act and by the provisions of S. 2515.

The reviewing courts, in examining the record of the agency, ha been very conscious of the need to fully insure that the administrati hearing fully and properly takes into document all the evidence p sented at the hearing. The standard has probably been best enunciat by the former Mr. Chief Justice Frankfurter in the Supreme Cour decision in Universal Camera Corp. against NLRB where the co stated:

> The Board's findings are entitled to respect; but they must nonetheless be s > aside when the record before the Court of Appeals clearly precludes the Boar > decision from being justified by a fair estimate of the worth of the testimony > witnesses or its informed judgment on matters within its special competence, > both.

The amendment which we are now considering would destroy th traditional function of the appeals courts and would seek to make the trial courts. It would seek to supplant the substantial evidence ru contained in the Administrative Procedure Act, and preferred by th courts even before its formalization in that act, and seek to substitu therefor a new procedure based upon a yet undefined standard wi.ic the courts must use in reviewing equal employment cases. I submit, Mr President, that this amendment would confuse the administrative re view process immeasurably, and would result in unnecessary work fo the appeals courts.

It is the purpose of appellate procedure to provide a quick and pr cise review of any errors which may have been made at the trial leve In this function, the appellate courts are by design, and not by accident freed from the frequently tedious and time-consuming process of tak ing factual evidence. To now introduce this function into the appella courts, as this amendment seeks to do, can create nothing short of chao in the judicial process. The appeals court traditionally reviews fo errors and, if in its opinion errors are indeed found, it remands the case to the trier of the facts with specific instructions for remedying the error.

If this traditional separation of functions is now destroyed, Mr President, what worth does the trial level proceeding have? If the re viewing court is going to retry the entire case, then we might as wel do away with the trial process altogether and only have the appeals courts doing all cases. I feel, Mr. President, that the amendment whic we are now discussing degrades the entire administrative process by imputing that the appeals court may have to entirely retry a cas where errors are made on the record, and that remand to the adminis trative tribunal would not resolve any such errors which might have been made.

Mr. President, I believe that the time of the Senator from Nort Carolina has been used up. If he would like to borrow from my time
I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. ERVIN. I certainly appreciate the generosity of my good friend rom New Jersey.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New York says that ne weight of this argument is that the court should not be permitted ) require a greater weight of evidence when the facts of the case should ave been determined by a substantial amount of evidence.

He says he is willing to amend the bill to require the Commission to ake a finding based on a preponderance of evidence, but the retention i the bill of provisions which I seek to strike, and to offer substitute rovisions which would nullify that purpose.

While the law as amended requires the findings of the Commission to e made by a preponderance of the evidence, that would be paying little ore lipservice to justice than the bill now before us. It would be ab olutely nugatory because if the Commission did not obey that law and ased its findings on less than a preponderance of the evidence, when e court reviewed the action of the Commission it could not determine at the Commission had failed to obey the law if the findings of the ommission were supported by any substantial evidence—that is, any-ing above a scintilla, and anything constituting enough to resist a otion for a nonsuit in a civil court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina
eld for an observation?

Mr. ERVIN. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was just 2 years ago, when the bill was before us, at the Senator from North Carolina persuaded me—indeed, per-aded the entire Senate—that at the trial level, at the Commission aring level—the preponderance of evidence—a test which fits the recedents in other areas of the law—would be appropriate at that vel, and that is why, in the bill as passed by the Senate, at pages 10 d 12, the Senator's amendment was added. The amendment proded that "if the Commission finds by a preponderance of the evince taken by the Commission," et cetera; and in the other section, at ge 12, "shall be determined by a preponderance of the evidence of e record." It was not lipservice then. We were persuaded by the nguage of the amendment.

Mr. ERVIN. The Senator from North Carolina is a little wiser now an he was then. He has recognized that all that amounted to was a rt of biased request to the Commission. Under the provision that lds the courts, if there is barely more than a scintilla of evidence—at is, substantial evidence—then the Commission can violate the rule at the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from North Carolina vocated with respect to the action of the Commission, and the courts ould be unable to correct a violation of that rule under the bill in the sence of my amendment.

I thank the Senator from New Jersey for his generosity in yield-g me the extra time. I should like to add this observation: It is true at there are many laws making the findings of administrative agens binding if they are supported by substantial evidence. But, as I served yesterday, the fact that Congress has passed iniquitous laws the past does not justify Congress continuing to enact iniquitous ws.

I thank the Senator for yielding me his time.

74-699 O - 72 - 67

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of m time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. JAVITS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the orde for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time on the amendment having ex pired, under the previous order the Senate will now proceed to vote on the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. Bentsen), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Eagleton), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. Gambrell), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Harris), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. McClellan), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGovern), the Senator from Montana (Mr. Metcalf), the Senator from Maine (Mr. Muskie), the Senator from Alabama (Mr. Sparkman), the Senator from Virginia (Mr. Spong), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Stennis), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), the Senator from California (Mr. Tunney), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Church), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Hartke), and the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Eastland) is absent because of illness.

On this vote, the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Eastland) is paired with the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson).

If present and voting, the Senator from Mississippi would vote "yea" and the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) is paired with the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson).

If present and voting, the Senator from Colorado would vote "yea" and the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Georgia (Mr. Gambrell) is paired with the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGovern).

If present and voting, the Senator from Georgia would vote "yea" and the Senator from South Dakota would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Church), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), the Senator from California (Mr. Tunney), and the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey) would each vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Bellmon), the Senators from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield and Mr. Packwood), the Senator from wa (Mr. Miller), the Senator from Kansas (Mr. Pearson), the nator from Ohio (Mr. Taft), and the Senator from South Carolina Ir. Thurmond) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Brock), the Senator from New ork (Mr. Buckley), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. Hansen), d the Senator from Maryland (Mr. Mathias) are absent on official siness.

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater) is absent by leave of the enate.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Mundt) is absent because of ness.

The Senator from Utah (Mr. Bennett) is detained on official siness.

On this vote, the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. Hansen) is paired th the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield). If present and voting, Senator from Wyoming would vote "yea" and the Senator from egon would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Thurmond) paired with the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft). If present and vot-g, the Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea" and the Sena- from Ohio would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) is paired th the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson). If present and ing, the Senator from Colorado would vote "yea" and the Senator m Washington would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Utah (Mr. Bennett) is paired with Senator from Iowa (Mr. Miller). If present and voting, the nator from Utah would vote "yea" and the Senator from Iowa uld vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 43, as follows:

So Mr. Ervin's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 829

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I have announced that the distinguished Senator from Alabama and I would next call up amendment No. 609, which would provide for trial by jury——

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. ERVIN. I had announced that I would next call up amendment No. 609, which was an amendment to allow the party aggrieved by a judgment of the Commission to appeal to the courts and have a trial de novo, and a trial by jury if he so desired. But I think it will take more educational endeavors on my part to persuade the Senate, in view of its last vote——

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator please use his microphone?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot hear the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ERVIN. I was announcing that instead of calling up that amendment, I have reached the conclusion, in view of the last vote, that the Senate is not now in a position to show much veneration for the ancient right of trial by jury, and I shall postpone offering that amendment until the Senate has had time to further consider some of the landmarks of the Constitution of worthier service.

So instead of doing that, on behalf of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) and myself, I call up amendment No. 829, and ask that it be stated in full, because a statement in full will do much to explain what its purport is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Add a new section at the end of the bill appropriately numbered and reading as follows: "No department, agency, or office of the United States shall require any employer to practice discrimination in reverse by employing persons of a particular race, or a particular religion, or a particular national origin, or a particular sex in either fixed or variable numbers, proportions, percentages, quotas, goals, or ranges. Any officer of the United States or any other person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be imprisoned not exceeding one year or fined not exceeding $1,000.".

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I modify this amendment by striking t lines 8, 9, 10, and 11, which provide that any officer of the United ates or any other person who violates this provision shall be guilty a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be imprisoned not exceed-g one year or fined not exceeding $1,000, and substitute in lieu ereof the following:

If any department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States shall olate or attempt or threaten to violate the provisions of the preceding sentence, y employer or employee aggrieved by such violation, or attempted or threat-ed violation, shall have the power to bring a civil action in the appropriate strict court of the United States; and said district court shall have the power enter such a decree or grant such temporary interlocutory or permanent unctive relief as may be necessary to correct the consequences of such violation to prevent such attempted or threatened violation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send his modification to desk?

Mr. ERVIN. Unfortunately, it is in my head. I had written it out, t I left it in my office. I can get a written copy, if we take a recess g enough for me to go to my office.

I ask unanimous consent, instead of that, that the Official Reporter Debates furnish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair should have the modification at desk, so that the clerk can read it before we proceed.

Mr. ERVIN. I suggest the absence of quorum, until I can write it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order
the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I find that I was mistaken with respect the draft of the modification. I send to the desk the amendment as dified and ask that it be stated in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment as dified.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

dd a new section at the end of the bill appropriately numbered and reading ollows: "No department, agency, or officer of the United States shall require employer to practice discrimination in reverse by employing persons of a ticular race, or a particular religion, or a particular national origin, or a ticular sex in either fixed or variable numbers, proportions, percentages, tas, goals, or ranges. If any department, agency, officer, or employee of the ted States violates or attempts or threatens to violate the provisions of the eding sentence, the employer or employee aggrieved by the violation, or mpted or threatened violation, may bring a civil action in the United States trict Court in the District in which he resides or in which the violation irred, or is attempted or threatened, or in which the enterprise affected is ted, and the District Court shall grant him relief by way of temporary erlocutory or permanent injunctions as may be necessary to redress the con-uences of the violation, or to prevent the attempted or threatened violation.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator from rth Carolina yield for a question, without losing his right to the or?

Mr. ERVIN. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, for the convenience of ators on both sides of the aisle, I ask the able Senator from North rolina whether or not a vote could be had on the pending amendment at 2 o'clock this afternoon, and I ask the same question of th distinguished manager of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is agreeable.

Mr. ERVIN. That would be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Is it anticipated by either party tha an amendment in the second degree would be offered to the pendin amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not for my part. I cannot speak for the comanage of the bill, the ranking minority Members.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the pending amendment occur today at 2:15 p.m.; that time on any amendments to the pending amendment be limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divided between the mover of such and the distinguished manager of the bill; that the time on any motions or appeals be likewise limited and likewise divided; that time on any amendments to the amendment, motion, appeal, or point of order, with the exception of nondebatable motions, come out of the time allotted on the pending amendment; and that the time on the pending amendment be equally controlled and divided between the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) and the distinguished manager of the bill.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, for the moment, I am compelled to object to the proposals. In a few moments, after I have had a chance to confer with the distinguished acting minority leader, I will not object.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I withhold the request, accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. ERVIN. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. COTTON. I know that the Senator from North Carolina is going into this, but I may have to leave town and might not be here all day. This amendment, if adopted, would mean that any Senator or Representative who had eight or more people on his staff would be subject to this law, just as every other American citizen, would it not?

Mr. ERVIN. It may be; so I would like to modify it again, to provide that it shall not apply to any Member of the legislative branch.

Mr. COTTON. I would hope not. No man should be above the law. I think that if we are going to make everybody in this country who employs 8 people be liable in some way and responsible in some way and subject to actions and harassment in some way, we should take it ourselves.

As I stated yesterday, I have always opposed this, because it gets down to the very small business, where the relationships of people are so personal. If we are going to do it to the small businessman with 8 employees in some little town, I think it would be very unwise and not very consistent for us to exempt ourselves, even if we are political officers.

I hope the Senator will leave it so that it will apply to us, because what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, the eloquence and cogent argument of the ble and distinguished Senator from New Hampshire have convinced e Senator from North Carolina of the absolute rectitude of the sition which the Senator from New Hampshire has just stated. On flection, I think it would be a mistake to modify this amendment so as exempt Members of Congress from its application. Since this nendment now covers all of the employees of all the States of all the subdivisions, and since it covers all the members of the faculties d the other employees of all educational institutions, and since it powers Caesar to lay his political hands on the activities of God. I ink it would be a mistake to exclude anyone from the unspeakable ranny which this bill is designed to inflict upon the people of nerica.

Mr. COTTON. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me for nore minute?

Mr. ERVIN. I am delighted to do so.

Mr. COTTON. I thank the Senator for the opportunity to express these ntiments, and having it understood that if I am unable to be present nen the final vote is taken on this amendmet, that I would vote for if it is to apply to us. However, I would vote against it if it does t apply to us, and I shall vote against the bill if it does not apply us. May I say now that I am very glad to withdraw my objection the unanimous-consent request of the distinguished Senator from st Virginia (Mr. Byrd).

Mr. ERVIN. I thank the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, state which has now been irrevocably and completely embraced by Senator from North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator from rth Carolina yield?

Mr. ERVIN. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from West rginia.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I now renew my unani- us-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McIntyre). Is there objection to the uest of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, l it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr President, I would ask the distin- shed Senator from North Carolina, does he anticipate a rollcall e on this amendment today?

Mr. ERVIN. Yes. I certainly do. I want to ask for the yeas and nays. ant to find out how many Members of the Senate——

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I do not believe there are a sufficient nber of Senators present in the Chamber at this moment, but the nator may be assured that the yeas and nays will be ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum on my e because I want to get the yeas and nays before there are too many kend departures. There might be too many weekend departures for to get the yeas and nays at a later time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent t the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I yield to myself such time as I may use.

Mr. President, this amendment is very clear. It is in complete harmony with the other provisions of the Senate committee bill, strange to say.

All the other provisions of the Senate bill are avowedly included in the bill to prevent any employer, whether he is engaged in the work of Caesar or in the work of the Lord, who is touched by the bill, from practicing discrimination against applicants for employment or persons who desire to be promoted or persons who desire not to be discharged on account of their race, religion, national origin, or sex.

The amendment is in perfect harmony with that objective of the Senate committee bill because it forbids discrimination in reverse.

It gives access to the courts to prevent any department or agency or officer of the United States from requiring any employer to practice discrimination in reverse.

When Congress adopted the Civil Rights Act of 1964 it undertook to forbid discrimination in reverse.

It inserted in Title VII of that act a provision which stated in about as plain words can be found in the English language that no employer should be required to hire employees on a quota system: that is, a system which required him to employ certain numbers or percentages of a particular race, or a particular religion, or a particular national origin, or a particular sex.

I thought that that provision of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was so plain that he who runs might read it and not err in so doing.

But some officials who are charged by the Executive order relating to discrimination in employment—Executive Order 11246—and who are charged with enforcing the provisions of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 were apparently illiterate or educated way past their intelligence, and they could not understand the plain and the unambiguous words of Congress which were designed to prevent what is probably known as discrimination in reverse.

As a consequence of this lack of understanding of the plain and unambiguous words of the English language employed in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Officer of Contract Compliance on virtually every occasion has required employers seeking Government contracts to practice discrimination in reverse. The EEOC, on less frequent occasions, has hailed employers before its bar to practice discrimination in reverse.

It is to be noted that the Office of Federal Contract Compliance in the Department of Labor is charged with exactly the same duty in respect to employers seeking Government contracts that the EEOC is charged with in respect to employers generally. The sole function of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance under the Executive order is to review proposed contracts which various executive departments or agencies have made to obtain work or services for the Federal Government and to make sure that those contracts prohibit discrimination against employees or applicants for employment because of their race or religion or national origin or sex.

One of the strange things about Government is that it has an insatiable thirst for power and that if we give an executive department or executive agency an inch of authority, it converts that inch of authority into a mile of authority. This has been true in respect to the office of Federal Contract Compliance in the Department of Labor and it has been true in some instances in respect to the EEOC itself. The most notorious example of discrimination in reverse has been embodied in the concept set forth in what is popularly known as the Philadelphia plan.

The Office of Federal Contract Compliance adopted the Philadelphia plan and required building contractors who obtained contracts from the Federal Government of certain magnitude to deny the employment of members of the majority race until the employees belonging to the minority race reached certain percentages or certain proportions of their total employees.

Manifestly this requires discrimination in favor of the members of the minority race and discrimination against members of the majority race. In other words, it requires discrimination in reverse.

When the attention of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance and the then Secretary of Labor was called to the fact that the Office of Federal Contract Compliance was requiring discrimination in reverse and was requiring building contractors holding Government contracts of a certain magnitude to practice discrimination in favor of the members of one race and against the members of other races, the Office of Federal Contract Compliance and the then Secretary of Labor engaged in linguistic gymnastics and in a semantic operation the like of which unknown in the annals of either the English language or of our country.

They said that, when they require the employers holding Federal contracts to employ persons of one race in certain variable proportions preference to the members of other races, that does not constitute the ing of people by quotas, but on the contrary is the hiring of people obtain certain goals or the hiring of people to achieve certain ranges employment.

The Senator from North Carolina is not a person of great erudition the English language. For that reason he cannot ascend to the linstic stratosphere. On the contrary, he has to rely on the definitions the English dictionaries in his effort to ascertain the meaning of glish words.

The Senator from North Carolina took the dictionaries he had, and y are rather multitudinous, and he looked up the word "goal." He nd that the word "goal" was synonymous for all practical ints and purposes with the word "quotas." And he found that requiring an employer to employ persons of one race in preference to sons of other races within a variable percentage or a variable proportion of his total employees was nothing in the world other than all practical intents and purposes requiring a hiring of quotas.

So the Senator from North Carolina does not believe in discrimination and he joins those who propose that the Government prevent discrimination on the basis of race or religion or national origin or , and he offers an amendment which will prevent any department, ency, or office of the United States from requiring an employer to actice discrimination in reverse by employing persons of a particular race or a particular religion or a particular national origin o particular sex in either fixed or variable numbers, proportions, p centages, quotas, goals, or ranges.

I urge the Senate to adopt this amendment for two reasons. In t first place, it is in perfect harmony with the objective of the bill forbid discrimination in employment on the basis of race, religi or national origin, or sex.

In the second place, the amendment is so phrased that any pers handicapped in linguist ability and understanding of the meaning words, and the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, the EEO and the Secretary of Labor will have a law couched in phraseolo which all of them can understand—and surely we ought to try bring about simplicity of statements in the laws of the United Stat and have those laws couched in terms such as the Members of Co gress and those charged with preventing discrimination in emplo ment can all understand alike. That is the objective of this amendme

In its original form, the amendment had a criminal sanction fo enforcement; but on reflection, the Senator from Alabama (M ALLEN) and the Senator from North Carolina came to the conclusio that it would be a rather harsh remedy to make men criminals becaus their understanding of English language differs from the understand ing of Congress, which enacts laws in the English language. So th distinguished Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Nort Carolina modified their amendments so as to establish a differe sanction for this amendment, and that sanction is the rather genera sanction of giving any employer who is required to practice discrim nation in reverse or any employee who is denied a job because of dis crimination in reverse, access to the courts. The courts can then exercis their general powers of equity and compel the Office of Contract Com pliance and the EEOC to obey the acts of Congress according to th plain intent of Congress. All these objectives will be achieved by th adoption of this amendment.

Frankly, I find, as I travel to and fro among the people of this land, that people cannot understand why the Federal Governmen orders employers to practice discrimination in employment while they are supposed to be preventing discrimination in employment. As I observe the activities of the departments, agencies, or offices whic are charged with preventing discrimination in employment, I am re minded of one of Aesop's fables, the one about the man who got lost in the woods on a very cold evening.

The man could not find his way out of the woods. He met a satyr.
The satyr told the man he would take him to the satyr's home and entertain him overnight, and thus offer the man an opportunity to find his way out of the dense woods to the man's home in the daylight of the following morning.

When the satyr was accompanying the man to the satyr's home, the man's hands were so cold that he blew on his hands, and the satyr asked the man, "Why are you blowing on your hands?" The man said, "I am blowing on my hands to keep them warm."

After the satyr and the man got to the satyr's habitation, the satyr prepared an evening meal, which consisted in the main of hot por ridge. The porridge was particularly hot, and the man blew his breath on his porridge.

The satyr asked, "Why are you blowing your breath on the ridge."

The man replied, "I am blowing my breath on the porridge to make porridge cold."

The satyr said, "Out with you. I will have nothing to do with a n who blows hot and cold with the same breath."

That is precisely what the Office of Federal Contract Compliance the Department of Labor and the EEOC have been doing in their ged efforts to enforce Executive Order 11246 and Title VII of the il Rights Act of 1964, respectively, which prohibit discrimination employment on account of race, religion, national origin, or sex. ese authorities, in case after case, have entered orders requiring ployers to practice discrimination in reverse by employing persons a particular race or a particular religion or a particular national gin or a particular sex, either in fixed or variable numbers, pro- tions, percentages, quotas, goals, or ranges, I do not believe you can orce laws against discrimination in employment by commanding l requiring discrimination in employment. The two concepts are econcilable and repugnant to each other.

So I appeal to every Member of the Senate who does not think that Office of Federal Contract Compliance and the EEOC should be mitted to blow hot and cold with the same breath to support this ticular amendment.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder, if any, of the time in support his amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the amendment which is before us——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time does the Senator yie himself?

Mr. JAVITS. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield me 10 minutes

Mr. WILLIAMS. Such time as the Senator requires, yes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the amendment which is before us affec both the problem of dealing with Government contractors in the Offi of Contract Compliance, to which we have voted in the Department o Labor, and with remedies available under Title VII. This amendmen seeks to set a standard by which remedies shall be determined on th part of the United States.

Now, all we see in the wording of the amendment which is largel contained in its first sentence, is the tip of the iceberg because wha this first sentence purports to restrain is a department, agency, o officer of the United States. But a department, agency, or officer of th United States may move respecting a given situation for or upon th order of the court. We do not have to specify in this amendment tha it applies to the seeking or enforcing orders of a court because a cour usually does not itself require anything of an employer but acts o motion of an officer or employee of the United States. Therefore, th depth of this amendment is much greater than is apparent on th surface because it would purport not only to inhibit in given respect the officers of the United States but also the courts of the United State through whom, once they make a finding or a judgment, the officers o the United States are moved.

I make that analysis because it is clear that what is sought to b reached is, first the Philadelphia plan and similar plans in other cities, and beyond that, the whole concept of "affirmative action" as it has been developed under Executive Order 11246 and as a remedial con cept under Title VII.

Philadelphia-type plans are based on the Federal Government's power to require its own contractors or contractors on projects to which it contributes—for example, State projects with a Federal con tribution—to take affirmative action to enlarge the labor pool to the maximum extent by promoting full utilization of minority group employees, and by making certain requirements for those who hir to seek out minority employees as well as majority employees and also to correct discrimination on its face which has persisted over a long period of time. The courts have sustained such requirements The Philadelphia plan itself was sustained by the Court of Appeal for the Third Circuit in the case of Contractors Association of Eastern Pennsylvania v. the Secretary of Labor, 442 F. 2d 159. Certiorari wa recently denied by the Supreme Court. The basis of sustaining it wa really upon two critical points: First, the Government, as part of its procurement function, has the right to encourage full utilization of al minority group employees as a method of insuring the availability o broad manpower pool to support procurement efforts, and second, plan was upheld as a proper way to remedy past discrimination in six building trades covered by the plan.

Thus, with respect to procurement, the court—I am reading from ge 171 of 442 Fed. 2d, if anyone is following the actual decision—ted:

n direct procurement the federal government has a vital interest in assuring t the largest possible pool of qualified manpower be available for the accom-hment of its projects.

Therefore, it was held that the Philadelphia plan requirement that nstruction contractors agree to use good-faith efforts to meet goals taining to the employment of minority-group employees in cer-n trades was entirely appropriate in terms of authority by the deral Government.

The court also held that there was nothing inconsistent between the iladelphia plan and section 703(j) of Title VII of the Civil Rights because the Philadelphia plan was issued under an Executive er, rather than Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, and that section (j) was a limitation only on Title VII. The decision also implied t the words of the Civil Rights Act themselves apply to the matter setting quotas for correction of imbalance in the percentage of ple in any race, in comparison to the percentage in the available k force in the area, whereas the Philadelphia plan was applicable ne available work force in certain specific trades.

Finally, the court also held that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 does prohibit specific relief requiring an employer to be "color con-ns" to remedy the effects of past discrimination.

The court, on page 173, held:

early the Philadelphia Plan is color-conscious. Indeed the only meaning which be attributed to the "affirmative action" language which since March of 1961 been included in successive Executive Orders is that Government contractors r be color-conscious. Since 1941 the Executive Order program has recognized discriminatory practices exclude available minority manpower from the labor In other contexts color-consciousness has been deemed to be an appropriate dial posture. Porcelli v. Titus, 302 F. Supp. 726 (D.N.J. 1969), aff'd, 431 F.2d (3d Cir. 1970); Norwalk CORE v. Norwalk Redevelopment Agency, 395 F.2d 931 (2d Cir. 1968); Offermann v. Nitkowski, 378 F.2d 22, 24 (2d Cir. 1967). It been said respecting Title VII that "Congress did not intend to free an entire ration of Negro employees into discriminatory patterns that existed before Act." Quaries v. Philip Morris, Inc., supra, 279 F. Supp. at 514. The Quarles rejected the contention that existing, nondiscriminatory seniority arrange-ts were so sanctified by Title VII that the effects of past discrimination in job gnments could not be overcome. We object the contention that Title VII ents the President acting through the Executive Order program from attempt-o remedy the absence from the Philadelphia construction labor of minority esmen in key trades.

herefore, that the Government had a right under the Philadelphia plan, to r affirmative action which would overcome that past discrimination without gressing the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

he court sealed that in on page 177 of the opinion, which states:

e Philadelphia Plan is valid Executive action designed to remedy the ived evil that minority tradesmen have not been included in the labor available for the performance of construction projects in which the federal rnment has a cost and performance interest. The Fifth Amendment does not ibit such action.

. Mr. President, the courts have rejected much of the argument we should—what in effect this amendment does—preclude prefer-al treatment under any and all circumstances, because it runs a foul ection 703(j).

I would also like to cite in that regard the opinion in the United States v. Ironworkers Local No. 86, 443 F.2d 544, decided in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals as recently as May of 1971, in which the court held, in a Title VII "pattern or practice" case, that there was an affirmative duty for minority recruitment where it was shown that there was past discrimination which now required correction, and that the court could order that correction affirmatively without violating section 703(j) relating to preferential treatment of individuals of any group, and so forth, where there had been illegality. The court would not allow a respondent to profit from his own illegality under cover of section 703(j).

Now, Mr. President, I am told, and I believe the information to be reliable, that under the decision made last week by Judge Bonsal in New York, in the Steamfitters case, an affirmative order was actually entered requiring a union local to take in a given number of minority group apprentices.

What this amendment seeks to do is to undo the Philadelphia plan and those court decisions. Incidentally, I take great pride in the fact that when the legality of the Philadelphia plan was argued here, and we had an opinion of the Attorney General which held it lawful pitted against an opinion of the Comptroller General's Office which held it unlawful, I think I was the principal Senator who sustained the doctrine of legality. And I am very grateful, naturally, that the courts took that view.

So, there I believe that the amendment does two things, both of which should be equally rejected.

First, it would undercut the whole concept of affirmative action as developed under Executive Order 11246 and thus preclude Philadelphia type plans.

Second, the amendment, in addition to dismantling the Executive order program, would deprive the courts of the opportunity to order affirmative action under Title VII of the type which they have sustained in order to correct a history of unjust and illegal discrimination in employment and thereby further dismantle the effort to correct these injustices.

So, for both reasons, Mr. President, I believe that the amendment should be rejected, and I hope very much that the Senate will do that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the two opinions which I have cited in this discussion be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

tive action program which includes specific goals for the utilization of minorr manpower in six skilled crafts: ironworkers, plumbers and pipefitters, steam fitters, sheetmetal workers, electrical workers, and elevator construction worke

Executive Order No. 11246 requires all applicants for federal assistance to i clude in their construction contracts specific provisions respecting fair emplo ment practices, including the provision:

"The contractor will take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are e ployed, and that employees are treated during employment, without regard their race, color, religion, sex or national origin." [6]

The Executive Order empowers the Secretary of Labor to issue rules and reg lations necessary and appropriate to achieve its purpose. On June 27, 19 Assistant Secretary of Labor Fletcher issued an order implementing the Exec tive Order in the five-county Philadelphia area. The order required bidders, prio to the award of contracts, to submit "acceptable affirmative action" program "which shall include specific goals of minority manpower utilization." The ordd contained a finding that enforcement of the "affirmative action" requirement o Executive Order No. 11246 had posed special problems in the construction trades:
Contractors and subcontractors must hire a new employee complement for eac job, and they rely on craft unions as their prime or sole source for labor. Th craft unions operate hiring halls. "Because of the exclusionary practices of labor organizations," the order finds "there traditionally has been only a small numbe of Negroes employed in these seven trades." [8]

The June 27, 1969 order provided that the Area Coordinator of the Office o Federal Contract Compliance, in conjunction with the federal contracting and administering agencies in the Philadelphia area, would determine definite stand ards for specific goals in a contractor's affirmative action program. After such standards were determined, each bidder would be required to commit itself to specific goals for minority manpower utilization. The order set forth factors to be considered in determining definite standards, including:

"(1) The current extent of minority group participation in the trade.

"(2) The availability of minority group persons for employment in such trade

"(3) The need for training programs in the area and, or the need to assure de mand for those in or from existing training programs.

"(4) The impact of the program upon the existing labor force."

Acting pursuant to the June 29, 1969 order, representatives of the Department of Labor held public hearings in Philadelphia on August 26, 27 and 28, 1969. On September 23, 1969, Assistant Secretary Fletcher made findings with respect to each of the listed factors and ordered that the following ranges be established as the standards for minority manpower utilization for each of the designated trades in the Philadelphia area for the following four years:

[In percent]

Identification of trade	Range of minority group employment
	Until Dec. 31, 1970	For 1971	For 1972	For 1973
Ironworkers	5–9	11–15	16–20	22–26
Plumbers and pipefitters	5–8	10–14	15–19	20–24
Steamfitters	5–8	11–15	15–19	20–24
Sheetmetal workers	4–8	9–13	14–18	19–23
Electrical workers	4–8	9–13	14–18	19–23
Elevator construction workers	4–8	9–13	14–18	19–23

The order of September 23, 1969 specified that on each invitation to bid each bidder would be required to submit an affirmative action program. The order further provided:

n November, 1969, the General State Authority of the Commonwealth of nsylvania issued invitations to bid for the construction of an earth dam Marsh Creek in Chester County, Pennsylvania. Although this dam is a Com- wealth project, part of the construction cost, estimated at over $3,000,000 be funded by federal monies under a program administered by the Depart- t of Agriculture.[6] The Secretary of Agriculture, one of the federal defend- , as a condition for payment of federal financial assistance for the project, uired the inclusion in each bid of a Philadelphia Plan Commitment in com- nce with the order of September 23, 1969. On November 14, 1969, the General e authority issued an addendum to the original invitation for bids requiring bidders to include such a commitment in their bids. It is alleged and not ed that except for the requirement by the Secretary of Agriculture that the adelphia Plan Commitment be included, the General State Authority would have imposed such a requirement on bidders.

he Association consists of more than eighty contractors in the five-county adelphia area who regularly employ workers in the six specified crafts, and collectively perform more than $150,000,000 of federal and federally assisted truction in that area annually. Each of the contractor plaintiffs is a regular er on federal and federally assisted construction projects. The complaint was prior to the opening of bids on the Marsh Creek dam. It sought injunctive f against the inclusion of a Philadelphia Plan Commitment requirement in invitation for bids. By virtue of a stipulation that the General State Author- would issue a new and superseding invitation for bids if the district court the Plan to be unlawful, the parties agreed that bids could be received out affecting the justiciability of the controversy. Bids were received on uary 7, 1970. One of the intervening contractor plaintiffs submitted a low and appeared at the time of the district court decision to be entitled to an rd of the contract.

he complaints of the Association and the Contractors refer to the fact that the ptroller General of the United States has opined that the Philadelphia Plan mitment is illegal and that disbursement of federal funds for the performance contract containing such a promise will be treated as unlawful.[7] The plain- point out that the withholding of funds after a contractor has commenced ormance would have catastrophic consequences, since contractors depend progress payments, and are in no position to complete their contracts with- such payments. They allege that the Philadelphia Plan is illegal and void he following reasons:

It is action by the Executive branch not authorized by the constitution or statute and beyond Executive power.

It is inconsistent with Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.[11]

It is inconsistent with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.[12]

The federal defendants moved both to dismiss the complaint under Rule 12 (1), Fed.R.Civ.P. and for summary judgment under Rule 56(b), Fed.R.Civ They asserted that the plaintiff's lacked standing and that they were entitled judgment as a matter of law. The plaintiffs moved for summary judgment. T district court held that the Association lacked standing to maintain the suit, t the Contractors had such standing, and that the Plan was valid. 311 F.Supp. 10 It granted summary judgment for the federal defendants, and the plaint appeal.

Standing

[1] The district court's holding that the Association lacked standing to s was handed down prior to that of the Supreme Court in Association of Data Pr cessing, Service Organizations, Inc. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 90 S.Ct. 827, 25 L.Ed. 184 (1970), and in the light of that decision and the more recent decision in Ci zens to Preserve Overton Park, Inc. v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 91 S.Ct. 814, 28 L.Ed. 136 (1971, is at least doubtful. We need not reach this issue, however, since t Contractor plaintiffs who as bidders are directly impacted by the requireme that they agree in their bid to comply with the Plan, clearly have standing. A bott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 87 S.Ct. 1507, 18 L.Ed.2d 681 (1967 All plaintiffs have been represented by the same attorney, and the presence absence of the Association as a plaintiff has no practical significance.

Executive power

[2] The plaintiffs contend that the Philadelphia Plan is social legislation local application enacted by the Executive without the benefit of statutory or con stitutional authority. They point out, probably correctly, that the Plan imposes the successful bidder on a project of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania record keeping and hiring practices which violate Pennsylvania law.[16] If the Plan wa adopted pursuant to a valid exercise of presidential power its provisions would of course, control over local law. See United States v. City of Chester, 144 F.2 415, 420 (3d Cir. 1944); cf. United States v. Allegheny County, 322 U.S. 174, 18 64 S.Ct. 908, 88 L.Ed. 1209 (1944); Panhandle Oil Co. v. State of Mississippi ex rel. Knox, 277 U.S. 218, 221, 48 S.Ct. 451, 72 L.Ed. 857 (1928). But, say the plaintiffs, where there is neither statutory authorization nor constitutional authority for the Executive action, no substantive federal requirements may be imposed upon a contract between the Commonwealth and its contractor.

The district court's answer is that the federal government "has the unrestricted power to fix the terms, conditions and those with whom it will deal." For this proposition it cites Perkins v. Lukens Steel Co., 310 U.S. 113, 60 S.Ct. 869, 84 L.Ed. 1108 (1940) and King v. Smith, 392 U.S. 309, 88 S.Ct. 2128, 20 L.Ed.2d 1118 (1968). Neither case is in point, however on the issue of Executive as distinguished from federal power. King v. Smith held that the Alabama [illegible] regulation was inconsistent with the Social Security Act, 42 U.S.C. [illegible] and points out that the federal government may impose the terms [illegible] upon which its money allotments may be disbursed. The conditions [illegible] to were imposed by Congress, not by the Executive branch. Perkins v. Lukens Steel Co. interprets the Public Contracts Act of June 30, 1933," which uires that sellers to the federal government pay prevailing minimum wages. holds that an administrative determination of prevailing wages in a given ustry made by the Secretary of Labor is not subject to judicial review on alf of a potential seller.[17] The opinion contains the language:

Like private individuals and businesses, the Government enjoys the unrestrict- power to produce its own supplies, to determine those with whom it will deal, to fix the terms and conditions upon which it will make needed purchases."[18]

The quoted language refers to federal power exercised pursuant to a statu- mandate. The case is not in point on the issue of Executive power absent h a mandate.

The federal defendants and several amici[19] contend that Executive power to ose fair employment conditions incident to the power to contract has been eld in this circuit and in the Fifth Circuit. They cite Farmer v. Philadelphia ctric Company, 329 F.2d 3 (3d Cir. 1964) and Farkas v. Texas Instrument, ., 375 F.2d 629 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 977, 88 S.Ct. 480, 19 L. Ed. 471 (1967). Both cases discussed the Executive Order program for achieving employment in the context of Government contracts rather than federally sted state contracts, and both assumed the validity of the Executive Order applicable.[20] Both cases held that even assuming the validity of the Ex- ive Order, it did not give rise to a private cause of action for damages by rty subjected to discrimination. Discussion of the validity of the Executive er was in each case dictum. Moreover, both Farmer and Farkas refer to 40 C. § 486(a) as the source of the Executive power to issue the order. That section authorizes the President to prescribe such policies and directives as leems necessary to effectuate the provisions of Chapter 10 of Title 40[21] and pter 4 of Title 41.[22] These chapters deal with procurement of Government perty and services, not with federal assistance programs. Thus even if Farmer Farkas were holdings rather than dicta as to Executive power, the hold- would not reach the instant case. The validity of the Executive Order pro- n as applied to the construction industry in state government contracts by ue of federal assistance has not been litigated, so far as we have been able to rmine, in any case reaching the courts of appeals.[23] Certainly no case has en which considers Executive power to impose, by virtue of federal assist- , contract terms in a state construction contract which are at variance with e law.

he limitations of Executive power have rarely been considered by the courts. of those rare instances is Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 72 S.Ct.863, 96 L.Ed. 1153 (1952). From the six concurring opinions and one enting opinion in that case, the most significant guidance for present pur- s may be found in that of Justice Jackson:

We may well begin by a somewhat over-simplified grouping of practical situa- s in which a President may doubt, or others may challenge, his powers, and distinguishing roughly the legal consequences of this factor of relativity.

When the President acts pursuant to an express or implied authorization ongress, his authority is at its maximum, for it includes all that he possesses is own right plus all that Congress can delegate. In these circumstances, and hese only, may he be said (for what it may be worth) to personify the fed- sovereignty. If his act is held unconstitutional under these circumstances, nally means that the Federal Government as an undivided whole lacks power. eizure executed by the President pursuant to an Act of Congress would be ported by the strongest of presumptions and the widest latitude of judicial rpretation, and the burden of persuasion would rest heavily on any who ot attack it.

The actual holding of Perkins was subsequently nullified by Congress. 66 Stat 308 2), 41 U.S.C. § 43a. See K. Davis, Administrative Law § 28.06 (1958).

2. When the President acts in absence of either a congressional grant or de of authority, he can only rely upon his own independent powers, but there zone of twilight in which he and Congress may have concurrent authority in which its distribution is uncertain. Therefore, congressional inertia, indi ence or quiescence may sometimes, at least as a practical matter, enable, if invite, measures on independent presidential responsibility. In this area, actual test of power is likely to depend on the imperatives of events and temporary impondérables rather than on abstract theories of law.

3. When the President takes measures incompatible with the expressed or plied will of Congress, his power is at its lowest ebb, for then he can only upon his own constitutional powers minus any constitutional powers Congress over the matter. Courts can sustain exclusive presidential contro such a case only by disabling the Congress from acting upon the subject. Pr dential claim to a power at once so conclusive and preclusive must be scrutin with caution, for what is at stake is the equilibrium established by our stitutional system." [24]

Plaintiffs contend that the Philadelphia Plan is inconsistent with the will Congress expressed in several statutes. We deal with these statutory contentio hereinafter. Thus for the moment we may set to one side consideration of Justi Jackson's third category, and turn to category (1), action expressly or pliedly authorized, and category (2), action in which the President has plied power to act in the absence of congressional preemption. To determi into which category the Philadelphia Plan falls a review of Executive Orde in the field of fair employment practices is helpful.

The first such order, Executive Order No. 8802 [25] was signed by Preside Roosevelt on June 25, 1941. It established in the Office of Production Manag ment a Committee on Fair Employment Practice, and it required that all Gover ment contracting agencies include in all defense contracts a covenant not discriminate against any worker because of race, creed, color, or national origi
The order contained no specific statutory reference, and describes the action " a prerequisite to the successful conduct of our national defense productio effort." In December 1941 Congress enacted "An Act to expedite the prosecutio of the war effort," [26] and on December 27, 1971, pursuant to that Act the Pres dent issued Executive Order No. 9001,[27] which granted to the War and Nav Departments and the Maritime Commission broad contract authority. Th order among other provisions stated that a non-discrimination clause would deemed incorporated by reference in all such contracts. On May 27, 1943, Exec tive Order No. 8802 was amended by Executive Order No. 9346 [28] which estab lished in the Office of Emergency Management of the Executive Office of th President a Committee on Fair Employment Practice. This order required th antidiscrimination clause in all government contracts rather than in defens contracts only. Still, the order was quite clearly bottomed on the President' war mobilization powers and was by its terms directed toward enhancing th pool of workers available for defense production.

On December 18, 1945, President Truman signed Executive Order No. 9664, which continued the Committee established by Executive Orders Nos. 8802 an 9346 "for the periods and subject to the conditions stated in the National We Agencies Appropriation Act, 1946 (Public Law 156, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., ap proved July 17, 1945)" On February 2, 1951, the President signed Executive Order No. 10210,[29] which transferred to the Department of Defense the contract ing powers referred to in Executive Order No. 9001. The order continued th provision that a non-discrimination clause would be deemed incorporated b reference in all defense contracts. It referenced the First War Powers Act, 194 as amended. By a subsequent series of Executive Orders, Executive Order N 10210 was extended to other Government agencies engaged in defense related pro curement.[30] On December 3, 1951 the President signed Executive Order N

08,[32] creating the Committee on Government Contract Compliance, which was rged with the duty of obtaining compliance with the non-discrimination tract provisions. The statutory authorities referenced in Executive Order 10308 are the Defense Production Act of 1950 [33] and 31 U.S.C. § 691.[34] ference to the Defense Production Act of 1950 shows that the President was l acting, pursuant to his national defense powers, to assure maximum ization of available manpower.

President Eisenhower on August 13, 1953, by Executive Order No. 10479 [35] oked Executive Order No. 10308 and transferred the compliance functions the Committee on Government Contract Compliance to the Government Con- ct Committee.[36] In this order for the first time there is no mention of defense duction. For the first time the Committee is authorized to receive complaints violations,[37] and to conduct activities not directly related to federal procure- nt.[38] On September 3, 1954, by Executive Order No. 10557 [39] the required form Government contract provision was revised. The new provision was much re specific, required the imposition of the contractor's obligation on his sub- tractors, and required the posting of appropriate notices. The Eisenhower ers, while they did not refer to defense production and did authorize the plance Committee to encourage nondiscrimination outside the field of Gov- nent contracts, were still restricted in direct application to federal govern- t procurement.

While the orders do not contain any specific statutory reference other than appropriations statute, 31 U.S.C. § 690, they would seem to be authorized by broad grant of procurement authority with respect to Title 40 and 41." ess than in the case of defense procurement it is in the interest of the United es in all procurement to see that its suppliers are not over the long run easing its costs and delaying its programs by excluding from the labor pool liable minority workmen. In the area of Government procurement Executive nority to impose non-discrimination contract provisions falls in Justice sson's first category: action pursuant to the express or implied authorization Congress.

Executive Order No. 10925 [41] signed by President Kennedy on March 6, 1961, ng other things enlarged the notice requirements and specified that the sident's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity could by rule, regula- or order impose sanctions for violation. Coverage still extended only to fed- government contracts. Significantly for purposes of this case, however, the ired contract language was amended to add the provision:

The Contractor will take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are em- ed, and that employees are treated during employment, without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin." [42]

he Philadelphia Plan is simply a refined approach to this "affirmative action" date. Applied to federal procurement the affirmative action clause is supported ie same Presidential procurement authority that supports the non-discrimina- clause generally.

he most significant change in the Executive Order program for present pur- s occurred on June 22, 1963 when the President signed Executive Order No. 4, [43] which amended Executive Order No. 10925 by providing that the same non-discrimination contract provisions heretofore required in all federal proc ment contracts must also be included in all federally assisted construction tracts. By way of Executive Order No. 11246 [6] issued in 1965, President Joh transferred to the Secretary of Labor the functions formerly specified in Ex tive Order Nos. 10925 and 11114, and he continued both the affirmative a requirement and the coverage of federally assisted construction contracts.

[3, 4] While all federal procurement contracts must include an affirm action covenant [7] the coverage on federally assisted contracts has been exte to construction contracts only. This choice is significant, for it demonstrates the Presidents were not attempting by the Executive Order program merel impose their notions of desirable social legislation on the states wholesale. Ra they acted in the one area in which discrimination in employment was most li to affect the cost and the progress of projects in which the federal governm had both financial and completion interests.

In direct procurement the federal government has a vital interest in assu that the largest possible pool of qualified manpower be available for the acc plishment of its projects. It has the identical interest with respect to federa assisted construction projects. When the Congress authorizes an appropriation a program of federal assistance, and authorizes the Executive branch to im ment the program by arranging for assistance to specific projects, in the abse of specific statutory regulations it must be deemed to have granted to the Pr dent a general authority to act for the protection of federal interests.

In the case of Executive Order Nos. 11246 and 11114 three Presidents have ac by analogizing federally assisted construction to direct federal procurement.
such action has not been authorized by Congress (Justice Jackson's first ca gory), at the least it falls within the second category. If no congressional ena ments prohibit what has been done, the Executive action is valid. Particularly this so when Congress, aware of Presidential action with respect to federa assisted construction projects since June of 1963, has continued to make app priations for such projects. We conclude, therefore, that unless the Philadelp Plan is prohibited by some other congressional enactment, its inclusion as a p condition for federal assistance was within the implied authority of the Presid and his designees. We turn, then to a consideration of the statutes on which pla tiffs rely.

The Civil Rights Act of 1964

[5] Plaintiffs suggest that by enacting Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 19 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq., which deals comprehensively with discrimination employment, Congress occupied the field. The express reference in that statute Executive Order No. 10925 or any other Executive Order prescribing fair empl ment practices for Government contractors, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-8(d), indicat however, that Congress contemplated continuance of the Executive Order p gram. Moreover we have held that the remedies established by Title VII are n exclusive. Young v. International Telephone & Telegraph Co., 438 F. 2d 32d C 1971).

[6, 7] But while Congress has no prohibited Presidential action in the area fair employment on federal or federally assisted contracts, the Executive is bou by the express prohibitions of Title VII. The argument most strenuously advanc against the Philadelphia Plan is that requires action by employers which violat the Act. Plaintiffs point to § 703(j), 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(j):

"Nothing contained in this subchapter shall be interpreted to require any em ployer * * * [or] labor organization * * * to grant preferential treatment to an individual or to any group because of the race * * * of such individual or grou on account of an imbalance which may exist with respect to the total number percentage of persons of any race * * * employed * * * in comparison with th total number or percentage of persons of such race * * * in the available wor force in any community * * * or other area."

The Plan requires that the contractor establish specific goals for utilization available minority manpower in six trades in the five county area. Possibly s [illegible] could not be compelled, under the authority of Title VII, to emb such a program, although § 703(j) refers to percentages of minorities in [illegible] force rather than percentages of minority tradesmen in an availab work force. We do not meet that issue here, however, for the source of equired contract provision is Executive Order No. 11246. Section 703(j) is itation only upon Title VII, not upon any other remedies, state or federal.

Plaintiffs, and more particularly the union amici, contend that the Plan tes Title VII because it interferes with a bona fide seniority system. Sec-703(h), 42 U.S.C. § 2000e–2(h), provides:

otwithstanding any other provision of this subchapter, it shall not be an wful employment practice for an employer to employ different standards of ensation, or different terms, conditions, or privileges of employment pursu- a bona fide seniority or merit system * * *."

e unions, it is said, refer men from the hiring halls on the basis of seniority, he Philadelphia Plan interferes with this arrangement since few minority smen have high seniority. Just as with § 703(j), however, § 703(h) is a ıtion only upon Title VII, not upon any other remedies.[46]

Plaintiffs contend that the Plan, by imposing remedial quotas, requires to violate the basic prohibitions of Section 703(a), 42 U.S.C. § 2000e–2(a): shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—to fail or refuse to hire * * * any individual * * * because of such indi- 's race * * * or to * * * classify his employees in any way which would deprive * * * any idual of employment opportunities * * * because of such individual's race ause the Plan requires that the contractor agree to specific goals for ity employment in each of the six trades and requires a good faith effort ieve those goals, they argue, it requires (1) that they refuse to hire some tradesmen, and (2) that they classify their employees by race, in viola- f § 703(a). This argument rests on an overly simple reading both of the nd of the findings which led to its adoption.

order of September 23, 1969 contained findings that although overall ity group representation in the construction industry in the five-county lelphia area was thirty per cent, in the six trades representation was ximately one per cent. It found, moreover, that this obvious underrepre- ion was due to the exclusionary practices of the unions representing the ades. It is the practice of building contractors to rely on union hiring halls prime source for employees. The order made further findings as to the bility of qualified minority tradesmen for employment in each trade, and the impact of an affirmative action program with specific goals upon the ig labor force. The Department of Labor found that contractors could t to the specific employment goals "without adverse impact on the exist- bor force." Some minority tradesmen could be recruited, in other words, ıt eliminating job opportunities for white tradesmen.

read § 703(a) in the manner suggested by the plaintiffs we would have to ute to Congress the intention to freeze the status quo and to foreclose ial action under other authority designed to overcome existing evils. We n no such intention either from the language of the statute or from its tive history. Clearly the Philadelphia Plan is color-conscious. Indeed the ıeaning which can be attributed to the "affirmative action" language which March of 1961 has been included in successive Executive Orders is that ıment contractors must be color-conscious. Since 1941 the Executive Order n has recognized that discriminatory practices exclude available minority wer from the labor pool. In other contexts color-consciousness has been l to be an appropriate remedial posture. Porcelli v. Titus, 302 F. Supp.).N.J. 1969), aff'd. 431 F.2d 1254 (3d Cir. 1970); Norwalk CORE v. Nor- Redevelopment Agency, 395 F. 2d 920, 931 (2d Cir. 1968); Offermann v. vski, 378 F.2d 22, 24 (2d Cir. 1967). s same subsection refers to ability tests. The Supreme Court recently in Griggs v. ower Co., 401 U.S. 424, 91 S.Ct. 849, 28 L.Ed.2d 158 (1971) considered the extent h such tests are permissible. The Court said:

ld that the tests must be job related. Nor can seniority make permanent the effects discrimination. Local 189, United Papermakers & Paperworkers v. United States, d 980 (5th Cir. 1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 919, 90 S.Ct. 926, 25 L.Ed.2d 108 ; Quarles v. Philip Morris, Inc., 279 F.Supp. 505 (E.D.Va. 1968).

The Quarles case rejected the contention that existing, nondiscrimina seniority arrangements were so sanctified by Title VII that the effects of discrimination in job assignments could not be overcome.[47] We reject the tention that Title VII prevents the President acting through the Execu Order program from attempting to remedy the absence from the Philadel construction labor of minority tradesmen in key trades.

[10] What we have said about Title VII applies with equal force to Titl of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000 et seq. That title prohibits ra and other discrimination in any program or activity receiving federal as ance.[48] This general prohibition against discrimination cannot be construe limiting Executive authority in defining appropriate affirmative action on the of a contractor.

We hold that the Philadelphia Plan does not violate the Civil Rights Ac 1964.

The National Labor Relations Act

The June 27, 1969 order, par 8(b) provides:

"It is no excuse that the union with which the contractor has a collect bargaining agreement failed to refer minority employees. Discrimination referral for employment, even if pursuant to provisions of a collective bargain agreement, is prohibited by the National Labor Relations Act and the C Rights Act of 1964. It is the longstanding uniform policy of OFCC that c tractors and subcontractors have a responsibility to provide equal employm opportunity if they want to participate in federally involved contracts. To t extent they have delegated the responsibility for some of their employm practices to some other organization or agency which prevents them from me ing their obligations pursuant to Executive Order 11246, as amended, such c tractors cannot be considered to be in compliance with Executive Order 112 as amended, or the implementing rules, regulations and orders."

The union amici vigorously contend that the Plan Violates the National La Relations Act by interfering with the exclusive union referral systems to wh the contractors have in collective bargaining agreements bound themselv Exclusive hiring hall contracts in the building and construction industry a validated by Section 8(f) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S. § 158(f). In Teamsters Local 357 v. NLRB, 365 U.S. 667, 81 S. Ct. 835, 6 L.Ed 11 (1961), the Supreme Court held that the National Labor Relations Boa could not proscribe exclusive hiring hall agreements as illegal per se since Co gress had not chosen to prohibit hiring halls. It is argued that the President attempting to do what the Supreme Court said the National Labor Relatio Board could not do—prohibit a valid hiring hall agreement. Of course collecti bargaining agreements which perpetuate the effects of past discrimination a unlawful under Title VII. Local 189, United Papermakers & Paperworkers United States, supra; United States v. Sheet Metal Workers, Local 36, 416 F 123, 132 (8th Cir. 1969). The findings of past discrimination which justifi remedial action in these cases were made in judicial proceedings, however. S 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g). The amici contend that the Assistant Secretary's no judicial findings of prior exclusionary practices is insufficient to support t Plan's implied requirement that the contractor look to other sources for e ployees if the unions fail to refer sufficient minority group members.

[11, 12] It is clear that while hiring hall arrangements are permitted federal law they are not required. Nothing in the National Labor Relations A purports to place any limitation upon the contracting power of the federal go ernment. We have said hereinabove that in imposing the affirmative action quirement on federally assisted construction contracts the President acted wit his implied contracting authority. The assisted agency may either agree to [illegible] with contractors who will comply with the affirmative action covena or forego assistance. The prospective contractors may either agree to undert the affirmative action covenant, or forego bidding on federally assisted work Plan violates neither the Constitution nor federal law, the fact that e contractor is legally irrelevant.

ctually, of course, that variance is quite relevant. Factually it is entirely y that the economics of the marketplace will produce an accommodation een the contract provisions desired by the unions and those desired by the e of the funds. Such an accommodation will be no violation of the National r Relations Act.

3] The absence of a judicial finding of past discrimination is also legally evant. The Assistant Secretary acted not pursuant to Title VII but pursuant e Executive Order. Regardless of the cause, exclusion from the available pool of minority tradesmen is likely to have an adverse effect upon the cost completion of construction projects in which the federal government is in-
ted. Even absent a finding that the situation found to exist in the five-county was the result of deliberate past discrimination, the federal interest in oving the availability of key tradesmen in the labor pool would be the . While a court must find intentional past discrimination before it can re affirmative action under 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g), that section imposes no int upon the measures which the President may require of the beneficiaries leral assistance. The decision of his designees as to the specific affirmative n which would satisfy the local situation did not violate the National Labor ions Act and was not prohibited by 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g).

Consistency With Executive Order No. 11246

15] The plaintiffs argue that the affirmative action mandate of § 202 of utive Order No. 11246 is limited by the more general requirement in the section, "The contractor will not discriminate against any employee or ant for employment because of race, creed, color, or national origin." They ld that properly construed the affirmative action referred to means only ng against actual present discrimination, not action looking toward the yment of specific numbers of minority tradesmen.
tion 201 of the Executive Order provides:
e Secretary of Labor shall be responsible for the administration of Parts II rnment contracts] II [federal assistance] of this Order and shall adopt rules and regulations and issue such orders as he deems necessary and priate to achieve the purposes thereof." ing under this broad delegation of authority the Labor Department in a of orders of local application made it clear that it interpreted "affirmative " to require more than mere policing against actual present discrimina-Adminstrative action pursuant to an Executive Order is invalid and sub-ttorney General has issued an opinion that the Philadelphia Plan is valid,[50] he President has continued to acquiesce in the interpretation of the Execurder made by his designee. The Labor Department interpretation of the ative action clause must, therefore, be deferred to by the courts.

Plaintiffs also contend that the signing of the June 27, 1969, and Sep-r 23, 1969 orders by an assistant secretary rather than by the Secretary or makes those orders procedurally invalid. Here they rely on § 401 which es:
e Secretary of Labor may delegate to any officer, agency, or employee in xecutive branch of the Government, any function or duty of the Secrender Parts II and III of this Order, except authority to promulgate rules gulations of a general nature." Plan, they say, is a rule or regulation of a general nature, and could have ssued only by the Secretary. In the first place the Plan is not general. It ed upon findings as to the available construction manpower in a specific market. Moreover, the interpretation of § 401 made by the administrator s the same deference from the courts as is required toward his interpres of the order. We will not second guess his delegation to the Assistant ary of the duty of enforcing the affirmative action covenant.

The due process contentions

[17] Plaintiffs urge that the Plan violates the Due Process Clause of the F Amendment in several ways.

First, they allege that it imposes on the contractors contradictory duties possible of attainment. The impossibility arises, they say, because the Pla quires both an undertaking to seek achievement of specific goals of mino employment and an undertaking not to discriminate against any qualifie plicant or employee, and because a decision to hire any black employee n sarily involves a decision not to hire a qualified white employee. This is sophistry. The findings in the September 23, 1969 order discloses that the cific goals may be met, considering normal employee attrition and anticipa growth in the industry, without adverse effects on the existing labor force.
cording to the order the construction industry has an essentially transie labor force and is often in short supply in key trades. The complaint does allege that these findings misstate the underlying facts.

Next the plaintiffs urge that the Plan is arbitrary and capricious adminis tive action, in that it singles out the contractors and makes them take act to remedy the situation created by acts of past discrimination by the e unions. They point to the absence of any proceedings under Title VII against offending unions, and urge that they are being discriminated against. This ar ment misconceives the source of the authority for the affirmative action p gram: Plaintiffs are not being discriminated against. They are merely be invited to bid on a contract with terms imposed by the source of the funds. T affirmative action covenant is no different in kind than other covenants sp fied in the invitation to bid. The Plan does not impose a punishment for p misconduct. It exacts a covenant for present performance.

Some amici urge that selection of the five-county Philadelphia area was ar trary and capricious and without basis in fact. The complaint contains a conc sive allegation to this effect. No supporting facts are alleged. It is not alleged, example, that the specific goals for minority manpower utilization would different if more or fewer counties were to be included in the September 23, 19 order. The union amici do question the findings made by the Assistant Secreta of Labor, but the complaint, fairly read, does not put these findings in iss

We read the allegation with respect to the five-county area as putting in iss the legal authority of the Secretary to impose a specific affirmative action quirement in any separate geographic area. The simple answer to this contenti is that federally assisted construction contracts are performed at specific ti and in specific places. What is appropriate affirmative action will vary accordi to the local manpower conditions prevailing at the time.

Finally, the plaintiffs urge that the specific goals specified by the Plan are rac quotas prohibited by the equal protection aspect of the Fifth Amendment. S Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 641 642, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 22 L.Ed. 600 (1969 Schneider v. Rusk, 377 U.S. 163, 84 S.Ct. 1187, 12 L.Ed.2d 218 (1964); Ba
v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497, 74 S.Ct. 693, 98 L.Ed. 884 (1954). The Philadelph Plan is valid Executive action designed to remedy the perceived evil that mi ity tradesmen have not been included in the labor pool available for the pe formance of construction projects in which the federal government has a co and performance interest. The Fifth Amendment does not prohibit such a plaintiffs. They contend that neither the finding of past discrimination by t [illegible] actions made in the June 27, 1969 order nor the statistical findings the September 23, 1969 order should be accepted as true.

[18, 19] The federal defendants conceded in the district court that the affida of Mr. Macauley, to which copies of both orders were attached, was offered the truth of the underlying facts but only to identify the orders. This co [illegible] significant for the decisions on the motions under Rule 12(b)(6 rmining these goals. We have dealt hereinabove with that challenge insofar t questions compliance with the procedures specified in Executive Order 11246.

sofar as the complaint challenges on broader administrative law grounds the ods by which the Assistant Secretary assembled the data for the Septem-23, 1969 order, we hold that public hearings after notice were an appropriate ns for the administrative agency to obtain the information needed for ined judgment. Cf. Shannon 1. Department of Housing & Urban Development, F.2d 809 (3d Cir. 1971). No public hearing was held prior to the issuance he June 27, 1969 order, which contains the Assistant Secretary's finding of exclusionary union practices. He relied upon published data, however, which f may have been sufficient to justify administrative action leading to the fication of contract provisions.

e need not decide that issue, however, for in our view the data in the Sep-er 23, 1969 order revealing the percentages of utilization of minority group esmen in the six trades compared with the availability of such tradesmen in ive-county area, justified issuance of the order without regard to a finding the cause of the situation. The federal interest is in maximum availability nstruction tradesmen for the projects in which the federal government has t and completion interest. A finding as to the historical reason for the sion of available tradesmen from the labor pool is not essential for federal actual remedial action.

e judgment of the district court will be affirmed.

ist five building construction unions,[2] located in Seattle, Washington, and joint apprenticeship and training committees associated with them.[3] The laint alleged that the named unions and joint apprenticeship and training nittees had denied employment opportunities to blacks on account of their and that certain policies, practices and conduct, described therein, constituted ttern or practice" of resistance to full employment of blacks in violation tle VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C § 200e et seq. The district , William J. Lindberg, Chief Judge, found that all the named unions and apprenticeship and training committees had pursued a pattern or practice nduct which denied blacks, on account of their race, equal employment rtunities in the construction industry; two judgments and decrees followed.[4] ut one of the defendants[5] have joined in the instant appeal.[6] We affirm.

ny of the basic facts were largely undisputed and were stipulated by the es. Appellant building trades unions are labor organizations which repre- a large number of workmen employed in the construction industry in and Seattle, Washington.[7] Through the union hiring halls, appellant unions ively control a large percentage of the employment opportunities in the ruction industry in that area. Under the bargaining agreements entered into en the contractor-employers and the unions, the unions must be given first tunity to fill positions. Contractors may not employ non-union workers s the positions are not filled by the unions within a period of time stipulated the bargaining agreement.

joint apprenticeship and training committees who join in this appeal are s legally separate and distinct from the specific unions with which they ssociated. The committees consist of members representing both the unions he employers,[8] and are formed to oversee and run the apprenticeship pro- s whose purpose is to train apprentices to become journeymen in the respec- rades. Once an applicant is accepted into the program,[9] he becomes inden- to the joint apprenticeship and training committee for a period of years.[10] erating Engineers Local 32 was party to a consent decree and thus did not join appeal. The Ironworkers JATC chose not to join in the appeal and were rep- ed by other counsel.

er the court found that the unions and the joint apprenticeship and training tees had engaged in a pattern of practice of discrimination, the court, desiring ture proper and effective relief, ordered the parties (Electrical Workers Local fendant contractor associations and the United States) to "take all steps avail- persuade or require" the Electrical Workers Joint Apprenticeship and Training ttee (hereinafter Electrical Workers JATC) to intervene for purposes of relief ject to conduct of the apprenticeship program. The court specifically noted that not intend to find or imply that the Electrical Workers JATC had discriminated blacks, but entered the order so as to impart "uniformity in procedures rela- the JATC's connected with the respective defendant unions found to have inated." While appellants take exception to this order, we see no error in the equesting the full cooperation of the defendants in structuring appropriate relief.

re specifically, the court found that the unions had the following membership: Vorkers Local 86, approximately 920 members; Plumbers and Pipefitters Local proximately 1900 members; Electrical Workers Local 46, approximately 1750 rs; Sheet Metal Workers Local 99, approximately 900 members.

Plumbers and Pipefitters JATC is comprised of five representatives of Local l three representatives of the Seattle Plumbing and Pipefitting Employers, one ntative of the Refrigeration Contractors' Association and one member from the Sound Shipbuilders Association. As for the Sheet Metal Workers JATC, the committee joining in this appeal, it is comprised of eight members, four repre- ces of Local 99 and four representatives of contractors party to a collective ing agreement.

Sheet Metal Workers JATC provides an example of the process leading to nce into an apprenticeship program. An applicant must be between the ages of 24 (excluding time spent in the military service), pass a GATB aptitude test, e an application form and submit a high school transcript before he is con- Preference is given to high school graduates. Assuming these threshold re- nts are met, thereby allowing the applicant the right to be considered by the ttee, he is then interviewed in order to evaluate his qualifications and the com- then votes whether to accept him or not. The chairman of the Sheet Metal Work- JC indicated that they "will more or less look favorably on an individual who nily members who are sheet metal workers."

and participates in a program which consists of both on-the-job training classroom instruction. It is through this program that participants gain a sion to the union as a journeyman, thereby obviating the necessity of takin avenue of direct admission which demands that an applicant meet co requirements such as possessing a specified number of years of experience, within a given age range, having letters of recommendation, and pass journeyman's examination.

The court found appellant unions and joint apprenticeship and training mittees to have engaged in a pattern or practice of discrimination which d blacks employment opportunities in the construction industry. It based its clusions on specific findings of discrimination which included (1) the em ment of tests and admission criteria which had little or no relation to ca skills and which had a differential impact upon blacks, and which operat exclude them from entrance into the unions or referrals to available jobs; the active recruitment of whites while at the same time giving little or n licity to information concerning procedures for gaining union membership, referral opportunities, and the operation of the apprenticeship training prog in the black community; (3) the granting of preferential treatment to fri and relatives of existing members of the unions; and (4) the differential a cation of admission requirements, often by-passing such requirements in cas white applicants. In addition, several instances were shown where black wor who sought referrals were turned away without reason or after being giv spurious reason in support of its action; and in some cases, unions refus place blacks on the referral lists, thus assuring their inability to secure w

The relief granted by the court took the form of two judgments and decr the first related to the unions and the second related to the joint apprentice and training committees. In the first, the court enjoined the unions from en ing in future discrimination with respect to referrals for employment and acquisition or retention of union membership. It ordered that the unions detailed records of their operations and actively disseminate information in black community describing the operation of the referral systems, members requirements and available job opportunities. Specific relief was granted by court to certain individuals or groups of persons ordering the unions to them immediate construction referrals in response to the next contractor requ for workers and to open their membership application lists to these persons. court retained jurisdiction for such further relief as it deems necessary or ap priate to further effectuate equal employment opportunities.

Judgment and Decree No. 2 pertained to the joint apprenticeship and train committees. The committees were enjoined from all future discrimination aga applicants for apprenticeship on account of their race. It further ordered committees to disseminate information concerning the requirements and pr dures for admission to the apprenticeship programs so as to apprise blacks wi the geographical area of available opportunities. The respective committees ordered to consider all applicants who met the standards set out by the co in the decree. In addition to the above, an affirmative action program included in the decree in the hope of eradicating the vestiges of past discr nation. Among the provisions under this program were the creation of spe apprenticeship programs designed to meet the special needs of average blacks w no previous experience or special skills in the trade, or black applicants have some previous experience or special skills in the trade but do not journeymen standards. The court also retained jurisdiction over the committ in order to grant such further relief as it deems necessary.

I. FINDINGS OF FACT

We are confronted initially with the appellants' contention that the "clea erroneous" rule[1] should not govern our review of the findings of fact made the district court. They reason that the rationale underlying the rule is that appellate court should defer to the judgment of the trial court because the judge has access to demeanor evidence and could readily assess the credib of the witnesses. Hence, where, as they allege, "large reliance" is placed writing documents and depositions, they claim the rule does not apply documentary evidence played a small part in the trial judge's decision.

[1] See Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a).

It is Appellants' characterization of the proceeding below as one in wh the trial judge placed "large reliance" on documentary evidence and deposit ignores the fact that over fifty five witnesses testified, many of whom w ponents prior to trial. Even if "large reliance" was placed on written evidence, clearly erroneous rule would still apply. We examined this problem in ndgren v. Freeman, 307 F.2d 104 (9th Cir. 1962), and found the better rule to that the clearly erroneous rule does apply, even where the factual issues are ided on writen evidence alone.[12] Appellants would have us review the evidence novo and freely substitute our judgment for that of the trial judge. We line to do so. The well-established rule is that we "may not substitute our gment if conflicting inferences may be drawn from established facts by sonable men, and the inferences drawn by the trial court are those which ld have been drawn by reasonable men." Lundgren, supra, 307 F.2d at 113. See Jacobson v. Colorado Fuel and Iron Corp., 409 F.2d 1263, 1267 (9th Cir. 9); Friend v. H. A. Friend & Co., 416 F.2d 526, 531 (9th Cir. 1969); United tes v. Hanna Nickel Smelting Co., 400 F.2d 944, 947 (9th Cir. 1968).

3] Appellants further contend that the district court's findings were based on dence which it had previously excluded. Prior to trial, the Attorney General mined the application forms found in the files of the joint apprenticeship and ining committees. At trial, appellants objected to the introduction of charts ch were made from information found in the application forms on the ground t they did not qualify for admission under the business records exception he hearsay rule.[13] The court, sustaining, in part, appellants' objection, held evidence was inadmissible to prove the truth of the matters contained ein, but was admissible as evidence of the type of information sought by committees and relied upon by them in reaching their evaluative decisions. he contention of appellants is unsupportable, given the limited purpose for ch the information contained in the applications was used. As we noted in llips v. United States, 356 F.2d 297, 307 (9th Cir. 1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 86 S. Ct. 1573, 16 L.Ed.2d 548 (1966), where a similar argument was raised. ne purpose of that section [Business Records Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1732, as nded, 28 U.S.C. § 1732 (Supp. IV 1961)] is to provide, in the case of business ords, an exception to the hearsay rule, and to provide an acceptable substitute specific authentication of each business record. We are not here concerned n the hearsay rule because the letters and requests contained in exhibits 968 984 were not offered in proof of the statements contained therein. They e introduced only to show defendants had knowledge that such statements been made. Nor are we concerned with authentication since the authenticity ne documents need not be established where the only purpose of the documents o show notice.

ccord: United States v. Middlebrooks, 431 F.2d 299, 301 (5th Cir. 1970). As in llips, supra, the information contained in the applications was not proffered rove the statements therein, but to show what information was sought by the renticeship committees in the applications and relied upon by them in making r decisions. The application form information was properly admitted for purpose.

ne district judge's duty was to consider the evidence, reach all reasonable rferences therefrom, and make specific findings of fact and conclusions of . This task was necessarily a difficult one and involved the review of extensive testimony, many depositions and a great amount of accompanying documen- evidence. Its proportions are reflected in the size of the reporter's transcript ch alone numbers twenty volumes. In his carefully written and excellent ion, covering some fifty pages, Judge Lindberg made separate findings of as to each party, carefully analyzing the supportive evidence found in the ord. In these findings of fact Judge Lindberg has pointed out by page reference he record, the testimony, stipulations, admitted facts, and exhibits upon ch his findings were based. It would serve no purpose to repeat such refer- s in this opinion. It is not our duty to relitigate the facts at this time. Having ewed the findings below and the record before us, we are fully convinced the findings are amply supported by the evidence.

II. CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

t the outset, appellants contest the use of racial statistics to prove a "pattern ractice" of discrimination as a matter of law. They categorize this mode of of as a statistical "numbers game", incapable of proving a violation of [12] A number of courts have held that in cases where the findings are based on documentary evidence, on uncontradicted testimony, on stipulated facts, or on testimony n by depositions, the trial court's findings are given only slight weight on appeal. e.g., Galena Oaks Corp. v. Scofield, 218 F.2d 217 (5th Cir. 1954); Hart v. Gallis, F.2d 297 (7th Cir. 1960. See generally, 5 J. Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 52.04 (2d 1959).

[13] 28 U.S.C. § 1732, as amended, 28 U.S.C. § 1732 (Supp. IV 1961).

Title VII. We believe this argument is without support as the use of statisti is well established in recent Title VII cases.[14]

In the district court's opinion, a separate statement was made as to each a pellant concerning the racial composition of its membership. As to appella unions, it was stated: Ironworkers Local 86 had approximately 920 members January 1970, only one of whom was black.[15] Sheet Metal Workers Local 99 ha approximately 900 members in its construction division, only one of whom wa black:[16] and Plumbers and Pipe-fitters Local 32 had approximately 1900 membe in its construction classification, only one of whom was black.[17] In addition, wit respect to the appellant joint apprenticeship and training committees, the cou noted: Sheet Metal Workers JATC had 100 apprentices indentured in its progra and seven were black.[18] Plumbers and Pipefitters JATC had 104 building trad apprentices and none were black.

The district court also made a specific finding applicable to all parties concern ing the racial composition of the City of Seattle where the main offices, hirin halls and training facilities of the appellants are found. Approximately 42,00 blacks reside in the City, constituting roughly seven percent of the population This information came from an expert witness, a demographer, called to testify by the Attorney General.[19]

[4, 5] Since the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964,[20] the courts have frequently relied upon statistical evidence to prove a violation. This judical practice has most often taken the form of the use of such data as a basis for allocating the burden of proof. On the basis that a showing of an absence or a small black union membership in a demographic area containing a substantial number of black workers raises an inference that the racial imbalance is the result of discrimination, the burden of going forward and the burden of persuasion is shifted to the accused, for such a showing is enough to establish a prima facie case.[21] In many cases the only available avenue of proof is the use of racial statistics to uncover clandestine and covert discrimination by the employer or union involved. One court, in Parham v. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., 433 F. 2d 421, 426 (8th Cir. 1970), held as a matter of law, without other supportive evidence, that the statistics introduced showing an extraordinarily small number of black employees, notwithstanding a small number who held menial jobs, established a violation of Title VII. Of course, as is the case with all statistics, their use is conditioned by the existence of proper supportive facts[22] and the absence of variables which would undermine the reasonableness of the inference of discrimination which is drawn. It is our belief that the often-cited aphorism, "statistics often tell much and Courts listen,"[23] has particular application in Title VII cases.

[6] Here, even if we were to accept appellant's assertion that statistics alone cannot show as a matter of law that there has been a violation, it would not command our overturning of the conclusions of law reached by the district court. We are not faced with a situation where a court has relied upon statistical data

[14] The reliance upon statistical evidence to prove discriminatory practices is not new to the courts. See, e.g., Swain v. Alabama, 380 U.S. 202, 85 S.Ct. 824, 13 L.Ed. 759 (1965); Patton v. Mississippi, 332 U.S. 463, 68 S.Ct. 184, 92 L.Ed. 76 (1947); Hill v. Texas, 316 U.S. 400, 62 S.Ct. 1159, 86 L.Ed. 1559 (1942); Norris v. Alabama, 294 U.S. 587, 55 S.Ct. 579, 79 L.Ed. 1074 (1935) (jury selection cases); F. W. Woolworth Co., 25 N.L.R.B. 1362 (1940) (anti-union discrimination case). See generally, Fiss, A Theory of Fair Employment Laws, 38 U.Chi.L.Rev. 235 (1971).

[15] The black was Howard Lewis, who was admitted on September 12, 1969, pursuant to an order of the Washington State Board Against Discrimination.

[16] His name was Leonard O'Neale, a member of Local 99 since the summer of 1968.

[17] He was David Williams, a welder, who was accepted in a period where there was an acute shortage of welders, forcing Local 32 to recruit from the Boilermakers' Union.

[18] Five were accepted after September, 1969, and the remaining two were accepted in May, 1968.

[19] Aside from their castigation of the use of such information as an engagement in a statistical "numbers game," appellants further contend that this data is irrelevant as the appellants' jurisdiction extends beyond the City of Seattle, rendering such statistics misleading. This is simply answered by the fact that the City has the single largest population within their jurisdiction and is that area from which they would most likely draw the vast majority of workers for apprenticeship, referral and membership purposes. We also recognize that appellants made no objection to this testimony at trial. We feel appellants' argument has no merit.

[21] See, e.g., United States v. Local 38, IBEW, 428 F.2d 144, 151 (6th Cir. 1970); EEOC v. United Association of Journeymen, etc., 311 F.Supp. 468 (S.D. Ohio 1970); United States ex rel. Mitchell v. Hayes Int'l Corp., 415 F.2d 1038, (5th Cir. 1969); United States v. Sheet Metal Workers Local 36, 416 F.2d 123 (8th Cir. 1969).

[22] Fiss, supra note 14, at 272-73. See also Note, Enforcement of Fair Employment Under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 32 U.Chi.L.Rev. 420, 461 (1965).

[23] State of Alabama v. United States, 304 F.2d 583, 586 (5th Cir.), aff'd per curiam, 371 U.S. 37, 83 S.Ct. 115, 9 L.Ed.2d 112 (1962).

ne. On the contrary, in its findings, the district court cited specific instances discrimination on the part of the unions and apprenticeship committees. Thus statistical evidence is complementary rather than exclusive. We see no merit appellants' complaint regarding the use of statistics.

Appellants next argue that the conclusions reached by the court that appellants aged separately in a "pattern or practice of resistance" are wholly unsuptable. They equate the phrase "pattern or practice" with "uniformly engaged course of conduct aimed at denying rights secured by the Act." We feel that h an interpretation is overly restrictive and does violence to the meaning inded by Congress to be accorded the phrase. Moreover, it is our firm belief t the conclusions reached by the district court are not clearly erroneous and st be affirmed.

The phrase is not defined in Title VII, but some guidance is offered by an ex-ination of the legislative history of this and other Civil Rights Acts employ-the same words. Commenting on the meaning to be accorded the phrase in debates on the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Senator Humphrey stated:

* * Such a pattern or practice would be present only where the denial of its consists of something more than an isolated, sporadic incident, but is re-ted, routine or of generalized nature.[24]

n testimony before the House Judiciary Committee on the Civil Rights Act 960,[25] Deputy Attorney General Walsh said:

attern or practice have their generic meanings. In other words, the court s that the discrimination was not an isolated or accidental or peculiar event; t it was an event which happened in the regular procedures followed by the e officials concerned.[26]

n United States v. Mayton, 335 F.2d 153, 158 (5th Cir. 1964), an action under Civil Rights Act of 1960, in which the court found that racial discrimina-in the voter registration process was pursuant to a "pattern or practice", court addressed itself to defining the words and concluded that they "were intended to be words of art." See also United States v. Ramsey, 331, F.2d, 837 (5th Cir. 1964) (Judge Rivas, concurring and dissenting in part). With ject to the phrase, Senator Keating commented that "[t]he 'pattern or tice' requirement means only that the proven discriminatory conduct of ndants was not merely an isolated instance of racial discrimination," 106
g. Rec. 7767.

7, 8] We are firmly convinced that it was the intent of Congress that a "pat-n or practice" be found where the acts of discrimination are not "isolated, perar or accidental" events. The words were not intended to be words of art.
plying this definition in the instant case, we are compelled to concur with the rict court's findings that appellants engaged in a "pattern or practice" of rimination. The findings are well documented with statistical evidence showa distinct absence of black membership in the unions and the apprenticeship grams; the failure of the union hiring halls to grant black referrals; many rt acts of discrimination on the part of appellants; and many facially neutral ployment practices which had a differential effect upon blacks. We are not cerned with isolated or accidental acts by appellants but a "pattern or prac-
" of resistance by them which has had an effect of denying black workers al job opportunities in the Seattle area.

herefore, we hold that the conclusions reached by the district court finding ellant unions and joint apprenticeship and training committees to have ened in a pattern or practice of discriminatory conduct with respect to employ-nt opportunities in the construction industry are not clearly erroneous.

III. RELIEF GRANTED

9] Appellants finally contend that the district court violated section 703(j) he Act[27] in ordering appellant unions to offer immediate job referrals to pre-us discriminatees, and ordering appellant apprenticeship and training committee to select and indenture sufficient black applicants to overcome past d crimination, and to also meet judicially imposed ceiling requirements in appre ticeship program participation. This they condemn as "racial quotas" and "raci preferences." We cannot agree.

The Act vests in the Attorney General and the trial court power to elimina both the vestiges of past discrimination and terminate present discriminato practices. Under sections 706(g) [28] and 707(a) [29] unlawful employment practic may be enjoined by the court and such affirmative relief granted as the cou may deem appropriate. The only statutory limitation on the availability of reli is the anti-preferential treatment provision of section 703(j).

[10] There can be little doubt that where a violation of Title VII is foun
the court is vested with broad remedial power to remove the vestiges of pa discrimination and eliminate present and assure the non-existence of futu barriers to the full enjoyment of equal job opportunities by qualified black wor basis of this board equitable power, the courts have allowed a wide range o remedial relief. See, e.g. Electrical Workers Local 38, supra (remand to distric court with direction to retain jurisdiction to assure compliance); Griggs v. Duk ment); United States ex rel. Mitchell v. United Association etc. Plumbers Local Without such powers, the district court would be unable to effectuate the desire of Congress to eliminate all forms of discrimination.

In Vogler, supra, 407 F.2d at 1053–1055, the district court ordered, in additio to an injunction against future discrimination and the immediate admission of four discriminatees, that the union develop objective criteria for membership and union size. As here, it was contended that the order established a "quota system to correct racial imbalance in violation of section 703(j)." Rejecting this argument, the court held the district court did "no more than ensure that the injunction against further racial discrimination would be fairly administered." Id. at 1054. The Vogler court succinctly stated that "where necessary to insure compliance with the Act, the District Court was fully impowered to eliminate the present effects of past discrimination." Similarly, in International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local No. 38, supra, 428 F.2d at 149, the court felt that such an interpretation of section 703(j) "would allow a complete nullification of the purposes of the Civil Rights Act of 1964."

We therefore reject appellants' contention. The district court neither abused its discretion in ordering the affirmative relief, nor did it in any way establish a system of "racial quotas" or "preferences" in violation of section 703(j).
The judgment of the district court is affirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator from w Jersey yield me time?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from West rginia.

AMENDMENT

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent t the time for debate on the pending amendment close at 2 p.m. lay and that the vote on the pending amendment then occur.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS TO 1:45 P.M.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I move that the Senate nd in recess until 1:45 p.m. today.
The motion was agreed to; and (at 1:15 p.m.) the Senate took a ess until 1:45 p.m.; whereupon the Senate reconvened when called to er by the Presiding Officer (Mr. Byrd of Virginia).
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, on my time, I suggest the absence of a rum.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.
The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the er for the quorum call be rescinded.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent t the remaining time be equally divided?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.
Mr. ALLEN. I yield back the remainder of my time.
Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, just to consummate and complete the ument I made against this amendment, pointing out that it would pedo orders of courts seeking to correct a history of unjust dis- nination in employment on racial or color grounds, because it would vent the court from ordering specific measures which could assign cific percentages of minorities that had to be hired, and that could ly to government as well as private employers, I have just had attention called to two recent cases, both involving consent decrees otiated by the Justice Department.
One is a case in the U.S. district court in Boston and another in nsas. In one case, part of the decree required that 166 Negroes and rto Ricans be given preference—in filling future vacancies for ich they were qualified.
n the other case in Kansas, the company agreed to make a good- h effort to hire from three minority groups for 20 percent of the ical positions to be filled in the next 3 years.
This amendment would make it impossible for the Justice Depart- nt to obtain such decrees in the future.
ask unanimous consent that a news item in the Daily Labor Report December 22, 1971, concerning these two cases be printed in the ord.
There being no objection, the news item was ordered to be printed he Record, as follows:

[From the Daily Labor Report, Dec. 22, 1971]

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OBTAINS CONSENT DECREES PROHIBITING DISCRIMINATI
UNDER TITLE VII

The entry of two consent decrees prohibiting two firms from discriminati against minority groups in employment is announced by the Department Justice.

A decree prohibiting AMBAC Industries, Inc., from discriminating again Negroes and Puerto Ricans in employment at its Springfield, Mass., plant entered in U.S. District Court in Boston, concluding a suit filed against AMBA by the Justice Department on June 28, 1968. A second one prohibits a Kans manufacturer from discriminating against Negroes, Spanish-surnamed America and American Indians. It was entered in U.S. District Court in Kansas Cit Kan., terminating an employment discrimination suit filed on April 24, 1969.

The AMBAC decree is also signed by American Bosch Industrial Unio Local 206, IUE, and the parent international union, which were named a defendants because the interests of their members would be affected by th relief sought. AMBAC, which has 1,200 employees, manufactures carburetor and fuel injection systems for trucks, trailers and tanks.

The suit charged discrimination against black and Puerto Ricans in its emplo ment practices in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, and th decree permanently enjoins AMBAC from any racial or ethnic discriminatio in its employment practices, including hiring, assigning, promoting and training

In addition, AMBAC is required to provide back pay of $1,000 to each o 29 black and Puerto Rican persons who unsuccessfully applied for jobs betwee 1966 and 1969. They also must be offered jobs ahead of all new applicants an ahead of persons who have been laid off and have a later seniority date. Th company is further required to give preference to another 166 black and Puert Rican persons in filling future vacancies for which they are qualified.

Another requirement is the notification by AMBAC of employment offices and racial and ethnic groups of job vacancies, to keep job applications for 90 days and check them against vacancies. AMBAC also must recruit for salaried employees at educational institutions which have a substantial black enrollmen and to post signs when vacancies exist stating that the company is an equa opportunity employer.

The Kansas decree applies to Certain-Teed St. Gobain Insulation Corp., suc cessor to Gustin Bacon Division of Certain-Teed Products Corp., and Teamsters Local 41, whose members, interests would be affected by the relief sought. Th original suit charged that Gustin-Bacon, which employed about 1,000 persons discriminated against the minority groups in hiring, job assignment, testing, and promotion to supervisory positions. The defendants are prohibited from any discriminatory practice and the company is required to provide for Negroes Spanish-surnamed persons and American Indians training similar to that made available to white employees.

In addition, the firm is required to make a good faith effort to hire from th three minority groups for 20 percent of the clerical positions filled during the next three years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not believe that it is the intent of the Senator from North Carolina to deny to the judicial and executive branches of Government all power to remedy the evils of job discrimination; but I am afraid—I am desperately afraid—that this amendment would strip Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 of all its basic fiber. It can be read to deprive even the courts of any power to remedy clearly proven cases of discrimination.

That statement follows right on examples of situations cited by the Senator from New York of the kind of situation that could be affected adversely.

I have listened intently to the debates on this bill. Not one Member of this body has spoken against providing some method for enforcing the law. This amendment raises the real threat of destroying any potential for effective law enforcement. If this amendment is accepted, I earnestly suggest that we will have a law, but there will be litt ance for order under the law again if this amendment should evail.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I am authorized to state that the Secretary of Labor directly opposed to this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is to say that the administration opposes this endment?

Mr. JAVITS. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not always speak for the administration. I am ppy to.

Mr. ERVIN. It is not very surprising that a public official would ject to anything which robs him of the power to be a tyrant. That ot surprising at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Moderately, may I say that I disagree with the mpestuous language of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. President, if any further time remains, I yield it back.

Mr. ERVIN. If any further time remains on our side, I should like dd to the Senator's statement—"tempestuous and truthful."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Montoya). All time has now expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no time for a surrebuttal. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on this amendment has now pired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from rth Carolina (Mr. Ervin).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk l call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from xas (Mr. Bensten), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Eagleton), the nator from Georgia (Mr. Gambrell), the Senator from Oklahoma r. Harris), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson), the Sen- r from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), the Senator from Washing- (Mr. Magnuson), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. McClellan), Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGovern), the Senator from ntana (Mr. Metcalf), the Senator from Maine (Mr. Muskie), the nator from Alabama (Mr. Sparkman), the Senator from Missis- pi (Mr. Stennis), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Stevenson), the nator from California (Mr. Tunney), the Senator from Alaska r. Gravel), and the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Hartke) are neces- ily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. East- d) is absent because of illness.

On this vote, the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Eastland) is paired h the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson).

If present and voting, the Senator from Mississippi would vote a" and the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Georgia (Mr. Gambrell) is paired h the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson).

If present and voting, the Senator from Georgia would vote "yea" l the Senator from Washington would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from nois (Mr. Stevenson) and the Senator from California (Mr. nney) would each vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Baker), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. Boggs), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Bellmon), the Senators from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield and Mr. Packwood), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. Miller), the Senator from Kansas (Mr. Pearson), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft), and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Thurmond) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Brock), the Senator from New York (Mr. Buckley), the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. Hansen), and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. Mathias) are absent on official business.

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. Goldwater) is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Mundt) is absent because of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) would vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Wyoming, (Mr. Hansen) is paired with the Senator from Oregon (Mr. Hatfield). If present and voting the Senator from Wyoming would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Thurmond) is paired with the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft). If present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea" and the Senator from Ohio would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays, 44, as follows:

Mr. Ervin's amendment was rejected.

. Javits. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which mendment was rejected.

. Williams. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the e motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

e Presiding Officer. The bill is open to further amendment. The tor from New Jersey is recognized.

. Williams. Mr. President, I yield briefly to the Senator from igan.

. Hart. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's yielding to me. to address a question to the manager of the bill with respect to spect that has given concern and to establish the understanding urpose as it will be reflected by the expression of the manager of ill.

. President, on Wednesday, January 19, at the opening of our rations on proposals to amend Title VII of the Civil Rights Act 64 so as to give the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission needed additional enforcement authority, the distinguished man of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare placed into ecord an excellent comparative analysis of the present law, his ill (S. 2515) that we are discussing today, and the bill passed last by the House of Representatives (H.R. 1746).

hough this analysis will be most helpful to all of us as we con- debate on this vitally important legislation, I am concerned a provision in the House-passed measure that is described as xclusive remedy provision. It is one that is not identified or re- l to in the comparative analysis printed in the Record of Jan- 19, and I believe some clarification would be desirable.

is provision, which some feel might be interpreted as an exclu- or sole provision or sole remedy provision, was the subject of ssion during the floor debate on H.R. 1746 in the House. There, al Members drew attention to its possible effect on the remedies ilable, particularly beneficial to women employees under the Equal Act of 1963.

. President, the Equal Pay Act of 1963 was the first Federal nacted by the Congress to prohibit wage discrimination on the of sex. It has enjoyed widespread support, and we should make explicit the fact that Congress does not intend the Equal Pay to be affected by proposals to expand and strengthen Title VII of Civil Rights Act of 1964.

I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Sen Labor Committee if he will confirm my understanding that it is the will or desire of this body that the Equal Pay Act of 1963 superseded in whole or in part by any action taken by the Congr to provide most sorely needed amendments to Title VII of the Ci Rights Act.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I appreciate the questions put to by the distinguished Senator from Michigan. I certainly want to ma the situation very clear here today.

The distinguished Senator from Michigan is correct in his assum tion that it is not our intention in any way to affect or diminish th remedies available under the Equal Pay Act of 1963. I am glad t have the opportunity to add my voice to those who wish to see co tinued, effective enforcement by the Department of Labor of a law tha is of major importance, particularly to women employees who hav long been the victims of wage discrimination based on sex. Many o us in the Congress strove for a period of years to see an equal pay fo equal work law placed on the statute books. The Senator from Mich igan may rest assured that his question, if it still remains, will b further clarified during the course of our conference on S. 2515 an H.R. 1746 with Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Hart. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the response o the distinguished chairman of the committee. I know that I spea for many Members of the Senate.

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 599 an ask that it be stated.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Saxbe). The amendment will be stated
The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 39, line 20, following "finds" insert "by preponderance of the ev dence taken by the Commission".

On page 41, line 8, strike "on the record." and insert "by a preponderance o the evidence of the record as a whole.".

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the dis tinguished manager of the bill for a moment, I will state that the amendment would merely make clear that in making findings of fact the Commission should make the findings of fact conform to the preponderance of the evidence. I understand that there is a probabil ity that the distinguished manager of the bill may be willing to ac cept the amendment.

Mr. Williams. Yes. We discussed the purport of the amendment during the debate on an earlier amendment. I recall that this amend ment, dealing with the preponderance of evidence at the Commission level, was included in a bill passed by the Senate 2 years ago. The Senator from North Carolina offered the amendment then, it was agreed to, and was in the bill passed by the Senate at that time. It was not included in the bill reported by the Senate committee this year. It should be in the bill, in my judgment.

Mr. Ervin. I thank the Senator from New Jersey. I am ready to vote.

Mr. Williams. I am, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the endment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 812. I ask t the reading of the amendment be omitted but that the text of amendment be printed in the Record and that I be permitted to lain the amendment in lieu of its being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be nted in the Record and considered as having been read.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 32, strike out lines 8, 9, and 10.

On page 32, line 18, insert the words "a State or political subdivision eof" between the comma following "United States" and the words "an an tribe."

On page 33, strike out lines 4 and 5.

On page 33, strike out lines 11, 12, and 13.

On pages 32 and 33, renumber (2) and (4) as (1) and (2), respectively.

On pages 36 and 37, strike out everything from the beginning of line 22 page 36 through the end of line 12 on page 37, and re-letter the remaining ections appropriately.

On pages 38 and 39, strike out everything from the word "In" on line 18 page 38 through the word "hearing" on line 2 on page 39.

On page 48, strike out everything from the word "upon" on line 14 through word "importance" on line 24.

On page 49, strike out everything between "Subsection (c)" and the words he efforts" on line 2.

On page 49, strike out everything between "Subsection (f)" on lines d 7 and the words "or the Commission" on line 8.

On page 54, strike out everything from the word "or" on line 16 through word "Subdivision" on line 17.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, this is a simple amendment. I should like lert Senators to the fact that it is, in my judgment, one of the most rial amendments which will be offered to the bill.

tated simply, the amendment would completely remove from the all the provisions which undertake to give the EEOC jurisdiction the employment practices of any of the States or any of the polit- subdivisions of the States. I should like to discuss the amendment a comparatively brief time this afternoon and announce my will- ness to have it voted on, on Monday. I think that because of the t importance of the amendment, all Senators should have an op- unity to ascertain what is contemplated by it and have an oppor- ty to think about it before they vote. I am ready to proceed with argument.

Mr. President, in my honest judgment, the legislative proposal con- ed in the bill that the EEOC be given jurisdiction over the employ- t practices of all the States and of all the political subdivisions ll the States constitutes the most drastic assault upon our Federal em of government which has been proposed in any legislative posal to come before Congress at any time in its history.

he bill gives the EEOC power to pass upon the employment prac- whereby the States and their political subdivisions employ any on to render services to them. There is not even an exception in the to the effect that the EEOC will not have jurisdiction over the ernor of a State or the Lieutenant Governor of a State, or both: ewide election officials; State judges, whether they are elected or pointed to office; clerks of superior courts of counties and their assistants; sheriffs of counties or their assistants; and the chiefs of pol of municipalities. The bill would give the EEOC jurisdiction, ev over members of school boards, certainly where they are appoint

It was once said, in a far happier day than the present, that the C stitution of the United States looks in all its provisions to an un structible Union composed of indestructible States. Yet today we ha pending before the Senate of the United States a bill providing t the EEOC be given the ultimate power to determine whom a State a political subdivision of a State can appoint or employ to exercise t legislative, executive, and judicial powers of a State.

If the amendment is not adopted, we ought to change the name our country from that of the "United States of America" to t
"United States"—singular—"of America," because any Federal agen which has jurisdiction over the employment of persons by a Stat which exercises legislative, executive, and judicial power over a Sta is the supreme dictator of State and local governments in America.

Mind you, Mr. President, the bill not only gives the EEOC power t supervise and ultimately to control the employees of a State; it als gives the Commission that power in respect to all employees. Hen under this power, in the bill in its present form, the EEOC would b authorized to act as the school board for every school district in th United States. In that capacity, the EEOC would have the ultima power to determine the persons who would act as school superintend ents, school principals, and school teachers in every area of the Unite States.

The bill does not, however, stop with that. It would, in effect, giv the EEOC the ultimate power to overrule the decisions of the board of trustees of State institutions of higher learning, and ultimately control the appointment of every teacher who teaches any subject any institution of higher learning.

I would say that this bill not only constitutes the most drastic gra for governmental power on the part of the Federal Government in th history of this Nation, but I would say that if it is enacted into law i its present form, without removing the provisions which would be re moved by this amendment, this bill would represent the most stupi piece of legislation in the Nation's history.

I can illustrate that by discussing the power which this bill give to the EEOC to supervise and ultimately control the employment pra tices of State institutions of higher learning. As the Senator from North Carolina understands this bill, it does not give the EEOC th power to compel a State institution of higher learning to employ a ma whose competency for teaching is inferior. It does not intend to tak away from a State institution of higher learning the rightful powe to select as teachers of the various subjects taught in institutions o higher learning men who are competent to teach those subjects. An yet it is conceivable that it may, in practical effect, accomplish tha unintended and that unwarranted result.

There are two questions involved in every case which is concerne with the application of this bill to any employment situation involve in State employment. There are two things that the EEOC must d before it can control the employment practices of a State institutio of higher learning and order that institution to employ an applica for a teaching job in lieu of the person selected by the trustees of th e institution. To do this the EEOC must do two things, and it must these things by the preponderance of the evidence, according to amendment just now adopted. The EEOC must find by the great ght of the evidence, first, that the person is competent to perform function of the employment in question; and, second, that he has denied employment because of his race, or because of his religion, , or religion, or national origin, or sex.

he bill before the Senate puts the same obligation upon the Federal t in respect to State employees and in respect to employees of e institutions of higher learning. The EEOC, under this bill, cises that power with respect to the employees of private institus of higher learning where jurisdiction is given to Federal district ts in cases of State institutions of higher learning. And, so when a eral judge undertakes to exercise control under this bill over teachof State institutions of higher learning and undertakes to order to employ as a teacher an individual selected by the Federal e, in place of the person selected by the authorities of the State intion of higher learning, the Federal judge must find by the prelerance of the evidence these two things: First, that the person he rs the State institution of higher learning to employ is competent ach the subject which he is to be assigned to teach; and, second, he has been denied that employment by that State institution of er learning, because of his race, or religion, or national origin, or his first requirement manifests the stupidity—and I know of no r way to describe it—of this proposed legislation insofar as it re- to the employment of teachers of a State institution of higher ing.

he University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is a State institu- of higher learning established and maintained and operated by the e of North Carolina. Under this bill, a Federal judge would have ultimate power to order the University of the State of North lina to employ a specified person selected by the Federal judge, er than by the authorities of the University of North Carolina at el Hill, if the Federal judge found, as a fact, that the person ted for it was competent to teach the subject in question and that ad been denied employment to teach such subject because of his , or religion, or national origin, or sex.

submit, with all due deference to all concerned, that it is the height the depth of legislative stupidity to confer on Federal judges the er to determine the competency of any person to teach any of abstruse subjects in which people receive instructions in a State tution of higher learning. And, while such observation is not tly germane to this particular amendment, I also submit that it oth the height and the depth of stupidity to confer upon the OC like powers with respect to persons who are to teach subjects rivate institutions of higher learning. I submit that if there is hing which is beyond the competency of a Federal judge and nd the competency of the EEOC, it is the task of passing upon qualifications of people who are to teach the various subjects of uction which are presented to the students at institutions of er learning.

I can illustrate that by certain references to the subjects, or so of the subjects, in which the University of North Carolina instru its students.

The University of North Carolina has a department of anthr pology, and virtually every State institution of its caliber in this N tion has a similar department. I might add that the leading priv institutions of higher learning also have such departments.

Let me call the attention of Senators to what instruction is offer in this one field.

They have a freshman seminar:

The seminar will provide an initial small group learning experience in s nificant current topics in anthropology.

I respectfully submit that it would be a legislative absurdity f Congress to enact this bill and give to the EEOC in the case of priva institutions and to Federal judges in the case of State institutio of higher learning, the power to pass on the competency of any perso to provide initial small group learning in the significant current topi in anthropology. Despite all of their legal learning, Federal judg are too ignorant to have any competency to perform that task: an notwithstanding all of its political acumen, the EEOC is too ignoran to be vested by law with the task of performing that function i respect to private institutions of learning.

Let us refer to just a few other subjects which are taught in Sta and private institutions of higher learning.

General anthropology:

The science of man, the culture-bearing animal. Topics considered: Physica evolution of mankind and biological variations within and between huma populations. Prehistoric and historic developments of culture. Cultural dynamic viewed analytically and comparatively.

Now, what Federal judge is competent to determine whether an person possesses the qualifications to teach general anthropology And obviously, the EEOC manifests about as much capacity in tha field as I possess the capacity of directing the kind of activities whic archangels should pursue.

Then these institutions of higher learning, both State and privat teach courses in human origins, which constitute "surveys of physica anthropology, including the place of man among the primates, huma evolution, and racial differences. Consideration is also given in thes courses to osteology and the interrelationship of cultural and bi logical factors."

With all due respect to Federal judges and the EEOC, I woul say that they are totally without the capacity to determine the com petence of any person to teach such a subject in any State or privat institution of higher learning. Yet this bill gives Federal judges tha power in respect to the teaching of such subjects at State institutio of higher learning, and the EEOC that power in respect to privat institutions of higher learning.

I note that one branch of anthropology deals, among other thing with the place of man among his primates in human evolution. Thi bill, in this respect, reminds me of the time I served in the Legislatur of North Carolina, many years ago, when someone offered a bill t ıibit the teaching of the organic theory of evolution in any of the e-supported colleges or schools. If the Legislature of North Caro-had been so foolish as to adopt such a piece of legislative idity, North Carolina would have enjoyed the very dubious fame eing the place where the Scopes trial occurred, rather than the e of Tennessee.

participated in the debate on that bill in the Legislature of North olina, and I made this observation: That the only good purpose
I saw that such a bill could serve would be to bring the satisfac-to the monkeys in the jungle of knowing that the Legislature of th Carolina had absolved them from any responsibility for the luct of the human race in general, and of the North Carolina Legure in particular.
e defeated the bill. But the issue did not necessarily die there.
ıring the campaign for the election of the members of the next lature, one of my good friends, Gus Seff, of Hickory, N.C., was Democratic candidate for the legislature from Catawba County.
vas opposed by my good friend of a by-gone day, Loomis Kluttz, Newton, N.C., who was a Republican candidate for the State lature.
ıring the campaign, these two gentlemen engaged in a joint deand Loomis Kluttz charged Gus Seff with believing in evolution, h Loomis Kluttz explained as a belief that men are descended monkeys.
ıs Seff said he did not know much about evolution, that he bed that evolution taught that as the ages go by, mankind progresses, that he would like to think that mankind does progress with the ng of the ages. He said:

on't know anything about this proposition, to the effect that evolution es that men are descended from monkeys. I don't accept that. But I the father of my opponent. He was a great, old-time family physician in ba County. He was a man of good sense and intelligence. I take no posi-with respect to the theory that men may be descended from monkeys:
ıy knowledge of the father of my opponent, and my observation of my ent, have led me to the conclusion that sometimes monkeys are descended men.

aughter.]
ell, I do not mean any harm, and I do not mean to violate any of the Senate; but I would say that the passage of this bill in esent form, without my present amendment, might shed no light ever upon this subject in anthropology, concerning evolution, ar as it may proclaim—if it does proclaim—that men are de-led from monkeys. I would say, were it not for the fact that it t constitute some kind of implicit violation of the Senate rule, the passage of this bill would afford considerable evidence that times legislators act with the limited intelligence which is arily exhibited by monkeys rather than by men.
w, let us talk a little more about a bill which gives a Federal and the EEOC the ultimate power to pass on the competency en or women to teach anthropology and the various subjects in utions of higher learning.
e of the subjects that is taught in this field is genetics and human tion. A prerequisite to the study of this subject is introductory biology, by permission of the instructor. This subject deals with t fundamental principles of genetics, population genetics, genetic eq librium, race and species formation, the factors of evolution, and t relation of these principles to man and the primates. Blood groups a other traits are used to illustrate this subject.

Mr. President, I ask this question, not facetiously but solemnl Does any Member of the Senate know of any Federal judge anywhe within our vast borders who has enough understanding of the subj of anthropology to determine the competency of a person to tea genetics and human evolution as a course in anthropology in an i stitution of higher learning?

There is another subject in this field that would certainly tax t ingenuity of a Federal judge or the ingenuity of the EEOC. In the departments of anthroecology is a good word—of presimians, learning, they teach a subject called primate social behavior. Th deals with the social behavior and ecology—ecology is a good word—o presimians, monkeys, and apes, and the evolution of human behavio

I think it is inconceivable that there is any judge on any Feder district court bench anywhere within the vast borders of our land wh is qualified to pass on the competency of any individual to teach pr mate social behavior. Yet, this bill imposes that duty upon a Feder judge in any case where it is alleged, in any action before him, that t institution of higher learning has refused to employ a particular pe son to teach primate social behavior because of that person's race religion, or national origin, or sex.

I submit that this bill imposes the same duty in the same situatio upon the members of EEOC and that their competency to make decision on this point places them in the same state which is inhabite by ignoramuses and the Senator from North Carolina. Yet, we hav this bill, to impose that duty on Federal judges and the members the EEOC. Thank God it does not impose that duty on the Senate from North Carolina, and the Senator from North Carolina is op posed to having it imposed upon him. That is one of the purposes this amendment.

There is another subject that is taught by the department of an thropology in the institution of higher learning, the "Anthropolog of Religion." This course examines over 100 years of speculation. Th is not speculation on Wall Street which they are talking about bu speculation about the origin of religion and its place in our cultur including the thought of Marx, Durheim, and Freud. It gives atte tion to ritual, magic, myth, and revitalization movements as they op erate in modern society and others.

Mr. President, I should like to have some proponent of this bill te me the name of a Federal judge or some member of the EEOC who possessed of sufficient knowledge to pass upon the question of the co petency of any man or any women to teach the anthropology religion.

Senators will note, if they heard what I said, that the course in cluded, among other things, myths. I say it is a legal myth that an Federal judge or any member of the EEOC has the competency t pass on the qualifications of any person to teach the anthropology religion.

There is another subject in this field which is entitled "the develop-nt of anthropological thought." This course of study is a constitu-nal review of selected cultural anthropologists and their predecesrs to define recurrent as well as innovative perspective with which y have viewed man, culture, and society.

Mr. President, I think it would be a myth for Congress to assume t any Federal judge or any member of the EEOC has the com-tency to pass upon the qualifications of a person to teach that course, e development of anthropological thought. This course also deals t only with the subject of myths but also with the subject of magic.
I just do not believe there is a single Federal judge within the rders of the United States of America, or any member of the EEOC, o could possibly be appointed to that board who would have pos-sion of enough magic to empower him to determine the competency any person to teach this subject in any State or private institu-n of higher learning. Yet that is one of the duties which this bill, enacted into law, would impose upon Federal judges and members the EEOC in exercising the vast powers it would give them to su-rvise and control the employment practice of institutions of higher rning.

Mr. President, I have barely scratched the surface of the subject I now expounding. I have cited only a relatively few instances which w how stupid it would be for Congress to give Federal judges and mbers of the EEOC the power to pass upon the qualifications of rsons employed or to be employed to teach the very subjects of learn-taught in institutions of higher learning.

might state to my friends that there are many other subjects ght in these institutions of higher learning, such as intermediate nting, arts, and crafts, sculpture, elementary bacteriology, genl botany, cells biology, plant physiology, environmental biology, mistry, physics, and religion.

It would be, as I say, the height and depth of stupidity for Congress enact a law which would empower and require Federal judges and mbers of the EEOC to pass upon the qualifications of persons who ply or are hired by institutions of higher learning to teach those jects.

Mr. President, as I have just said, I have merely scratched the sure in presenting the view that it is the height and depth of stupidity Congress to undertake to empower and require Federal judges and mbers of the EEOC to pass upon the qualifications of men and men to teach subjects of learning in which students receive instrucn in a State or private institution of higher learning.

Mr. President, I do not desire to trespass upon eternity, as I could in further expounding on this subject. I sincerely trust that the old pression, "A word to the wise is sufficient," and these few words ich I have spoken on this subject, will induce the wise Members of Senate—and, indeed, the foolish ones, if any such there be—to vote favor of this amendment when it comes up for a vote.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT

Intended to be proposed by Mr. ERVIN (for himself and Mr. ALLEN) to S. 2515, a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers, viz: Strike out everything after the enacting clause and insert the following in lieu thereof:

That this Act may be cited as the "Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1971".

SEC. 2. (a) Paragraph (6) of subsection (g) of section 705 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–4 (f) (6)) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) to refer matters to the Attorney General with recommendations for intervention in a civil action brought by an aggrieved party under section 706, or for the institution of a civil action by the Attorney General under section 707, and to recommend institution of appellate proceedings in accordance with subsection (h) of this section, when in the opinion of the Commission such proceedings would be in the public interest, and to advise, consult, and assist the Attorney General in such matters."

(b) Subsection (h) of such section 705 is amended to read as follows:

"(h) Attorneys appointed under this section may, at the direction of the Commission, appear for and represent the Commission in any case in court, provided that the Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court or in the courts of appeals of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by the Commission."

SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (a) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Whenever it is charged in writing under oath by a person claiming to be aggrieved, or a written charge has been filed by a member of the Commission where he has reasonable cause to believe a violation of this title has occurred (and such charge sets forth the facts upon which it is based and the person or persons aggrieved) that an employer, employment agency or labor organization has engaged in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission, within five days thereafter, shall furnish such employer, employment agency, or labor organization (hereinafter referred to as the 'respondent') with a copy of such charge and shall make an investigation of such charge, provided that such charge shall not be made public by the Commission. If the Commission shall determine after such investigation that there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true, the Commission shall endeavor to eliminate any such alleged unlawful employment practice by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion. Nothing said or done during and as a part of such endeavors may be made public by the Commission without the written consent of the parties, or used as evidence in a subsequent proceeding. Any officer or employee of the Commission who shall make public in any manner whatever any information in violation of this subsection shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year."

(b) Subsection (d) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-5) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) A charge under subsection (a) shall be filed within one hundred and eighty days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, except that in the case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has followed the procedure set out in subsection (b), such charge shall be filed by the person aggrieved within two hundred and ten days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred, or within thirty days after receiving notice that the State or local agency has terminated the proceedings under the State or local law, whichever is earlier, and a copy of such charge shall be filed by the Commission with the State or local agency. Except as provided in subsections (a) through (d) of this section and in section 707 of this Act, a charge filed hereunder shall be the exclusive remedy of any person claiming to be aggrieved by an unlawful employment practice of an employer, employment agency, or labor organization."

(c) Subsection (e) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) If within thirty days after a charge is filed with the Commission or within thirty days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c), the Commission has been unable to obtain voluntary compliance with this Act, the Commission may bring a civil action against the respondent named in the charge: Provided, That if the Commission fails to obtain voluntary compliance and fails or refuses to institute a civil action against the respondent named in the charge within one hundred and eighty days from the date of the filing of the charge, a civil action may be brought after such failure or refusal within ninety days against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person claiming to be aggrieved, or (2) if such charge was filed by a member of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene in such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending the termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (b) or further efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance."

(d) Subsections (f) through (k) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5) are redesignated as subsections (g) through (l), respectively, and in newly designated subsection (k) the reference to subsection (i) is changed to subsection (j), and the following new section is added after section 706(e) thereof:

"(f) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending final disposition of such charge and the court having jurisdiction over such action shall have the authority to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper: Provided, That no temporary restraining order or other preliminary or temporary relief shall be issued absent a showing that substantial and irreparable injury to the aggrieved party will be unavoidable. It shall be the duty of a court having jurisdiction over proceeding under this section to assign cases for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause such cases to be in every way expedited."

(e) Subsection (h) of section 706 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–5), as redesignated by this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(h) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice). Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable. No order of the court shall require the admission or reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union or the hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any back pay, if such individual, pursuant to section 706(a) and within the time required by section 706(d), neither filed a charge nor was named in a charge or amendment thereto, or was refused admission, suspended, or expelled or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin or in violation of section 704(a). No order made hereunder shall include back pay or other liability which has accrued more than two years before the filing of a complaint with said court under this title."

SEC. 4. If the court adjudges that the respondent has not and is not engaged in the unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint of the Commission, the respondent will be entitled to recover from the Commission the costs of the action and a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Chair rs before the Senate the unfinished business, S. 2515, to further omote equal employment opportunities for American workers.
Amendment No. 812 is the pending amendment.
The time between now and 2 p.m. will be equally divided between manager of the bill (Mr. Williams) and the Senator from North rolina (Mr. Ervin), with the vote on the amendment to occur at
.m.
Time on any amendment, appeal, or point of order relative to the endment will be limited to 20 minutes, to be divided between the ver of the amendment and the manager of the bill, if he is opposed t otherwise, the time will be under the control of the minority leader is designee.
Time on any amendment to the amendment or appeal or motion is ome at the end of the time on amendment No. 812.
The clerk will state the amendment.
The legislative clerk read the proposed amendment as follows:

dd a new section at the end of the bill appropriately numbered and reading ollows: "No department, agency, or officer of the United States shall require employer to practice discrimination in reverse by employing persons of a icular race, or a particular religion, or a particular national origin, or a icular sex in either fixed or variable numbers, proportions, percentages, as, goals, or ranges. If any department agency, officer, or employee of the ted States violates or attempts or threatens to violate the provisions of the eding sentence, the employer or employee aggrieved by the violation, or mpted or threatened violation, may bring a civil action in the United States rt in the District in which he resides or in which the violation occurred, or ttempted or threatened, or in which the enterprise affected is located, and District Court shall grant him such relief by way of temporary interlocutory ermanent injunctions as may be necessary to redress the consequences of the ation, or to prevent the attempted or threatened violation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?
Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.
The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order
the quorum call be rescinded.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. ERVIN. I yield.
Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, with the ator's permission, that the time consumed during the call for the rum be equally divided between both sides.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears e, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. I yield myself the time that I shall consume.

I stated on Friday that this bill, insofar as it seeks to extend this coverage to all the employees of States or the political subdivisions of States, is inconsistent with our federal system of government and that it represents the greatest grab for power ever made by the Federal Government.

The people opposed to this extension of power of the Federal Government over the States are not simply sinful southerners like the Senator from North Carolina. They are found in the offices of the attorneys general of the States of Montana, Tennessee, Oregon, Utah and Washington.

I read a letter from Slade Gorton, attorney general of the State of Washington:

DEAR SENATOR ERVIN: Thank you for your thoughtful letter on the subject of the above-numbered bill.

The state of Washington already has a statute comparable to the proposal contained in that bill, covering state and local government employment as well as private employment. Personally, I prefer an approach through state legislation coupled with firm and fair state enforcement.

I read a letter from Robert B. Hansen, deputy attorney general of the State of Utah:

DEAR SENATOR ERVIN: In response to your letter of Dec. 1, it is the view of this office that the subject bill would be an unwise extension of Federal bureaucracy into state affairs. The principle of the bill, as you note, is commendable, but the mechanics of implementing it is directly contrary to traditional concepts of the right of a sovereign state to manage its own affairs.

It has been our observation that many Federal programs unduly interfere with the proper sphere of local government activities and does so at a cost which is greatly disproportionate to the value conferred.

For instance, in Utah, we have had only three cases of claimed discrimination brought to our attention during the past three years, each of which was settled by a phone call plus a personal interview in one of them. If these cases had been processed by a bureaucrat on the Federal payroll supported by the usual office and staff the cost to the taxpayer would be an astronomical multiple of the cost actually necessary to resolve these problems here.

If we can be of any further help in connection with this matter, I will appreciate hearing from you.

Lee Johnson, attorney general of the State of Oregon, wrote me as follows:

DEAR SENATOR ERVIN: Pursuant to your request to share my views on the above-proposed legislation, please be advised that, although I am the chief law officer of the state, and am familiar with Oregon's civil rights legislation, I am not the administrative agency which enforces that legislation. As far as my office is concerned, Oregon already has complete coverage of governmental employers under our own civil rights statutes. Therefore, there is no need for S. 2515 to solve problems in Oregon.

I am enclosing a copy of Oregon's civil rights statutes (ORS 659.010 to 659.110). You will note therefrom that all levels of government, except federal, are encompassed within the definition of an "employer," although they may employ as little as only one employee [ORS 659.010(6)].

In addition, Oregon's law covers all classes of discrimination covered by federal legislation (race, religion, color, national origin, sex and age). Only in the area of age discrimination is the Oregon law not broad enough to cover all private and governmental employers.

Investigatory, conciliatory and adjudicatory jurisdiction over complaints of discrimination are granted by our state statutes to an administrative agency, with the right of appeal to the State Court of Appeals and the State Supreme Court.

If you have any further inquiries, please do not hesitate to contact me.

also read a letter from David M. Pack, attorney general of the te of Tennessee:

EAR SENATOR ERVIN: I am writing to acknowledge with appreciation your r of December 1st with which you enclose a copy of S. 2515, being entitled l "to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers." se be advised that I am entirely in accordance with the sentiments expressed our letter and in the remarks made by you on the Senate floor when a similar was considered by the 91st Congress. It is my firm conviction that the effect his measure would be deleterious to the federal concept of government and it would further curtail the constitutional prerogatives of the respective es and increase the impersonal bureaucratic control which weights so heavily the nation today.
s the foremost constitutional authority in the United States Senate you are ently qualified to bring the dangerous and pernicious characteristics of this slation to the attention of the Congress and the nation. Please be assured of omplete and unqualified support and of my opposition to this proposal as it resently drafted. It is my purpose to communicate these views when it aps that an expression of my opinion may be effective.

read a letter from the attorney general of Montana, Robert L.
odahl:

AR SENATOR ERVIN: I have reviewed the materials you sent concerning te Bill No. 2515, the proposed Equal Employment Opportunities Enforce-Act of 1971.
though this legislation is quite detailed in terms of enforcement procedures, l that it is lacking in clarification relative to its potential impact on state rnment. This is indeed unfortunate, since the possible ramifications on inual state governments could be extremely detrimental.
would agree that the inclusion of state governments, governmental agencies governmental activity within the scope of the Equal Employment Oppory Act amounts to a broad extension of the powers given the Equal Employ-Opportunity Commission under the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The lation of employment practices within state government is a matter which ld properly be left to the individual states, since state governments certainly n a better position to handle, on an informed basis, employment difficulties ng in their respective jurisdictions. Also, and perhaps more significantly, I ve as you do that the principle of federalism as expressed in the Tenth ndment to the United States Constitution would suffer serious impairment e enactment of Senate Bill No. 2515. strongly support the maintenance of the concept enunciated by the Tenth ndment, and I appreciate your sharing your thoughts on this matter with me.

r. President, as was pointed out in the last letter I read, there is ing in the bill that clarifies who is a State employee or an em-ee of a local political subdivision of a State. Does it include the ernor of the State? Does it include the supreme court justices of State? Does it include the members of the State legislature? Does clude all those elected sheriffs in the various counties? Does it ude the various clerks of the court and other men who exercise utive and judicial power?
his would give the Federal judge a broad mandate to go out and ect to his domination all the employees of a State and all the loyees of a political subdivision of a State. s I argued last Friday, and I think my argument cannot be sucfully contradicted, this would make Federal judges into employbureaus for States, even though they lack capacity to determine y of the State's employment problems, such as who is competent—argued last Friday—to say who should teach such subjects as ropology in a State institution of higher learning.
r. President, this bill represents the greatest assault ever attempted ny legislative proposal upon the liberties of all the American people for the supposed benefit of only one segment of the America people.

It is said to be a bill to promote equality in employment. That is hypocritical designation. The bill would destroy equality because would place employers, both public and private, throughout the lengt and breadth of the land, if they employ as many as eight person under subjection to a government agency for the supposed benefit only one segment of the American people. That would be exalting th privilege of this segment of the American people above the liberti of all of the American people.

Now, Mr. President, I yield such time as he may need to the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen).

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolina for yielding to me. I am honored that I have this opportunity to speak alongside the able and distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin), who is the greatest constitutiona authority in the Senate—and I say that without fear of contradiction—and one of the most renowned constitutional lawyers in the entire country.

Mr. President, I oppose the passage of S. 2515, not because I do no want to see equal employment opportunities for all our citizens, fo every Member of the Senate, every fairminded person in the country favors the concept of fair and equal opportunity by all our citizens to obtain employment and to earn a livelihood.

One would think, from hearing some of the debates in the Senate that a large number of jobs or positions that are open for filling are being denied to people.

Let me point out that the bill does not create one single job or position of any sort, aside from the hundreds of Federal bureaucrats who would obtain jobs if the bill is passed.

The bill seeks to make the EEOC, the so-called Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the court, the jury, and the prosecutor all rolled into one.

Some 7 years ago, originally, when the law was passed, and at the present time, the EEOC was an advisory and conciliation agency, one that sought to eliminate unfair labor practices by investigating charges, by considering them, by seeking to work out differences between the employer and the employee, but not to issue its own orders and not to be a prosecutor, jury, and judge.

But the concept of conciliation will take second rank behind the function of forced compliance with its order.

Is it fair for the same agency which receives the complaint, which investigates the complaint, which prefers charges based upon that complaint, to sit as the judge to determine the validity of the complaint?

Mr. President, I submit that it is not.

This bill is an arrogant effort to extend the scope of operation of the EEOC, to extend its coverage, to extend the powers of the EEOC. It will bring, for the first time, if the bill is passed, and if this amendment of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina and myself is not adopted, the despotic powers of the Commission to every State, county, and city employee, every employee of a State, county, or city public agency, bringing in some 10 million additional citizens covered by this act.

Mr. President, I might say at this point that the bill does provide a ewhat different procedure as regards the county and city employees negotiating and prosecuting unfair labor practices from what is vided for employment in business and industry.

They must have felt that the Senate and the House of Representa- s would not go along with the same sort of rule for State, county, city employees that there is for employees of business and in- try. So, in effect, they have what we might call something on the er of a Dominick amendment for State, county, and city employees hat the forum for deciding the controversy with regard to the al- d unfair labor practices would not be just the Commission itself, would be the Federal court.

hat was what the Dominick amendment sought to do, to require the mission to go into the Federal court to prosecute the alleged unfair r practices. So, the proponents of the bill were wise enough to set his procedure with regard to the State, county, and city employees. they should not have any jurisdiction whatever. The Federal court ld not. There should be a field of operation for the Federal Govern- t, a field of operation for the State government, and, as my dis- uished colleague, the distinguished senior Senator from North olina, has said, the Federal judge should not be the employment ncy for the State.

, Mr. President, it is very unwise in the judgment of the junior tor from Alabama to seek to extend coverage of the EEOC to e, county, and city employees. The amendment now pending would inate the coverage of State, county, and city employees from the nittee amendment. In other words, it would not change the law as ists now at all. It would just say, "All right; you are seeking to r the number of employees required for coverage by the EEOC, n 25 to eight; that in all small businesses you are moving over to EEOC the power of the Justice Department to bring practice and ern suits against employers where it is alleged that the employer t just discriminating in isolated cases, but that it has a practice pattern by which it engages in unfair employment practices, and sferring that power over to the EEOC."

has broadened the coverage to include every single educational in- tion in the entire country. They are not now covered. The pending ndment does not seek to correct those abuses by which there are nsions of the power and jurisdiction of the EEOC over these other cies. All it seeks to do is to prevent the EEOC from reaching out grabbing control of State, county, and city governments and their oyment practices.

would leave the other matters to be settled by subsequent amend- s. It does not withdraw any jurisdiction from the EEOC. It would ly prevent the EEOC from obtaining jurisdiction of the local rnments.

r. President, this amendment, in the judgment of the junior tor from Alabama, is the most important amendment yet remain- o be acted upon by the Senate. Possibly the most important amend- was the Dominick amendment, which finally failed by a vote of 46. That amendment would have required that the charges of ir labor practices be presented and considered and adjudicated in wer Federal court.

That was a most meritorious amendment. However, the Senate by a very narrow margin turned it down. I hope that this amendment, keeping the EEOC from taking over the local government, will be accepted. It will not make the bill acceptable to the junior Senator from Alabama and the senior Senator from North Carolina and many other Senators. However, it would be an improvement if we were to just prevent the EEOC from running roughshod over the rights, the functions, and the obligations of local governments.

Mr. President, when Thomas Jefferson remarked that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," he had in mind a vigilance by free men against encroachments of governmental authority.

Mr. President, I am going to direct the remainder of my remarks not just to the amendment, but in opposition to the entire bill, S. 2515.

In adopting the restraints which the Bill of Rights imposed upon the National Government, the authors of the U.S. Constitution espoused the cause of individual liberty against arbitrary, governmental intrusion. In so doing, the patriots who survived the bitter ordeal of tyrannical rule exercised by King George III and his ministers declared to all the world that those who were to be governed knew best how they should be governed and that government should move only as consent flowing from the people.

The words of Jefferson are no less true today, particularly when we view the bill before us. It is an affront, to be sure, to the concept of the authors of the American Constitution and the idea of limited governmental authority which they sought to safeguard.

When legislation similar to S. 2515 was before the Senate during the last Congress, I stated that it was the most dangerous and indefensible measure presented in this Chamber since I came to the Senate. My views have not changed.

I have never personally witnessed such a bold and colossal grab for naked power which is represented by the combined impact of S. 2515. We are being asked to endorse a blank legislative check to vest in an agency of the Federal Government totalitarian authority over the employment practices and internal administration of free enterprise, labor unions, educational institutions, and State and local governments.

This bill is deliberately designed to deny basic rights of the American people and to grant special privileges to a few. Its punitive and oppressive provisions are patently directed at the destruction of the rights of the majority. Its far-reaching and drastic provisions will destroy and negate many more individual rights and liberties than they could possibly protect. If enacted, the measure would, in fact, cripple, and in some instances destroy, the very institutions which brought this great Nation into being and which helped to make it great.

Mr. President, I may say parenthetically, that the EEOC, in seeking to take over the employment practices of institutions of higher learning, is treading, it seems to the junior Senator from Alabama, on dangerous ground. It is hard for our institutions of higher learning to survive in the terrific cost crunch that is affecting our colleges and schools. Not only would the EEOC take over colleges and universities; it would take over educational institutions of any other sort, whether they be private schools, church-supported schools, or even public grade schools, for that matter—any institution that would come within the phrase "educational institution."

lready, Federal courts are pretty well serving as employment ncies for teachers in Alabama and the rest of the South, because Federal courts say whom the school boards may employ, whom may not employ, and where they shall teach. So we do not need further dictation by still another branch or department or agency ureau of the Federal Government to exercise still more control r our educational institutions in Alabama and the rest of the South. t has long been known that one of the things that accreditation rds and other agencies which have the power to accredit or to hdraw accreditation from institutions of higher learning, or of ndary schools, for that matter, consider very carefully is whether nstitution is dominated by politics, whether politicians are in con- of the educational institution or whether educators are in control he institution. If we turn the employment practices of colleges and ersities over to the EEOC and let it decide who shall teach what ect, let it decide who is going to be on the faculty of the institu- of higher learning, what chance will an institution of that sort of continuing its accreditation if it is so embroiled in control, not ducators at the school, but by a bureau of the U.S. Government? el that it is certainly a weakening of our higher institutions of ning to turn over their employment practices to the EEOC.

he distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) was rking that even as to religious schools, the only exemption given the EEOC is the control of employment insofar as it affects the hing of religious subjects and the carrying on of religious activi- The EEOC would not exempt the school from its employment tices with regard to persons who might teach history, languages, hematics, or philosophy. All courses outside of religion would be er the control of the EEOC.

a church-supported school which might desire to have only mem- of its particular denomination on the faculty to teach not only gion, but also all other subjects, will find that under the bill its loyment practices with regard to teachers of subjects not having rect connection with the promulgation and carrying on of its re- us activities will be covered. Under the bill, the very foundation es of our American system would be denied. The proposed legis- n is a direct assault upon the free enterprise system.

he number of employees that would be required to bring an enter- a business, or an officer, for that matter, under the provisions of OC is reduced from 25 to eight. Many small businesses today are ng a time keeping their doors open for the purpose of carrying on business. Competition from large corporations, governmental ape, investigations, and heavy taxes are forcing many small busi- es to close their doors. All of this combines to make it very diffi- indeed, for a small business to remain in business.

nder the provisions of the bill, if a man employs as few as eight ons, he is covered by every single one of the outrageous provisions e bill. The bill does not merely require large corporations to main- fair employment practices. It requires that coverage be extended mall businesses, as well. There will be harassment, there will be stigations, charges will be filed against many thousands of small nesses; and I predict that literally hundreds of such businesses be crowded to the wall. I have in mind an incident that occurred in my State of Alabama. A small industry, employing some 250 persons, is barely making ends meet. A proceeding against it is pendi right now before the EEOC. In talking with some of the officials the company, I was told within the last week that it looked like th were not going to be able to carry on against all of the attacks by t Federal bureaucracy, including, in particular, the EEOC.

Mr. President, if we give the EEOC the power not only to point o these alleged practices to an employer but to sit in judgment on tho charges and issue orders of cease and desist, we are going to find th this company, in all likelihood—a small company employing 250 pe ple—is not going to be able to survive.

While I was home during the Christmas recess a man called m from another section of my State, and he was registering his prote against some of the trends in Washington. He said, "Senator ALLE we are getting to the point where we are afraid of our Government. Mr. President, that sums up the feeling of many thousands of peop throughout this country. They are afraid of their Government.

Governments used to protect the rights of the people, but this ma being buffeted about by red tape, by heavy taxes, by Government i quisition, is just cringing, wondering what the Government is goin to do against him next. I hated to tell him that they are going to ex tend the powers of the EEOC against him and his small business. just did not have the heart to tell him what was in store for him. Tha is what is worrying the people, Mr. President.

We have so many problems facing this country—the dock strike o the west coast, the war in Vietnam and Indochina—and we have bee talking here for some 10 days on this pernicious bill.

The EEOC has managed to get along without the cease-and-desis authority for 7 years. Why cannot it limp along without that au thority now?

It is said that without this bill, there will be 32,000 complaints file with the EEOC in the year which will end June 30, and it is estimate that for the next year starting July 1 they will have 45,000 com plaints. They must be doing some good in calling these matters t the attention of employers. Why cannot the EEOC limp along lik it has done for 7 years without this added authority, and let the Senat get on to more important business?

I dare say when the head of the EEOC appeared before the Ap propriations Committees of the House and the Senate he did not say "Why, Mr. Chairman, we are not accomplishing anything over i the EEOC." He said, "We are doing a good job," I dare say.

Let us leave the EEOC where we find it. Let us not circumscrib its powers. Let us not curtail its powers. Let us not make it harde for them to act. Let us appropriate all the money they can properl use. But, Mr. President, let us not extend their power over 10 millio local government employees. Let us not extend their power over ever educational institution in the country. Let us not extend their powe over every employer of as many as eight persons. Let use not giv them the power to sit as prosecutor, judge, and jury, and sit in judg ment after they have already decided the case, or they would not ha bothered to prefer the charges. That would show they had already de cided the matter, or they would not have preferred the charge. Wh let them sit in judgment on a charge that they themselves preferred

The measure contains a self-starter provision vesting in the Equal ployment Opportunity Commission authority to initiate investi-ions and inquiries either on its own motion or whenever an anonous person or organization merely requests the filing of a charge t an unlawful employment practice has occurred.
There is no requirement of "reasonable cause" as a condition precet to the filing of a charge; therefore, the Commission is given te blanche authority to conduct roving inquiries into the private ks and records of a company, a labor union, an educational instiion, or State and local governments, regardless of whether there ny logical preexisting cause for believing there has been a violation he law. S 2515 is, in essence, a civil "no knock" bill.
What the people are afraid of is the Government coming in and assing him by checking over a man's books and checking on him.
t is one fear they have of the actions of their Government. ight at that point, Mr. President, this bill has a provision in it that ne of the most amazing provisions present in any bill. We have had he United States for 100 years a law that provides the Federal ernment, the agencies and employees of the Federal Government, not accept the services for the Federal Government of volunteer or ompensated employees. In other words, a man shows up at the tice Department and says, "Look, I want to volunteer my services work in the Department of Justice." Well, the law is that such a on's services cannot be used by the Justice Department. A man ws up at the Internal Revenue Service, the Treasury Department, says, "I want to volunteer my services and work for the Govern-
t. I do not want to be paid anything. I am just interested in carry-on the work of the Federal Government." Under the law, such a on cannot have his services used. He has got to become a Federal loyee. He has got to take a civil service examination in many
s. He has to be checked out by this Government. He has got to be led in the department and employed as a Federal employee.
ut the bill that is before us now would take the EEOC out from er this law. Other departments are covered by it. I have not been l to any other agency that is not covered by it. It is a law that has on the books, apparently, for 100 years. We have not had any r bill, since I have been here, seking to take any bureau or agency from under this law. But we find it now in this EEOC bill. It ides that the EEOC can avail itself of volunteer or uncomsated employees. Is that right, Mr. President? was brought out here on the floor that at present the EEOC has 1,000 employees. It is anticipated that in that next year or so, going up to 2,000. Well, there is no limit on the number of vol-er or uncompensated employees that they could get.
lready, even before they get the authority, the distinguished man-of the bill, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) stated they have some 300 volunteer employees. He stated that they used largely in public relations work. But I submit, Mr. Presi-
, there is nothing anywhere in this measure that would prevent 500, ), or 5,000 people, with prejudice, with bias, from coming forward saying: "I am so definitely committed to this concept of equal and employment opportunity that I want to volunteer my services, so I can go out over the country and check employers and see if are engaged in unfair employment practices."

Mr. President, that is what this bill would allow, and I feel that should be pointed out again and again. We sought to knock th provision out, but the Senate in its widsom saw fit to defeat t amendment.

As I have stated, Mr. President, the amendment at the desk that the pending business would not cure all of these other defects that I a seeking to point out, but it would prevent the EEOC from taking ov State and local governments, and for that reason it ought to be adopte by the Senate.

Under the inquires and investigations directed by the bill, bus ness would be vexed and harassed to the point where orderly pla management and efficient production could become impossible.

The bill brings within its orbit every person in the United State who hires eight or more employees. Thus, the small businessmen— already overburdened—would encounter new regulations, investiga tions, hearings, and appeals far beyond his time, his energy, or h finances.

The bill even goes farther. It says that the Commission can act a the complainant's lawyer and prepare his testimony for him on th very case which will be presented to and ruled upon by the Commis sion itself.

What about a little fair play there, Mr. President? That is denie here. This is consistent with the entire one-sided and dictatoria philosophy of S. 2515. Its potentialities have seeds of malignancy which it would be folly to ignore.

Mr. President, S. 2515 is a delusion designed to create a false sens of security in that it does not create one new job except those in Feder bureaucracy. I repeat, other than the additional army of bureaucrats that would be set up, this bill does not create one new job in the privat sector.

Yet, the bill is presented to us when we are confronted with ou most serious economic crisis in four decades.

We have the first peacetime wage-price freeze in our history. W are constantly faced with what some have called the "twin sixes"— 6-percent unemployment and 6-percent increase in inflation pe annum. The growth in our gross national product has been alarmingl small and capital goods expenditures have hardly grown at all. All o this has been compounded by our serious adverse balance of trade an the accompanying crisis in the position of our dollar abroad.

I am sure all will agree that there is an urgent, if not crying, nee to devise means to bring an early end to economic stagnation in ou country, to curb inflation, and to reduce unemployment levels b putting idle capacity to work and by creating new capacity.

But at the very time production is so badly needed to restore soun and vigorous economic conditions, this bill would create fear an suspicion, friction and division in the business houses, plants, an factories of America.

If this bill should become law, Mr. President, it would give licens for a bureaucrat clothed with all the power of the Federal Gover ment, to come out of Washington and to walk into a business or labo union hiring hall and to dictate to the employer or the business age whom he could employ and whom he could not employ.

Mr. President, touching again on this arm of volunteer employees Those people would have to eat, I suppose, even if they were vo ering their services. Somebody is going to be paying them, we rest assured of that. They are not going to volunteer their services ss somebody is paying the way. Mr. President, to allow this army olunteer employees, with the indicia, the power, and the authority he Federal Government behind them, is something we ought not o. What check would be made about their criminal background, ny? What check would be made about their fitness to work in a ate position of this sort? What check would be made on their gen- ability? What check would be made on their bias or prejudice?

for no other reason than that it has this vicious provision, the should be defeated.

here is just one other step which could in any way be worse than step I have just described, and that would be for one of those aucrats to go into a man's home—his castle—and try to tell him a he should have around his dining room table or his fireside.

t this is not all. The bill could also punish first and prove the se subsequently. It would permit a Federal judge—a single judge g without a hearing and without any showing by the Government reparable injury—to issue a temporary restraining order against espondent for an alleged unlawful employment practice.

. President, that would be an alternate remedy they would have. would be in addition to the remedy they have of sitting as ecutor, judge, and jury. In addition to that, if they could not rapidly enough by that method, if they have too large a back- f cases, mark my words, Mr. President, we are going to have the C coming in here and saying, "With this mass of added work we got, we do not need just 2,000 employees, we need 4,000, 6,000, 00." Mark my words.

. President, with regard to the advisability of leaving all this r in the EEOC, or requiring it to go into Federal court to have mplaints adjudicated. I might remark that there are 398 Federal ct judges in the country, and by dividing this workload up g 398 Federal judges, it would seem to me to be a better way of ling it than to have one commission here in Washington, with oard members, handle all of these complaints from all over the d States.

t, in addition to the right to decide the matter itself, when it gets and running ahead of the backlog of cases, it can go into the al court. This is an alternate and additional remedy that the C would have—to get the Federal judge to issue a temporary ining order against the respondent for an alleged unlawful em- ent practice. We thus see a reversal of the age-old maxim that a s presumed to be innocent until he is proven guilty.

they have to do is to go into Federal court and have the judge a restraining order preventing the employers from engaging in leged unlawful employment practice, without ever deciding the r. The order will be issued, and then they will wait until they time to hear it, at the bottom of the docket, and all that time they l be restrained from doing what good business judgment required to do.

temporary restraining order could be followed by a preliminary tion. The preliminary injunction could require affirmative action part of the employer, such as the reinstatement of former em- es and the hiring of new employees with back pay.

Under these provisions of the bill, it would be possible, Mr. Pres dent, for an American to be imprisoned if he disagreed with the ordd of a Federal judge, without the benefit of trial by jury.

No wonder the powers sought under this bill have been compare with the English court of the star chamber.

Frankly, I am somewhat surprised to see that some of the peopl who for many decades were subjected to the injustices of the injunc tive process prior to the passage of the Norris-La Guardia Act i 1932 are among those who now come before Congress and clamor for return to the dark days of the past.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question o that point?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. The Norris-La Guardia Act was enacted at the behest o labor to free labor from what was called "government by injunction."

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. And the Norris-La Guardia Act is still in force.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. ERVIN. Under its terms, a man who suffers a genuine wrong which only an injunction can prevent is denied the right to obtain a injunction to protect his rights and prevent that wrong, is he not?

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. Notwithstanding that labor has sought and obtained for itself protection against government by injunction, labor joins th organizations which have appointed themselves guardians of the mi nority race in demanding the passage of a bill which places every othe person within the borders of the 50 States, employing as many as eigh people, under the tyranny of government by injunction.

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct. It is rather inconsistent.

Mr. ERVIN. It would seem that the freedoms which they woul cherish for themselves, they would wish the other people to enjoy.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. I thank the distinguished Senator from Nort Carolina for the point he has raised and commented upon.

Samuel Gompers, the pioneer and towering leader in the America labor movement, declared in 1911:

> Modern American Courts assume the right to issue injunctions interferin with the personal [illegible] of men in exercising free speech, free press, peaceable assemblage, and in the[illegible] personal relationship with each other. The right of fre speech, free press, peaceable assemblage are specifically guaranteed by th [illegible]nstitution. They are the fundamental safeguards of a free people, whic neither a Court, king, nor cajolery should be permitted to destroy. The person relationship between man and man comes clearly within the jurisdiction o the [illegible] Courts and has no place in the Courts of equity unless on the assump tion that the Court that man is property, and assumption repugnant to the sens of all civilized communities and specifically forbidden by the 13th Amend ment to the Constitution of the United States. Our contention is that when an injunction is issued in a labor dispute, irreparable injury is done to the parties involved and to the cause of labor, which no court can compute and no bon can indemnify.

Mr. President, I am sure there are few among us who will not say that [illegible] the most shameful chapters of our judiciary history were written by judges in labor relations cases prior to the enactment of the Norris-La Guardia Act. Indeed, the susceptibility to abuse by judges of the injunctive process is clearly illustrated by the example of the years prior to 1932 when judges, acting without juries, in an abuse roken line of cases, used the injunction to frustrate the efforts abor to secure fair wages and safe working conditions.

would be well for those representing labor who advocate S. 2515 pause and ponder the wise words of Samuel Gompers and to roughly review the cases involving labor disputes prior to 1932.
r. President, this bill would provide a different type of injunction. would provide an injunction against the employer.

r. President, one of the most vital provisions of S. 2515 is the which would amend section 701 to broaden the jurisdictional age of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to include State local government employees. Besides including State and local rnment employees, S. 2515 also creates a special enforcement anism for handling complaints against State and local govern- units.
this time in our country's history, it should be beyond question the employees of State and local governments are entitled to the benefits and protections in equal employment as are employees e private sector. In fact, the well-documented and widespread imination among State and local government employees is a eful condition that should be eliminated wherever and whenever ble.

In a report released in 1969 by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights "For All the People—By All the People," that Commission concluded that:

* * * State and local governments have failed to fulfill their obligation to assure equal job opportunity * * * Not only do State and local governments consciously and overtly discriminate in hiring and promoting minority group members, but they do not foster positive programs to deal with discriminatory treatment on the job.

The report's findings indicate that the existence of discrimination is perpetuated by both institutional and overt discriminatory practices and that past discriminatory practices are maintained through de facto segregated job ladders, invalid selection techniques, and stereotype misconceptions by supervisors regarding minority group capabilities. The study also indicates that employment discrimination in State and local governments is more pervasive than in the private sector.

In another report issued by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in 1970, "Mexican-Americans and the administration of justice in the southwest," the Commission found that in the five Southwestern States with the highest concentration of Spanish-speaking Americans, their representation in the vital area of law enforcement was significantly disproportionate to their demographic distribution. The report shows that in these five Southwestern States, Spanish-speaking Americans who constitute approximately 12 percent of the population account for only 5.2 percent of police officers and 6.1 percent of civilian employees associated with law enforcement agencies.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that excerpts of these two reports be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1, p. 1117.)

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, this failure of State and local governmental agencies to accord equal employment opportunities is particularly distressing in light of the importance that these agencies play in the daily lives of the average citizen. From local law enforcement to social services, each citizen in a community is in constant contact with many local agencies. The importance of equal opportunity in these agencies is, therefore, self-evident.

In our democratic society, participatory government is a cornerstone of good government. Discrimination by government, therefore, serves a doubly destructive purpose. The exclusion of minorities from effective participation in the bureaucracy not only promotes ignorance of minority problems in that particular community but also creates mistrust, alienation, and all too often hostility toward the entire process of government. The public sector should lead the way in the fight to insure equal employment opportunity for all in our society.

The Federal Government's interest in State and local government operations cannot be underestimated. There are approximately 10 million employees of State and local political subdivisions. The Federal Government alone will distribute more than $43 billion of its tax revenues to these levels in the next year.

Mr. President, in order to understand the pervasive influence of the Federal Government on the State finances, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks a summary of expenditures from the current Federal budget for fiscal year 1973.

he PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Cranston). Without objection, it is so red.
See exhibit 2, p. 1138.)
r. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is clear that with the expenditure ich sums comes the responsibility of making sure that the dis-ution and use of the funds is without discrimination. The failure ve adequate minority representation in those agencies of Govern-t responsible for expending those funds is an element of this rimination.
2515 seeks to establish a fair and effective means for bringing t this result, within the boundaries established by our Federal
m. At present, the more than 10 million State and local gov-ent employees, constitute the largest class of persons exempt from peration of Federal nondiscrimination laws. By amending the nt section 701 to include State and local governmental units n the definition of an "employer" under Title VII, all employees ese units would have access to the remedies proposed in the bill.
addition to the moral issues raised, the Constitution is imperative s prohibition of discrimination by State and local governments.
14th amendment guarantees equal treatment of all citizens by s and their political subdivisions, and the Supreme Court has re-ced this directive by holding that State action which denies equal ction of the laws to any person is in violation of the 14th amend-. It is thus clear that the guarantee of equal protection must d to discriminatory practices of State and local governments, e such discrimination is based upon race, color, religion, sex or nal origin.
rough use of the enabling clause of the 14th amendment, the ise of equal protection can become a reality. The last sentence of 4th amendment enables Congress to enforce the amendment's antees by appropriate legislation.
e inclusion of State and local government employees within the liction of Title VII protections will fulfill the congressional duty act the "appropriate legislation" to ensure that all citizens are d equally in this country.
2515 provides a legislative program for fulfilling this duty gh an extension of coverage and a special procedure for en-ment. In those cases involving a respondent which is a "govern-governmental agency, or political subdivision," the Equal loyment Opportunity Commission is given the authority to at-to secure voluntary compliance under its normal procedures. ling deferral of the charge to the appropriate State fair employ-practice agency, if one exists. I might note at this point that at 33 States have provisions in their antidiscrimination laws that de enforceable coverage to State and local government workers.
. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conn of my remarks a list of such State laws.
PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
e exhibit 3, p. 1150.)
. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Commission is unable to secure iliation agreement it shall refer the case to the Attorney General rther action, specifically for filing of a civil action against the ndent in the appropriate U.S. district court. This is the authority that was requested by the President in his state of the Union messag on January 20 of this year. Further, the bill gives the aggrieved Stat or local government employee or employees the right to intervene i such civil actions. By placing the full weight of the U.S. Attorne General and the authority of the U.S. district courts behind equa employment opportunity in State and local governments, the ma chinery has been provided to insure equal rights. In short, this specia enforcement procedure, when State and local governments are re spondents, provides the necessary power to achieve results without th needless friction that might be created by a Federal executive agenc issuing orders to sovereign States and their localities. To underscor the importance of this provision in the bill, I would like to offer fo inclusion in the Record, a copy of a resolution from the International Association of Official Human Rights Agencies, endorsing the bill in its entirety. This organization is the group that represents the State agencies charged with administering State equal employment laws.

The committee has gone to great lengths to create a fair and equitable enforcement program that is capable of achieving the desired results. We have done so with the conviction that such a program is essential to the viability of State and local governmental units. This conviction is based in large part on the very practical consideration that employment discrimination at the State and local government level reflects very unfavorably upon the ability of those governmental units to deal equitably in their contracts with those groups against whom they discriminate in employment. State and local government employees are in constant contact with the citizens in their jurisdiction. If they are to carry out their jobs with any success whatever, public confidence in their impartiality is vital. This confidence cannot help but be shaken by the widespread existence of employment discrimination in the public sector.

Added importance must be placed upon this latter point if revenue sharing and welfare reform are ever going to maximum their potential. Under both programs, State and local government employes make many important policy and administrative decisions. If these decisions are to be responsive to the needs and desires of the people, it is essential that those making the decisions be truly representative of all segments of the population. Only if such representation prevails can we hope to inspire the confidence in our governmental institutions vital to the success of revenue sharing and welfare reform.

One other practical consideration bears noting. Whenever the State or locality is engaging in activities also engaged in by private parties the potential for labor strife is increased where enforcement of anti-discrimination laws is available in the private sector but not available for similar employes in the public sector.

This potential, with its concomitant effect upon interstate commerce, gives ample employment standards on State and local governmental units. In fact, just such an argument was persuasive to the U.S. Supreme Court in the case of Maryland against Wirtz, regarding extension of the Fair Labor Standards Act to certain classes of public employees. The full impact of this case is to suggest that there are proper situations and proper means to impose Federal standards upon State and local governments. I would suggest that the insurance of equal employment opportunity is just such a situation. The means employed by the bill authorize minimal contacts between the Federal ernment and State and local governments; public employers will ble to hire whomever they please, so long as it is done in a non-riminatory manner.

n summation, I believe that the moral, legal, and practical con-rations have for some time demanded that State and local govern-tal units meet their responsibilities to insure equal employment ortunity under the law. S. 2515 is a means to that end.

EXHIBIT 1

ALL THE PEOPLE . . . BY ALL THE PEOPLE—A REPORT ON EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT

(A report of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, 1969)

FINDINGS

Background of the problem

In recent years State and Local government employment has grown rapidly al numbers, in the range of services provided, and in the occupational cate-s required to perform these services. Because they are relatively large in-ions, have broad potential, and need a variety of talent, State and local nments can provide an important source of jobs for members of minority ps.

State and local governments are the largest single group of employers in nited States for which no comprehensive information is available on the al and ethnic composition of their work forces. These governments also he only large group of employers in the Nation whose racial employment ices are almost entirely exempt from any Federal nondiscrimination re-ments.

Extent of equal opportunity

Minority group members are denied equal access to State and local govern-jobs.

Negroes, in general, have better success in obtaining jobs with central city nments than they do in State, county, or suburban jurisdictions and are successful in obtaining jobs in the North than in the South.

Negroes are noticeably absent from managerial and professional jobs even se jurisdictions where they are substantially employed in the aggregate. ly two central cities, out of a total of eight surveyed, did the overall num-f black employees in white-collar jobs reflect the population patterns of ties.

Access to white-collar jobs in some departments is more readily available nority group members than in others. Negroes are most likely to hold pro-nal, managerial, and clerical jobs in financial administration and general l.

Negroes hold the large majority of laborer and general service worker -jobs which are characterized by few entry skills, relatively low pay, and d opportunity for advancement.

Spanish Americans hold a substantial number of State and local jobs in ouston area governments but hold proportionately fewer State and local in the San Francisco-Oakland area governments. They have been more ssful in obtaining higher level jobs than Negroes but less successful than ity group members.

Oriental Americans are more successful in obtaining State and county han central city jobs. Although the distribution of Oriental Americans in ssional and clerical occupations is equal to or better than that of the ma-group, Oriental Americans have not obtained full access to managerial ons.

Barriers to equal opportunity

4. State and local government employment opportunities for minorities a restricted by overt discrimination in personnel actions and hiring decisions, lack of positive action by governments to redress the consequences of the past d crimination, and discriminatory and biased treatment on the job.

(a) A merit system of public personnel administration does not elimina discrimination against members of minorities. It proclaims objectively, but do not assure it. Discrimination occurs both in recruiting and in selection amo final applicants.

(b) Governments have undertaken few efforts to eliminate recruitment an selection devices which are arbitrary, unrelated to job performance, and resu in unequal treatment of minorities. Further, governments have failed to undert take programs of positive action to recruit minority applicants and to help the overcome barriers created by current selection procedures.

(c) Promotional opportunities are not made available to minorities on a equal basis by governments that rely on criteria unrelated to job performanc and on discriminatory supervisory ratings.

Barriers in police and fire departments

5. Barriers to equal employment are greater in police and fire departmen than in any other area of State and local government.

(a) Negroes are not employed in significant numbers in police and fire depart ments.

(1) Although 27 percent of all central city jobs surveyed are in police and fir departments, only 7 percent of the black employees in central cities are police men and firemen.

(2) Fire departments in most of the cities surveyed employ even fewer uni formed personnel than do the police departments.

(3) Negro policemen and firemen hold almost no positions in the officer ranks

(4) State police forces employ very few Negro policemen. Four of the State employed no Negro policemen in the metropolitan areas surveyed.

(b) Spanish Americans are employed as policemen and firemen on the average less than half as frequently as Anglos.

(c) Police and fire departments have discouraged minority persons from join ing their ranks by failure to recruit effectively and by permitting unequal treat ment on the job including unequal promotional opportunities, discriminatory job assignments, and harassment by fellow workers. Minority group hostility to police and fire departments also deters recruitment, and this has not been over come by the departments.

Impact of the Federal Government

6. The Federal Government has established no effective Federal requirement for equal opportunity in State and local government employment, and no effec tive standards and guidelines for affirmative action to correct past discrimina tory practices and increase opportunities for minority groups. The limited efforts to do so have not been successful.

(a) The nondiscrimination clause, included in the Federal merit standards since 1963, applies only to a small fraction of State and local government em ployment and has had no discernible effect in increasing employment opportuni ties for minority groups in State and local government. Present enforcement of the clause provides neither effective protection, nor effective avenues of redress to members of minority groups who encounter discrimination. The Office of State Merit Systems has provided no guidelines for State action either to eliminate discrimination or to increase opportunities.

(b) Federal housing agencies have made virtually no efforts to enforce the nondiscrimination clause included since the 1950's in their contracts with local public housing and urban renewal agencies. Neither have they assured that affirmative action has been taken to increase opportunities for minorities.

RECOMMENDATIONS

I. Action needed to achieve equality in State and local government employment

A. Every State and local government should adopt and maintain a program of employment equality adequate to fulfill its obligation under the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment to assure that current employment practices are nondiscriminatory; and that the continuing effects of past discriminatory practices are undone.

is report has found that State and local government employment is per-d by a wide range of discriminatory practices. These practices violate the irements of the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment and accord-must be eliminated. Unconstitutional practices include not only those which urposefully discriminatory, but also those which have the effect of creatr reinforcing barriers to equal employment opportunity. Such barriers will st until affirmative action is taken to overcome them. For this reason, a e employer can assure that its employment practices are nondiscriminatory if it maintains a comprehensive, well-planned program of equal employment rtunity.

e following are examples of discriminatory barriers to equality in public oyment which may arise in the absence of an effective program of employ-equality. Evidence of the effects of many of these discriminatory barriers be found in the pages of this report.

Recruitment through schools or colleges with a predominantly non-minority up discriminates against minorities wherever comparable recruitment is one at predominantly minority institutions.

Unless special precautions are taken, use of recruitment sources such as te employment agencies, informal community contacts, or other sources, incorporate into the employer's recruitment system the discriminatory pracor prejudices of the sources used.

Whenever a work force, or significant levels or components of it, is prenantly nonminority in makeup, recruitment practices which rely upon eme "word-of-mouth" contact for new applicants may discriminatorily per-te the majority predominance.

Unless special precautions are taken, a past history of overt discrimination continue to deter minority applications for employment or advancement, ularly with respect to positions which have not traditionally been held by ity persons. Such a history also may signal to outside employment sources the employer does not welcome minority referrals, at least for nontradil positions.

Unless special precautions are taken, harassment or unfair treatment by inority supervisors or coworkers, or other discrimination not countenanced ie employer, may discourage minority applications for employment or ncement.

Where minority persons have less access than nonminority persons to in-l networks of employment information—such as through present employees icials—relating to such matters as available openings, hiring procedure, or asis for rejection or other action taken with respect to applications, this mpede access of minorities to available opportunities.

Since minority persons, competing for positions at the entry level or else-in the work force, frequently may have limited education or job experi-the employer may unfairly penalize minority applicants wherever he im-qaulifications not likely to be possessed by minority applicants and not ntially related to the needs of the job.

Selection standards may be applied reasonably to nonminority applicants, nfair if extended on the same terms to minority persons. For example, the of academic achievement—such as the level of verbal skill—may be one ire of an applicant's native ability, but when applied on the same basis group whose schools afford a markedly inferior education, it may cease to air and equal measure of ability.

he case of many State and local governments, such discriminatory barriers, ier discriminatory practices, have given rise to patterns of minority under-ation, including concentration of minority employees at lower job levels.
h discriminatory patterns of minority underutilization themselves give denial of the 14th amendment right to equal protection of the laws. Such ns, for example, mean unequal enjoyment by minorities of these public which are paid as salaries to public employees. Also, since public employees the conduct of their government, discriminatorily created underutilization norities in public employment weakens the ability of government to reflect y the interests of all segments of the governed. Finally, as shown in this , discriminatorily created patterns of minority underutilization tend to be einforcing and self-perpetuating; for this reason such patterns themselves tute vehicles of discrimination which must be corrected.

Accordingly, whenever in public employment discriminatorily created patte persist, the Constitution requires that they be remedied by measures aime giving the work force the shape it presently would have were it not for such discrimination. It should be recognized that such measures are not a "pre ence" but rather a restoration of equality; one can see inequity in such r edies only by being blind to the past injustices which they cure.

B. Though the programs of employment equality adopted by individual St and local governments will vary widely with the particular needs and probl of each, all such programs should include the following three elements:

1. An evaluation of employment practices and employee utilization patte adequate to show the nature and extent of barriers to equal opportunity minorities and of any discriminatory underutilization of minorities.

The first step in the program of employment equality is an assessment of ne and problems. This requires a thorough evaluation by the State or local gove ment of the employment practices of each of its constituent agencies, to de mine the effect of its practices on utilization of minorities. Though the princi aim is to identify barriers to equal opportunity, the evaluation also should ta note, for continuation and strengthening, of those policies which have the po tive effect of overcoming such barriers.

In order to make this assessment, and to identify patterns of minority und utilization, the State or local government will need to gather and review co prehensive information, by nonminority-minority classification, on employee d tribution among the various agency components, job levels and locations, as w as data on referrals, applications, acceptances, promotion, and other person action.

This initial evaluation should culminate in a written analysis of discrimi tory barriers to equal employment opportunity in the State or local governme as well as an analysis of any patterns of minority underutilization which ha resulted from the operation of such discriminatory barriers.

2. Preparation and implementation of a program of action which is calculated
(a) to eliminate or neutralize all discriminatory barriers to equal empl ment opportunity; and
(b) to undo any patterns of minority underutilization which have been brou about by past discrimination.

Having evaluated employment practices and assessed patterns of minor underutilization, the next step is to formulate a program which will overco barriers to equal employment opportunity and, in addition, will bring ab whatever changes in minority utilization are necessary to undo the effects past discrimination. Where patterns of minority utilization are to be chang the program should include specific goals, or estimates, to be achieved with a specified period of time.

Even in those cases where evaluation has disclosed that the present empl ment practices of a government or of one of its component agencies fully ov come all barriers to equal employment opportunity and that no pattern of d criminatorily created underutilization of minorities is present, formulation relevant practices into a program is still desirable in order to help assure th nondiscriminatory practices continue to be followed.

Affirmative programs should be developed in a form which makes clear th obligations of each component agency of the government. Programs should be p in writing and made available upon request to public employees, minority lea ers, and others with a legitimate interest in the status of minorities in pub employment. Staff responsibilities for implementing the program should be all cated clearly, and employees informed of the program and of their rights, duti and obligations under it.

The adoption of affirmative programs by State and local governments may subject to limitations imposed by statute, State constitution, city charter or like which inflexibly mandate that certain employment policies be follow Similar limitations may be created by the amount or terms of budgetary allo made to governments or to their component agencies.

Questions of the right or duty of individual public agencies or officials fac with such restrictions can be resolved only on a case by case basis. However inherent in the supremacy clause of the Constitution is the requirement that St and local governments must alter any laws, regulations, or practices which sta in the way of achieving the equality in public employment which is required the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment.

here follows a sampling of the kind of actions which State and local governts will need to include in programs of employment equality. Use to some ree of most of these techniques will be necessary to assure that all barriers to al employment opportunity are eliminated. In addition, public employers with riminatorily created patterns of employee utilization should use the techues to a degree sufficient to undo the effects of past discrimination.

Recruitment

Maintain consistent continuing communication with the State employment ice and schools, colleges, community agencies, community leaders, minority nizations, publications, and other sources affording contact with potential ority applicants in the job area.

Thoroughly and continually inform sources affording contact with potential ority applicants about current openings, about the employer's recruiting and tion procedures and about the positions (together with personnel specifica-) for which applications may be made.

Inform all applicant sources, both generally and each time a specific request referral is made, that minority applicants are welcome and that discrimina-in referrals will not be tolerated.

Fully inform each applicant of the basis for all action taken on his or her cation. Supply in detail the basis for rejection, including evaluation of tests interviews. Suggest to rejected minority applicants possible methods for dying disqualifying factors.

Make data on minority employment status available on request to employees, inority leaders in the job area, and to others with a legitimate interest in iscrimination by the employer.

Invite minority persons to visit State and local government facilities; ex-employment opportunities and the equal opportunity program in effect.

Have minority persons among those who deal with persons applying for oyment, with clientele, or with other members of the public, in order to nunicate the fact of minority equal opportunity.

Coordinate the employment and placement activities of the various compos of the State or local government, at least for the purpose of facilitating rity applications or requests for transfer. To the same end, maintain minority cations or transfer requests on an active basis for a substantial period of

Participate in Neighborhood Youth Corps, New Careers, other Federal job ing or employment programs, or similar State or local programs. In con-on with such programs, or otherwise, make a particular effort to structure in a way which gives rise to jobs which are suitable for minority persons are available for employment.

Independent of outside training programs, institute on-the-pob training or -study plans, in which persons are employed part-time while studying or wise seeking to satisfy employment requirements; this may include summer-employment for persons in school.

Solicit cooperation of academic and vocational schools to establish curricula n will provide minority candidates with the skills and education necessary lfill manpower requirements.

Selection

Take steps to assure that tests used for the purpose of selecting or placing ants are demonstrated to be valid in forecasting the job performance of rity applicants.

Pending validation, discontinue or modify the use of tests, minimum aca-achievement, or other criteria which screen out a disproportionate number nority applicants.

Do not in all cases give preference to nonminority applicants on the basis of r performance on tests or other hiring criteria, as long as it is apparent competing minority applicants, especially where they have waiting list rity, are qualified to do the job.

Where tests are used, employ them as a guide to placement rather than determinant of whether an applicant is to be hired.

Make increased use of tests comprised of a sampling of work to be per-d on the job.

Make increased use of the probationary period, affording an opportunity n-the-job training and enabling the applicant's ability to be judged on the of job performance.

Placement and Promotion

a. Make available to minority applicants and to present minority employ a complete description of positions for which they may be eligible to apply.

b. In the initial placement of said newly hired employees, wherever possi place minority employees in positions or areas with low minority representati

c. Broaden job experience and facilitate transfers of minority employees creating a system of temporary work experience assignments in other positi or areas of work. Such a system may include temporary assignment betwe jurisdictions, such as a suburban-inner-city interchange.

d. Individually appraise the promotion potential and training needs of nority employees, and take action necessary to permit advancement.

e. Announce all position openings on a basis which brings them to the att tion of minority employees and makes clear that minority persons are eligi and encouraged to apply.

Discipline

a. Formulate disciplinary standards and procedures in writing, and distrib them to all employees.

b. In case of proposed disciplinary action, inform the employees of the infra tion alleged and afford an opportunity for rebuttal. If the rebuttal is deem unsatisfactory, clearly state the reasons why.

Facilities

Assure that facilities, including all work-related facilities and those used employer-sponsored recreational or similar activities, are not subject to segr gated use, whether by official policy or by employee practice.

3. A continuing review of employment practices and of the status of minori persons in employment.

This third step of the program responds to the need for a continuing revie of employment practices—particularly those related to the affirmative program— and of their effect upon minority persons. Such a review requires the regul collection and evaluation of data on employee distribution and personnel actions such as that described under paragraph 1, above.

These data afford an important measure of the effectiveness of steps take to overcome barriers to minority employment, by showing the actual impa of employment practices on minorities; the data may indicate points at whi changes are needed in the affirmative program to make it more effective. Sim ilarly, where patterns of minority under-utilization which arose from past di crimination are being corrected, such comparative nonminority-minority da show the extent to which required changes in minority utilization are in fa being made.

Like the affirmative program itself, current data on minority employme should be made available to persons and groups with a legitimate interest in th status of minorities in public employment.

The following are illustrations of the steps necessary for an effective contin ing review by State and local governments of their employment practices and the status of minorities in employment.

a Maintain records containing for the period covered, and indicating no minority minority classifications and the positions involved, complete data on inquiries, applications, acceptance, rejections, promotions, terminations, an other personnel actions, as well as data as of the end of the period, by no minority minority classification, on employee distribution within the work for

b Maintain for a reasonable period of time, with nonminority minority cla sification, a file on each applicant (including those listed on a civil service re ord) adequate to document the specific grounds for rejection or passing over of the applicant.

c Maintain a record, with nonminority minority classification, of applica to the source, to facilitate review of the impact of each source upon minori utilization.

d Where there are a substantial number of separate components within th State or local government, make periodic inspection and review of employme practices and minority status in the various component agencies.

e Regularly interview minority employees upon termination to determi whether discriminatory acts or policies played a role in the termination.

ethods of enforcement and assistance by the Federal Government to advance equality in employment in State and local government

Congress should amend Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (1) by ating the exemption of State and local government from the coverage of VII and (2) by conferring on the Equal Employment Opportunity Com- on the power to issue cease and desist orders to correct violations of VII.

Eliminating the exemption of State and local governments from the cover- Title VII.

present exemption of State and local governments from the nondiscrimina- equirements of Title VII is anomalous since it precludes effective action st discrimination in the one type of employment public employment where scrimination clearly is mandated by the Constitution.

s true that even without the proposed amendment, individuals have the right the Constitution and Federal statutes to obtain judicial relief against dis- ation in public employment. Experience in such areas as voting discrimina- nd school segregation, however, has shown that it is both unjust and unwise ose upon individual victims the entire burden of correcting widespread non- ance with constitutional obligations. To do so makes compliance depend he determination and financial ability of the victim to wage a time-consum- d expensive lawsuit and his success in obtaining the evidence necessary to the charge. The fact that the victims often are impoverished members of ty groups who are ignorant of their rights makes such a remedy even more able. Even with willing litigants, private lawsuits are an inefficient mode ting widespread compliance. Enforcement efforts are not coordinated so as ieve maximum effectiveness but are instead governed by random suits in the identity of the defendant and the nature of the relief sought are deter- by a litigant whose main concern is redress of his particular grievance.

mended, Title VII would provide a means of attacking employment dis- ation in State and local governments since it provides an administrative (the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission) with authority to re- omplaints of unlawful employment practices and to conciliate such com- , and authorizes the Attorney General to bring suit whenever he believes person or persons are engaged in a pattern or practice of resistance to the secured by the Title. The Title also provides assistance to individual com- in providing for court-appointed attorneys and the suspension of normal osts.

Conferring on the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission the power cease and desist orders to correct violations of Title VII.

OC's present lack of power to compel corrective action severely handicaps its to obtain voluntary compliance, for the employer knows that EEOC can do if he refuses to agree to its recommendations and that only aggrieved s and the Attorney General may sue to compel compliance. Many of the which EEOC has found probable cause to believe discrimination was prac- ave not been successfully conciliated under the present law.

experiences of State fair employment practice agencies shows that adequate ment machinery is indispensable to an effective equal employment oppor- law. Of the States presently having fair employment practice laws, the vast ty give the State commission administering the law power to issue cease sist orders. Giving EEOC similar power would enhance its conciliation role ngthening its bargaining power and make it a far more effective agent in g equal employment opportunity.

he President should seek and Congress should enact legislation authorizing hholding of Federal funds from any State or local public agency that dis- ates against any employee or applicant for employment who is or would be sated in any part by, or involved in administering the program or activity d by, the Federal funds.

receipt of Federal grant-in-aid funds and the accompanying responsibility plementing the Federal program supported by the funds engender numerous portunities with the recipient State and local agencies. The obligations of deral Government with respect to discriminatory actions by these recipients ed on the Due Process Clause of the fifth amendment which prohibits gov- tal support or involvement in discriminatory activities. Its involvement programs as financier, prescriber of standards, and supervisor of execu- poses a duty on the Federal Government to ensure that there is no discrimi- in the job opportunities provided by the funds.

The only Federal law directly dealing with discrimination by recipient Federal financial assistance. Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, prohi employment discrimination only in those programs in which the provision employment is a primary objective. Accordingly, the recipients of funds und large number of grant programs are not presently subject to nondiscriminat employment requirements.

Responsibility for determining whether discrimination exists could be veste the agency administering the grant program, as in Title VI. Alternatively responsibility could be given to the Federal agency with greatest expertise in area of employment discrimination, the Equal Employment Opportunity Com son. If, as previously recommended, Title VII is amended to include State local governments and to provide the EEOC with power to issue cease and de orders, the agency also would be empowered to direct that Federal funds be w held in those cases in which the respondent is a recipient of such funds.

Congress also might provide that in those instances where EEOC finds discri natory employment practices by such a recipient it must give the administer Federal agency a period of time to ensure correction of the practices before funds are withheld.

C. Pending congressional action on Recommendation II B, the President sho (1) direct the Attorney General to review each grant-in-aid statute under wh Federal financial assistance is rendered to determine whether the statute g the agency discretion to require an affirmative program of nondiscrimination employment by recipients of funds under the program; and (2) require all Fe eral agencies administering statutes affording such discretion to impose such requirement as a condition of assistance. In the event the Attorney General de mines that under a particular statute the agency does not have the discretion impose such a requirement, he should advise the President whether he has pow to direct the agency to do so. If the Attorney General advises the President th he lacks such power in a particular case, the President should seek appropria legislation to amend the statute.

As stated in the comment to Recommendation II B, the Constitution forbi the extension of Federal grant-in-aid funds to recipients who discriminate their employment practices. If Congress has neither expressly forbidden su discrimination by recipients in a grant program nor given the Federal agen administering the program discretion to impose such a condition, the Attorn General should determine whether the President, in fulfilling his constitution duty to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed . . . ," has the pow and obligation to independently impose such a requirement.

MEXICAN AMERICANS AND THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE SOUTHWES
A REPORT OF THE U.S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS, MARCH 1970

THE COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS,
Washington, D.C., March 1970.

The PRESIDENT,
THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE
The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIRS: The Commission on Civil Rights presents this report to you pursua to Public Law 85-315 as amended.

Under authority vested in this Commission by the Civil Rights Act of 19 as amended, we have appraised allegations that American citizens of Mexic descent in five Southwestern States are being denied equal protection of th law in the administration of justice. We have found, through extensive fie investigations during 1967 and 1968, three State Advisory Committee mee in 1968, and a Commission hearing in 1968, all in that section of the coun that there is widespread evidence that equal protection of the law in the adm ration of justice is being withheld from Mexican Americans.

Our investigations reveal that Mexican American citizens are subject to [illegible] treatment by law enforcement officers, that they are often arr on [illegible] grounds, receive physical and verbal abuse, and penalties [illegible] severe. We have found them to be deprived of pro [illegible] bail and of adequate representation by counsel. They are substantial [illegible] and petit juries and excluded from full partici [illegible] law enforcement agencies, especially in supervisory positions.

Our research has disclosed that the ability to communicate between Spani speaking American citizens and English-speaking officials has complicated [illegible] equally.

urge your consideration of the facts presented and of the recommendations rrective action in order to assure that all citizens enjoy equal protection aranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

PREFACE

U.S. Commission on Civil Rights undertook this study against a back- d of written complaints and allegations at Commissions hearings and at ngs of the Commission's State Advisory Committees that Mexican Ameri- in the Southwest[2] were being subjected to discrimination by agencies of nforcement and in the administration of justice.[3] The alleged discrimi- included physical and verbal abuse and harassment by law enforcement s; exclusion from grand and petit juries; improper and discriminatory bail; lack of and inadequate representation by counsel; and employment proportionately low numbers of Mexican Americans in law enforcement es—particularly in higher ranking positions.

objective of this Commission study was to determine what, if any, factual xisted for these allegations. In the course of the study, Commission staff eys conducted field investigations beginning in the latter part of 1967 and uing in 1968, in which they interviewed approximately 450 persons in a, California, Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas. Persons interviewed in- law enforcement officers, probation officers, prosecuting attorneys, judges, defenders, attorneys in private practice, leaders of Mexican American or- ations, and private citizens. Two State Advisory Committee meetings were n 1968 in New Mexico specifically to gather information for this study. At meetings 46 persons, including law enforcement officers, attorneys, and e citizens made statements and were questioned by Committee members taff. A similar State Advisory Committee meeting was held in California ust 1968, at which 21 persons appeared.

Commission hearing held in San Antonio, Texas, in December 1968, which exclusively with the problems of Mexican Americans, sworn testimony eceived from 17 witnesses, including private citizens, law enforcement s, and attorneys, concerning the administration of justice.

INTRODUCTION

Some vital statistics

The Mexican Americans living in the five States of Arizona, California, Co rado, New Mexico, and Texas constitute the largest minority group in th part of the United States.[4] In 1960 there were three and one-half milli Spanish surname persons in those five States, and the current estimate is fo million. The largest concentrations of Mexican Americans are in Califor and Texas, whose Spanish surname populations in 1960 were 1,426,358 an 1,417,810 respectively. Each of the five States has a substantial Spanish su name population, ranging from 9 percent in Colorado to more than 28 perce in New Mexico.[5]

Mexican Americans share with most other ethnic and racial minorities t twin problems of discrimination and poverty. Although this report concentrate on discrimination based on ethnic origin many of the problems discussed including equal access to bail and counsel—are closely related to the wi spread incidence of poverty among Mexican Americans. More than one-h (52 percent) of the rural Spanish surname families of the Southwest and quite one-third (31 percent) of Spanish surname families living in urban are had less than $3,000 incomes in 1959.[6] Like other low-income groups, Mexic poverty of Mexican Americans in the Southwest cannot be attributed ir recent immigrant status. About 85 percent of the persons of Spanish ne in the five Southwestern States were born in the United States and than half were native-born of native parents. The Mexican American popu- has grown rapidly in recent years and it is a younger group, on the ge, than the Anglo population.[10] ican Americans are becoming increasingly urbanized. In 1960, 79 percent Spanish surname population lived in cities.[11] Racial discrimination and nic segregation restrict them in large numbers to identifiable neighbor- frequently referred to as "barrios", within these cities.[12]

s bare statistical outline suggests the social context in which Mexican icans encounter the problems in the administration of justice which are sed in this report.

A capsule history

ief historical background of the Mexican American group is helpful in tanding the basis for its separate ethnic identity within the American ng pot."[13]

Spanish heritage of the Southwest is older than the American Union. ulture was Spanish and the land a Spanish colony until Mexico gained ndence in 1821. As early as 1538, the Spanish had set up a printing press xico City. By 1551, they had established a university in Mexico City. By he Spanish had left a series of missions along the California coast, shed Santa Fe, and ranged as far north as Kansas.

usually emigrated as families, or even as communities, the Spaniards ma Indian women. Thus they created a fusion of races known as the mestiz ethnic wellspring of the Mexican American.

Not until the 19th century, and then only in Texas, was there any appre settlement by immigrants from the United States in territory under Me sovereignty. The newly independent Mexican Government offered gran farm and grazing land to encourage American settlers. Yet by 1834 the En speaking population of Texas probably did not exceed 18,000 persons.

The Mexicans encouraged the Anglo-Americans to settle in the South
When the first Anglo arrived, the Mexican taught him to survive in the d to irrigate and cultivate the land, to raise cattle, to use the horse, the l and the western saddle. He gave him a new vocabulary—bronco, stam arroyo, mesa, savvy, cowboy. He gave him an architecture suited to the cli and the land.

The very immigration of Americans into Texas which the Mexican encour was their undoing. As the American population grew, so did problems bet the Mexican and American Governments. A new Mexican Constitution of swept away many local rights; the Americans joined by some Mexicans revo and proclaimed the Republic of Texas. In 1845, Texas became the 28th Stat the United States. Mexico regarded the admission of Texas to the Union hostile act and the two Nations went to war. Hostilities ended following occupation of Mexico City in 1847, with the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalg 1848. Except for the territory later acquired through The Gadsden Purcha 1853, all Mexican territory north of the Rio Grande was ceded to the U States. This embraced all or parts of the present States of Colorado, U Nevada, New Mexico, Arizona, Texas, and California.

Mexican citizens living in the area were given the choice of returning Mexico under no penalty of tax, or of remaining and becoming American citi automatically after 1 year following the ratification of the treaty. Prop rights were to be respected and protected during the interim period and rights of citizenship were conferred upon those who elected to stay.

The majority of Mexicans north of the Rio Grande chose American citizens even though Mexico offered resettlement and land grants. Constitutional g antees of their rights as United States citizens, continuing political instab in Mexico, and a 300-year history of settlement in the territory ceded to United States by Mexico were factors affecting the decision.

Soon after the Mexican War the people of the United States swept west to the Pacific. The growth of cattle and cotton empires in Texas and the disco of gold in California brought Anglo-Saxons into the Southwest at such a r that the Mexican Americans were soon outnumbered. Only New Mexico tained a majority of Mexican Americans for years after becoming a Un States territory. The slower pace of American settlement in New Mexico has be attributed, in part, to the extraordinary hostility of Indian tribes there and to fact that New Mexico contained few apparent economic opportunities. The Anglos who settled in the territory generally stayed in the urban areas in southern half, intermarried at the upper economic levels, and made a pra and profitable accommodation with the Mexican Americans.

In Texas, however, hostility toward Mexicans, born of the war for Texas pendence and the Mexican War, continued. The entire area between the Na and the Rio Grande was the scene of lawlessness and countless border raid Mexicans, and Texans alike. An imported slave culture influenced Anglo tudes. Although Mexicans were not considered in as low a category as Negr they were regarded as racially inferior to Anglo-Americans.

To California, meantime, came Anglo-Saxon banking, land, and business ideas which were foreign to traditional Spanish ways. Ancient land titles from the 18th century were difficult to validate, and the American system of taxation, which was on an assessed value of the land rather than the val the produce of the land, all but stripped the original Californians of their Drought and the cattle industry helped to destroy the great ranchos cat plans sold by the 1850's five sixths of the land in southern California acquired to be delinquent tax payments. More than 40 percent of the land to the very wealthy and influential Mexican families went for as little as 2 or more. With the decline of economic influence, Mexican American pol power waned.

After 1930 more than 750,000 persons emigrated from Mexico to the S western States.[1] Two principal reasons are cited for this movement. One al instability of Mexico during the 1910–1920 revolution. During this pe- many thousands came over as refugees. The second is the fact that there has been an immigration quota system for Mexico. As economic opportunity in the United States, or waned in Mexico, traffic would flow across the r. The rise of cotton cultivation in Texas, the growth of mining in Arizona griculture in Colorado, and the rapid expansion of the citrus and vegetable tries in California—all these created enormous demands for cheap labor the Anglo population could not or would not supply.

power shortages in two World Wars redoubled these demands. Mexican grant laborers became the principal work force for California agriculture. tially migrant, they increasingly returned at season's end to Los Angeles, ng it their home base. The same pattern developed in Texas, with El Paso an Antonio serving as winter homes for migratory workers.

cotton boom spread into Arizona during World War I, drawing substantial ers of Mexicans to that State. When the demand dropped after 1918, some workers returned to Mexico. But a considerable number stayed to work per mines. By 1930, Mexican Americans represented 25 percent of Arizona's tion.[25] displacement of Anglo tenant farm workers by cheaper Mexican immigrant fed prejudices in Texas. Mexican American children often were sent to te schools and discrimination was widely practiced. Violence against an citizens and Mexican Americans became so widespread that, in 1922, cretary of State warned the Governor of Texas that action would have aken to protect Mexicans.

Mexican American population was extremely hard hit by the nationwide sion of the 1930's. Traditionally ill-paid, with little or no financial reserves, number were on relief. Some welfare agencies, notably in the Los Angeles orcibly repatriated Mexicans to get them off relief rolls. Labor unrest was n and there were several instances of strikes by Mexican American agri- al workers in southern California. The use of violence to break up strikes hibit union activity was not uncommon.

problems of the depression years were not the exclusive burden of the an Americans. Mexican Americans undoubtedly did, to some degree, share benefits of the labor and welfare programs of the thirties such as TVA, nd AAA; the Fair Labor Standards Act, Social Security Act, and the r Labor Act; and the major advances in farm and housing legislation.

ne same time, the Mexican Americans were not singled out for special bene- attention during this period. One reason may have been the absence of al organizations and politically active leaders among the Mexican Amer- another, the almost total concentration of the Mexican American pop- in the Southwestern States.

s lagged behind, however. Educational and health levels for Mexican ans in Texas were the lowest in the Southwest. As late as 1943, the n Government refused to permit Mexican laborers to work in Texas be- of discriminatory practices against Mexican nationals and Americans of n ancestry. This led the Governor to establish a Good Neighbor Com- n; the State legislature also adopted a resolution which, without naming n Americans, recognized them as Caucasians and entitled them to en- t of "white-only" public accommodations.[26]

ican American relations with the majority community were jarred in that ear by the notorious "zoot suit" riots which occurred in June in Los s. Anglo sailors claimed to have been attacked by a gang of Mexican an youths dressed in a foppish style of the time which affected heavily shoulders, wide lapels, and pegged pants—so-called "zoot" suits. In re- n for the alleged attack, about 200 sailors, later joined by other service- d by civilians, roamed the streets, attacking Mexican Americans.

June 18, 1943 a special committee appointed by Governor Earl Warren nended that all participants be punished, whether zoot suiters or military; e community be made safe for all, regardless of race; that no group be d to act as vigilants; and that the large number of Mexican American youths arrested created a distorted picture, since juvenile delinquency was lo in that group than any other group in the community. The committee recommended that racial and ethnic data be deleted from arrest informat that the press show more cooperation, that law enforcement agencies pro special training for officers dealing with minority areas be increased, and discrimination in public facilities be abolished.

World War II had a multiple impact on Mexican Americans. Thousand Mexican American men in military service were exposed to attitudes, mores, ways of life which differed from those of the Southwest. After the war G.I. bill offered Mexican American veterans educational training opportuni which they otherwise would not have received.

The period since the end of World War II has also seen the growth of polit awareness and participation by Mexican Americans. Such organizations as Political Association of Spanish Organizations (PASO) in Texas; the Mexic American Political Association (MAPA) in California; and various branc of the National G.I. Forum (Mexican American veterans organization) h successfully promoted the candidacy of Mexican Americans in Texas, Califor and New Mexico.

Although these political movements have contributed to progress in obtain equal opportunity for Mexican Americans, a number of major issues rem unresolved. Among these is the ever-present problem of Mexican American r tions with law enforcement agencies, which constitutes the basis for this rep

Participation by Mexican Americans in Law Enforcement Agencies

IMPORTANCE OF PARTICIPATION

In the course of this study, the opinion was voiced that fear and distrust Mexican Americans toward law enforcement agencies could be reduced by creasing the number of Mexican American law enforcement officers. For exam a Mexican American probation officer who had been a policeman in Phoenix 6 years, stated that more Mexican American police officers were needed in th city.[1] He thought police teams could operate more effectively in Mexi American neighborhoods if at least one of the members was a Mexican Americ
The Mexican American officer, he believed, could put Mexican American citiz at ease, serve as an on-the-spot interpreter when necessary, and thus defu tense police-citizen encounters and avoid miscarriages of police.

The director of public safety for the city of Las Cruces, New Mexico Mexican American, stressed the importance of placing Mexican American enforcement personnel at many levels of responsibility to secure the trust a confidence of the Mexican American community. He pointed out that in buquerque, no Mexican American law enforcement officer held a high ranking policy-making position. In the same city the Spanish-speaking community tinuously complained of police misconduct. By way of contrast he pointed another large city in New Mexico where Mexican Americans held positions police lieutenants and captains. Here police-community relations were excel because the Spanish-speaking community, represented at all levels within police department, was convinced that it would receive fair treatment from police.[2]

Extent of participation.—In order to obtain information of the employment Mexican Americans in law enforcement agencies, the Commission included questions on employment statistics in the questionnaire sent in October 196 793 law enforcement agencies. These included 616 police departments, 168 co sheriffs, and nine State agencies in Texas, Arizona, California, Colorado New Mexico. The communities represented by these agencies ranged in size fr less than 10,000 population up to and including metropolitan areas of mor 500,000 persons. The larger cities included Phoenix and Tucson, in Ari
Los Angeles, San Francisco, San Diego, Oakland, and Sacramento, in Calif Denver, Colorado Springs, and Pueblo, in Colorado; Albuquerque and Santa in New Mexico; Dallas, Houston, Ft. Worth, San Antonio, El Paso, and Ve in Texas. Responses were received from 580 law enforcement agencies, a percent of the recipients. There were 243 responses from police departments from sheriffs' offices, and six from State law enforcement agencies.

POLICE DEPARTMENTS

Total employment in 243 police departments—uniformed, plainclothes, a civilian—was 34,717. Of this number, 1,989 or 5.7 percent, were Mexican Am ican. This contrasts with the Mexican American proportion of the five-St region's population—11.8 percent.[1] There were found to be 23,944 uniform officers, of whom 1,247 or 5.2 percent were Mexican American. Of the uniform policemen, 10,648, or 45 percent, had never been on duty with a Mexican Am ican officer at any time in their police careers.

Among plainclothes officers, 244 or 9.3 percent were Mexican American, o of a total of 2,398. Of the 8,375 civilian employees, Mexican Americans totah 518, or 6.11 percent.

Significant variations appeared in the extent to which Mexican American were employed by police departments. In some cities the Mexican Americ proportions of the police force approached the Mexican American proportion the population. For example, in a Texas city with a Mexican American popula tion of about 40 percent, 165 of the 623 uniformed police officers, or 26.5 percen were Mexican Americans, and 40 of the 131 plainclothesmen [30 percent] wer Mexican American. In a large city in New Mexico, with a 28 percent Mexica American population, about 20 percent of the uniformed policemen and 31 pe cent of the plainclothesmen were Mexican Americans.

Other cities—and these were in the large majority—had significantly poore records. In a large Texas city which estimated its Mexican American popula tion at 7 percent of the whole, less than 3 percent of the uniformed policem and only 2 percent of the plainclothesmen were Mexican American. A larg Colorado city with an approximate 30 percent Mexican American population ha a uniformed police force that was 13.4 percent Mexican American.

Ethnic breakdowns were not received from the police departments of eithe Los Angeles or San Francisco—the two largest cities in California. The Lo Angeles Chief of Police sent a letter to the Commission's Acting Staff Directo in October 1968, in which he stated that much of the requested information wa unavailable in his office, and that the assembling of what information he di have would require excessive man-hours. He further indicated that if the Co mission would send a staff member to Los Angeles, a representative from his community relations office would assist him in gathering some of the informatio According to the Los Angeles Human Relations Bureau, total employment i the Los Angeles Police Department for 1968 was 5,937 persons. The bureau wa unable to provide any ethnic breakdown of this total, stating that employme statistics by race and ethnic origin were no longer kept by the police depar ment.[4] An official Los Angeles publication for fiscal year 1967-68 indicates tha there were 1,844 new appointments to the police department during that yea of whom 153, or 8.3 percent were Mexican Americans.[5] The 1960 census indicates that 10.5 percent of Los Angeles' population is Mexican American.

The Human Rights Commission of San Francisco informed the Commissio that as of May 31, 1968, there was a total of 2,240 police department employe in San Francisco, of whom 33—slightly over 1.4 percent—were Spanish surname There were 1,722 uniformed policemen, of whom 22—slightly under 1.3 percent were Spanish surnamed.[6] Seven percent of San Francisco's population is Mex can American, according to the 1960 census.[7] In May 1967, the Commission he a public hearing in the Bay Area cities of San Francisco and Oakland. A staf report prepared in connection with that hearing concluded that:

"In the Bay Area, Spanish Americans are underrepresented in local gover mental employment as well as in Federal employment. . . . Of 1,722 uniform policemen, only 22 are Spanish-speaking, of whom 19 are policemen-entrants. [There are 1,253 persons in the police entrants' category.]"[8] According to 19 figures collected by the Commission for its study of patterns of minority grou employment in State and local government, in Oakland, which had a Spanish su

These 213 responses constituted almost ercent of the 271 responses to this question.[11] The questionnaire asked the cies for their views as to the reason why relatively few applications had received from Mexican Americans. Inability to meet the educational re- ements was the most frequent response. Of the 271 respondents, 193 indicated a high school degree was required for police applicants. The second most rtant factor was the existence of written examinations. The third factor, l in almost as many responses as the second, was an unfavorable impression lice work by Mexican Americans.

On Aug. 7, 1968, the Commission's California State Advisory Committee held a meet- n administration of justice problems in Los Angeles. One of the Committee members, el L. Fernandez, questioned city councilman Thomas Bradley about the physical rements for police recruits and what could be done to make them less restrictive. ellman Bradley responded:

he Civil Service Commission establishes the standards, but they take directions from olice department. For a long time Chief Parker was unwilling to drop the minimum t from five-ten down to five-nine, and finally down to five-eight. This was a long agonizing fight that went on. Now, I have not seen that the officers . . . were handi- ed by the fact that their height was reduced. There was a time when they have— forgotten the exact number of teeth, but the question was asked one time, "What are going to do, bite people?"

uncilman Bradley further pointed out that at one time the police department required a recruit have a four-inch chest expansion, and that one almost had to be a good te to meet this standard. He concluded his comments on physical requirements by ving, "I think the reduction in the height from five-eight to five-seven would not ir the ability of the officer to do his job. They don't need muscle and massiveness so as they need tact." Los Angeles T. at 106–08.

Twenty-four responses showed applications from Mexican Americans amounted to en 11 to 25 percent of the total; 12 responses indicated that Mexican American cants constituted between 26 to 50 percent of the total; 10 responses indicated that lexican American applicants constituted between 51 to 75 percent of the total; and 12 nses indicated that more than 75 percent of their applicants were Mexican Americans.

in Los Angeles, they said, are looked upon as "sell-outs" and are often descrit as having become anglicized in their attitudes and practices.[12]

Similarly, a Spanish surnamed police officer in Denver, referring to the attit of the Mexican American community toward any Mexican American police plicant, stated: "He is considered to be a defector."[13] The officer's superior, Anglo division chief, supported this view, saying: "A stigma attaches to a mi ity individual when he becomes a member of a police department."[14] Accordi to an official of the community action program in Roswell, New Mexico, Mexi American community leaders there are unwilling to furnish names of potent Mexican American applicants to the police chief because the leaders are app hensive of subsequent criticism and abuse by the Mexican American communit

Community leaders in each of the five States suggested that special efforts m be made to attract qualified Mexican Americans into law enforcement work majority of the departments, however, have no recruitment program, much programs designed to attract Mexican American and other minority applican Of the 272 agencies responding to the question as to whether the agency h a recruitment program, 162 stated that they had none, and 177 said they had m no special efforts to recruit Mexican American applicants during the past 2 yea

Queried as to which methods the agency utilized in informing the Mexica American community of its desire to receive applications, 56 out of 141 agenc responding, or 40 percent, indicated that they had made announcements wh were distributed by Mexican American community organizations. Only nin agencies, however, indicated that they had arranged for the publication of s information in local Spanish language newspapers; only 16 had made arrang ments for such announcements to be broadcast over local Spanish language ra and television stations; and only two had printed such announcements in Sp ish and had had them distributed in the Mexican American communities.

The larger cities have the poorest records. Of the 141 responses, 17 came fro cities with populations of 250,000 to 500,000. Of these 17, only one stated that had made an announcement in a Spanish language newspaper or on a Spanis language radio or television station.[16]

SHERIFFS

Twenty-seven of the 32 responses from county sheriffs furnished statist concerning their law enforcement personnel by ethnic category. Eleven cam from Texas, seven from California, four from New Mexico, three from Colora and two from Arizona. In these 27 counties the sheriffs and their deputies a other law enforcement personnel totalled 5,251. Of this number 292, or 5.5 pe cent, were Mexican American.[17]

In several counties in Texas the Mexican American proportion of the deputi in the sheriff's office equaled or exceeded the Mexican American proportion the county's population. Thirty-seven out of 39 sheriffs' deputies in Webb Cou [Laredo] Texas—where Mexican Americans constitute 77 percent of the popu tion—and 36 out of 73 in El Paso County [49 percent Mexican American] we Mexican Americans. In both of these counties, the sheriffs also were Mexic Americans. In Bernalillo County, New Mexico—where Albuquerque is located 15 of the 27 sheriff's deputies were Mexican Americans.

These are exceptions to the rule, however. Commission staff members receive information that a relatively low number of Mexican Americans were employe as law enforcement personnel by sheriffs in the majority of areas visited.

or example, in both of the two largest cities in Arizona, the sheriffs had only n numbers of Mexican Americans on their staffs.[18] One Mexican American rney in Texas pointed out that there were few Mexican American deputy ricans constitute a significant portion or even a majority of the population.[19] Texas county where the population exceeds 22,000, of which Mexican Ameri-constitute about 25 percent, had no Mexican American deputies on the sher-staff, according to a community leader.[20] The sheriff's response to the ques-naire confirmed this statement. A similar situation existed in Reeves County, as [population approximately 14,000], where the population is about 50 per-Mexican American. According to a prominent community leader in Pecos, county seat of Reeves County, there had not been a Mexican American deputy iff for many years.[21] Similarly in Culberson County, Texas, where 45 percent he population is Mexican American, the sheriff had no Mexican Americans is staff.[22]

STATE LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES

x State law enforcement agencies responded to the Commission question-—two from California and one from each of the States of Arizona, Colorado, Mexico, and Texas. The response of the Texas Department of Public Safety ated that 28 of its 1,740 uniformed and plainclothes officers were Mexican ricans—1.6 percent of the total officer force—in sharp contrast to the Mexi-American proportion of the State's population [14.8 percent]. stifying at the Commission's San Antonio hearing, Col. Wilson Speir, direcf the Texas Department of Public Safety, reported that there were no Mexi-Americans among the 62 Texas Rangers in his department. He said that were 38 Mexican American patrolmen and two Mexican Americans on the igence staff.[23] In response to the Commission's questionnaire, the total num-f patrolmen was given as 1,432, of whom only 26 were Mexican Americans—ercent. At the hearing, in response to Commissioner Hector Garcia's ques-ng, Colonel Speir admitted that he arrived at the figure 38 by classifying rmed officers serving in the drivers' license service and the motor vehicle ction service as "patrolmen." the hearing Speir testified: "We have had in past year a captain of the s Rangers that was a Mexican American, Captain Gonzales, one of the most us of all Ranger captains, who is now retired after 30 years of service."[24] In nse to a question by Commissioner Garcia, himself a Texan, about the spell-f this former Ranger's last name, Speir responded "G-o-n-z-a-u-l-l-e-s." When nissioner Garcia expressed the view that this man was never considered a Mexican American by the statewide Mexican American community, Speir nded that he was considered to be a Mexican American by the Texas Dement of Public Safety.[25]
e name of the former Ranger captain actually was spelled "G-o-n-z-a-u-l-
."[26] In a newspaper account of an interview with Gonzaullas [which took the day after the hearing], who had retired in 1951 after 30 years' service the Texas Rangers, he is reported to have stated that his father was of ish-Portuguese descent, that his mother was of German descent, and that he dered himself to be an American. He also was reported to have said that he never recall a Mexican American holding a high rank in the Texas Rangers g his 30 years service although he did know of one regular Mexican Ameri-Ranger.[27]
e California Highway Patrol listed an overall total of 5,010 uniformed of-, including 4,364 State traffic officers. It failed to indicate whether any of uniformed personnel were Mexican American. Its covering letter accoming its response stated in part: nder State law, race, descent, or ethnic group affiliation has no bearing on ring employment with this Department". Similarly, the California Depart-of Justice, which returned the Commission's questionnaire unanswered, stated in a letter that it had two law enforcement bureaus within the depar agents, and the bureau of narcotics enforcement with approximately 100 pea officers. It did not indicate how many were Mexican American, stating only th there were a "substantial number" of Mexican Americans in each of the bureaus.

The Colorado State Patrol response indicated that it had 418 uniformed officer of whom 350 were patrolmen. All of the 12 Mexican Americans were patrolme and they constituted slightly more than 2.8 percent of the total 418.

statistics from this one agency compare favorably with the 1960 Populatio Census for New Mexico which indicates that 28.3 percent of its total populatio is Mexican American.

SUMMARY

Public officials and private citizens, including judges, lawyers, probation off cers, all expressed the belief that the fear and distrust which many Mexica Americans feel toward law enforcement agencies could be significantly dispelle by increasing the number of Mexican American law enforcement officers at a levels of authority.

The majority of the law enforcement agencies responding to a Commission questionnaire stated that they had made no special efforts to recruit Mexica American applicants in the past 2 years. Many of these agencies indicated tha the prerequisite of a high school degree, the existence of written tests, and th high physical fitness requirements were major deterrents against applicatio by Mexican Americans and the reason why many of those who did apply failed to qualify. While this may, in part, account for the low number of Mexica American applicants, the failure to establish specially designed minority recruit ment programs and to utilize Spanish language advertising media such as news papers, radio, and television to publicize such programs undoubtedly con tributes significantly to the fact that so few Mexican Americans apply for police jobs.

PARTICIPATION

Recommendation 1—Affirmative recruitment program

The Commission recommends that State and local law enforcement agencies establish:

(a) affirmative recruitment programs specially designed to increase the number of Mexican American law enforcement personnel;

(b) training programs to increase the ability of Mexican Americans and other minority persons employed by law enforcement agencies to obtain pro motions to supervisory positions.

Justification

Additional Mexican American officers can contribute significantly in reducing the present feeling of apprehension and distrust which generally pervades the Mexican American community toward law enforcement agencies. Such officers often can serve as on-the-spot interpreters and thus ease tense situations even in some instances, preventing miscarriages of justice which result from mis understandings.

In the report of the Kerner Commission a reference is made to the Crim Commission Police Task Force's finding that Negro policemen help provide insight into ghetto problems; often can provide advance information in antici pation of tensions and grievances that might lead to disorders; and are partic larly effective in bringing disorders under control once they do break out.[28] The Kerner Commission's report continued by pointing out that more Negro police officers were needed at all levels and ranks, and recommended that police departments intensify their efforts to recruit more Negroes, review their pro motion policies to ensure that Negro officers are afforded equitable promotion opportunities, and ascertain that Negro officers are assigned on a fully integrated basis visible to the Negro community.[29] These findings and recommendations by Kerner Commission support the Commission's recommendation for efforts ncrease the number of Mexican American law enforcement officers at all ls of authority. In its recent report on State and local employment, the mission discussed in detail the component elements of a successful affirmative on program. That discussion may be useful to agencies seeking to implement recommendation.[30]

e recognize that in some cases police departments will have difficulty recruit- members of minority groups. The recent report of the Commission on equal loyment opportunity in State and local government indicated that . . . e tension, suspicion and hostility which exists between the Negro com- ity and the police department are obstacles to the recruitment of black emen." [31] evertheless, those departments that have made an effort to reverse their ge in the minority communities and who have used special recruiting efforts gned to attract minority communities and who have used success.[32] The mission believes that similar efforts especially designed to attract Mexican rican applicants will have a similar effect in increasing the number of ican American law enforcement personnel.

ecruitment of more Mexican Americans by law enforcement agencies would affect the agencies' policies unless Mexican Americans also have opportuni- o be promoted to supervisory positions. If they are not qualified for promotion use of lack of education or training, agencies should provide them with rtunities to make up for such deficiencies. Such programs should offer train- both to recruits and to present law enforcement officers desirous of advancing upervisory positions. Federal funds under LEAA are available for this ose.[33]

Recommendation 2—Qualifications

w enforcement agencies should review their qualifications for appointment eliminate those which may not be job-related and which may tend to dis- inate against Mexican American applicants.

Justification

th Federal and private industry officials have informed the Commission e past that many job requirements have little or no relationship to the l work to be performed. For example, many private companies have abol- l some of their application requirements, since they have determined that had little or no bearing on actual job requirements of new employees was ily attainable through on-the-job training. If such techniques can be utilized rain semi-skilled and skilled technicians, the Commission believes that ar techniques can be developed and employed to properly train Mexican rican law enforcement applicants.

its report For All the People, the Commission on Civil Rights has pointed the difficulty that many police applicants encounter in taking lengthy en intelligence tests. Furthermore, the validity of such tests has not been n and at least one police department in a major city—Detroit—is now using eral intelligence test, which takes only 12 minutes to complete, in contrast former 2½ hour intelligence test.[34]

e, weight, height and vision requirements are invariably more stringent for applicants than elsewhere in State or local government employment. How- when police departments have made special efforts to recruit minorities have seen fit to make many of these requirements more flexible. For example, effort to recruit more Negro officers, Detroit has recently liberalized its age, t, and vision requirements.[35] Other large cities have reduced their height rement from 5'9" to 5'7", in response to pressure from their Spanish-speaking unities.[36]

e elimination of lengthy written tests and the substitution of shorter, more ingful job-related tests, together with the relaxation of certain physical fications, can result in the ultimate hiring of greater numbers of Mexican ican applicants.

Recommendation 3—Judges

The President of the United States and the Governors of the five Southwestern States of Arizona, California, Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas should use their powers to appoint qualified Mexican American attorneys to the Federal and State courts.

Justification

The Commission is aware that, with the exception of Colorado, virtually all of the State judges and justices are elected. However, deaths, resignations, and retirements do afford Governors some opportunity for judicial appointments, and the Commission urges them to use their appointive powers to increase the number of Mexican American judges.

Recommendation 4—Department of Justice

The Department of Justice, including the Federal Bureau of Investigation, should take affirmative action under its continuing equal employment opportunity program both to hire additional Mexican Americans in the Southwest and particularly to train and promote their present Southwestern Mexican American employees into supervisory and professional level positions. The Civil Service Commission should review and evaluate the equal employment opportunity of the Department of Justice to ensure that this program will:

. . . provide the maximum feasible opportunity to employees to enhance their skills so they may perform at their highest potential and advance in accordance with their abilities; . . .[37]

Justification

The employment statistics furnished the Commission on Civil Rights by the Department of Justice clearly show the disparity that exists in the middle and higher grades categories, which include supervisors, lawyers, and other professional personnel. Virtually no Spanish surnamed employees are found in any of these categories.

Robert E. Hampton, Chairman of the United States Civil Service Commission, stated on August 8, 1969:

Despite significant gains in overall employment of minority group persons in the Federal service, too many of our minority employees are concentrated at the lower grade levels, victims of inadequate education and discrimination. . . .

On this same date, August 8, 1969, President Nixon issued Executive Order 11478, which restated the long standing Federal Government policy of equal employment opportunity, pointing out that each department and agency had the duty and responsibility of establishing and maintaining affirmative action programs designed to achieve the goals of equal employment opportunity. In this same Executive order, the President ordered the Civil Service Commission to provide leadership and guidance in the operations of such programs, and to review and evaluate such programs periodically to determine their effectiveness.

SPECIAL ANALYSES OF THE U.S. GOVERNMENT, FISCAL YEAR 1973

In 1973, Federal aid to State and local governments will total $43.8 billion. This amount will be $4.4 billion more than in 1972—a 12% increase in 1 year, and five times the amount in 1963. Since 1968, major progress has been made in restructuring Federal aid programs to increase their flexibility and effectiveness. Proposals in the President's 1973 legislative program call for even greater changes:

Sharing Federal revenues with State and local governments in the form of unrestricted General Revenue Sharing, and six broad purpose special revenue sharing programs without matching requirements.

Reforming the welfare system to provide national eligibility standards, improved work incentives, broaden coverage to the working poor, and eventual fiscal relief to the State.

Strengthening the grant-in-aid delivery system through the Federal Assistance Review program (FAR), including: decentralizing decisionmaking to Federal field offices, and expanding the Integrated Grant Administration program from four to 24 major projects, thus enabling State and local governments to apply for several related grants through a single application.

ie fastest growing major Federal aid programs in 1973, as in each of the years 1969, are those related to law enforcement, income support, services for oor, and environmental protection.

HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVES

deral aid to State and local governments has been a part of the American al system since the country's earliest days. Under the Articles of Con-ration, Congress provided grants of Federal land in 1785 to support educain the Northwest Territory.

though Federal grants have a long history, the major growth in the number ant programs and amounts of money provided has occurred only in the two decades. The composition of the total grant program has changed signifily since 1960, as shown in table P–1. The functions comprising human ource programs—education and manpower, health, and income security a rapid growth during the 1960–73 period, rising from 47% of Federal aid in to an expected 55% in 1973. On the other hand, commerce and transportation rams declined from 43% of the total in 1960 to 14% in 1973.

STATE AND LOCAL FISCAL PROBLEMS

te and local governments have been faced with critical financial problems ent years. An imbalance has existed between the need for higher levels of services and funds available to finance these services. State and local nment receipts from their own sources (excluding Federal grants) rose a war-time low of 4.8% of GNP in 1944 to 11% in 1971, but the need for ded services and the cost of providing these services rose even faster.

State and local governments rely principally on consumer and property ta which have not grown at a rate sufficient to keep up with the growth in dem for public services. Thus, States have been forced to raise tax rates frequent instituting new taxes or raising tax rates in more than 514 instances since 19 and 64 instances in 1971 alone. These latter actions will augment tax receipts about $5 billion. This is significantly larger than the $1.3 billion and $2.5 bill added to State tax receipts in 1965 and 1967, and the record $4 billion in 19
It was only through drastic budget cutting, and tax increases, that State a local governments achieved an estimated surplus of $25 million in 1971.

The response of the Federal Government to the fiscal problems of State a local governments has been to increase Federal grants from 71 programs and billion in 1950 to 530 programs and $24 billion in 1970. The results have be that while Federal grants have paid for several services previously paid for fr State and local revenues, such as a highway network, this rapid growth h been accompanied by many problems, including:

Overlapping programs at the State and local level;

Program delays and uncertainty caused by unnecessarily detailed and cos application requirements;

Unnecessary limitations on the authority and responsibilities of Governo mayors, county executives, and city managers;

The creation of competitive State and local governmental institutions; an

Rigid funding arrangements which are unable to adjust to changes in prio ties over time, such as matching fund requirements.

While Federal grant programs were aimed at problems deemed by their sp sors to be of national interest, they often ignored their impact on the streng and ability of the State and local governments to carry out their own particu responsibilities.

REFORM OF THE GRANT SYSTEM

In recognition of these problems, the administration has proposed basic refor in Federal Government programs and institutions, and in the structure of Fe eral aid to State and local governments. These changes embrace three basic co cepts: sorting out appropriate governmental roles, improving the basic progra and modernizing management.

Basic reform is being undertaken in such major fundamental areas as welfa pollution control, unemployment insurance, and mass transit. The proposed w fare reform should help to alleviate the financial pressures on State and lo governments after it is enacted and should provide substantial savings in t long run. It will also be a major step toward reducing poverty in America. A Environmental Financing Authority has been proposed which will assist nancing expanded pollution control facilities for those communities which a unable to borrow for this purpose at reasonable interest rates. The administr tion has also designed the first fundamental reform of the unemployment co pensation system since the 1930's.

A long-needed overhaul of management process in Federal aid and other pr grams is being carried out. The regional boundaries of the major domest departments of the Federal Government have been modified so that their hea quarter cities and the regions that they cover conform. This facilitates coope tion between Federal agencies and makes it easier for grant recipients since t agencies' regional offices are in the same cities. A new Office of Intergovernmen Relations was created in the Office of the Vice President. In order to foster bett decisionmaking on the whole range of domestic programs, the administration h established a Domestic Council, which provides a forum for considering all of t various Federal activities and functions that affect the States and their su divisions, and reorganized the Bureau of the Budget into the Office of Manage ment and Budget.

Government operations are being simplified and decentralized in sever ways, through revised grant program procedures, through a proposed overha of the manpower training programs, and most importantly, through the introdu tion of revenue sharing. In the grant area, the administration has also recom mended legislation that would:

Authorize the President to consolidate closely related programs;

mplify funding of those grant programs that are closely related and in the agency:
thorize joint funding of projects across agency lines; and fer assistance to Governors and mayors in improving their policy planning implementation capacity in social welfare programs.

REVENUE SHARING

ne of the most innovative and far-reaching reforms of the federal system e proposal for a program of sharing Federal revenue with State and local rnments. In describing the revenue sharing program, the President stated:
time has come for a new partnership between the Federal Government and States and localities—a partnership in which we entrust the States and ities with a larger share of the Nation's responsibilities, and in which we our Federal revenues with them so that they can meet those responties."

e major characteristics of the administration's revenue sharing plan are:
new program of General Revenue Sharing with State and local governments out any program or project restrictions with the amount granted to grow year as the personal income tax base of the Federal Government grows: special revenue sharing programs for State and local governments in l broadly defined areas of national concern, without any requirement of ing funds or Federal approval of project plans; and intenance of those existing grant programs for which there is a clear, conng national requirement.

major features of the General Revenue Sharing proposal are:
dictability.—The amounts to be shared will be based on 1.3% of the personal e tax base.
panding scale.—Because of the natural growth in the base, the absolute nts are proposed to rise from a budget authority of $5.3 billion and outlays billion in 1973 to an estimated $10 billion in outlays for 1980.
onditional.—Revenue sharing funds will not be tied to specific programs se the funds are for use by State and local governments in accordance with program priorities. The allocation of funds will be based on formulas ribed by law and linked to data prepared on a regular basis by the Census
u. No costly, time-consuming applications will be required.
tribution by need and effort.—The amount to be shared with any given will be based on State population, adjusted for combined State and local ne effort. States with greater relative revenue effort will get more than would otherwise.
aranteed funds for cities and counties.—To place a minimum guarantee on nare of funds that cities, counties, and townships will receive, the adminion's bill stipulates that States must "pass through" to each such local iction its appropriate share.
cial revenue sharing will consist of six broad-purpose programs providing and local governments with funds for use in the functional area for which are designated—transportation, education, urban and rural community opment, manpower training, and law enforcement. The proposed effective for two of these programs—education and urban community development y 1, 1972. These funds will be distributed on the basis of formulas approfor each broad program area. Funds for special revenue sharing will come the conversion of a set of narrower categorical grants into the new program, rom additional funds requested by the President.
racteristically, the programs recommended for conversion to special reveharing deal with high priority national problems which require State and solutions. In these areas, State and local governments are in a better on to design and implement responsive and effective programs. Eliminating al administration of these programs will relieve State and local govern-of many Federal requirements—including the elimination of matching rements on the categorical grants converted to special revenue sharing.
l civil rights requirements will be retained.

SIGNIFICANT FEATURES OF FEDERAL AID IN 1973

Federal aid expenditures for grants and shared revenues will grow from $29 billion in 1971 to $43.5 billion in 1973. In addition, there will be an estimated $1 billion in loan disbursements resulting in $309 million of net lending to State and local governments. This does not include the lending activity that is being encouraged in the non-Federal sector with Federal interest subsidies and guarantees.

In total, Federal aid programs provided about 18% of State and local revenues in 1971, and will provide an even greater percentage in 1972 and 1973. The largest portion of direct Federal aid is administered by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Due to extreme fiscal pressures on State and local governments, in 1972 the department will make an advance payment to those governments of about $1 billion for welfare payments and services.

Note: Detail may not add to totals due to rounding.

Apart from direct Federal aid, many other Federal activities that are not included in this analysis affect the finances of State and local governments. For example, the exemption of interest on State and local bonds from Federal income taxes reduced interest costs to State and local governments by $2.0 billion in 1971. This exemption results in about $3.0 billion in "lost" revenues to the Treasury. Similarly, since taxpayers may deduct State and local taxes from Federal taxable income, a portion of State and local taxes is offset by a reduction in the taxpayers' Federal liability. In 1971, the value of this deduction in terms of tax savings to individuals was approximately $8.5 billion. In addition, in 19 the Federal Government donated an estimated $405 million in excess property to State and local governments for civil defense, public health, and educational purposes. The Federal Government has also donated Federal land for State a recreation uses, such as for parks and beaches. It is estimated that between and 1973 the Federal Government will have donated 40,000 acres, worth over illion, to State and local governments.

THE IMPACT OF FEDERAL AID

rapid increase in Federal aid has become an increasingly important factor finances of all levels of government. Federal aid has risen from 7.8% of Federal outlays in 1963 to an estimated 17.6% in 1973. In terms of civilian ne programs, 27.0% of Federal outlays will take the form of aids to State cal governments in 1973. Because State and local revenues from their own s have increased at a much more rapid rate than Federal outlays, the t of the relative increase in Federal aid has not been quite as marked on udgets as it has been on the Federal budget. Nevertheless, Federal aid has as a proportion of State and local revenues, from 12% in 1960 to an esti- 18% in 1971.

pattern of State and local spending has been influenced by those Federal that require the recipient government to match Federal aid funds with n resources. In 1966, State and local governments provided an estimated llion of their own funds to match the $13 billion of Federal grants spent in ear. In the last few years, State and local government matching funds have ted for about 10% of general expenditures out of their own revenue s. This could amount to an estimated $11 to $13 billion in 1971, and an ted $13 to $16 billion in 1973. The elimination of matching requirements e programs absorbed by special revenue sharing will save State and local nments about $4.2 billion and allow them greater freedom in the use of resources.

970, the distribution of Federal aids on a regional basis ranged from a f more than $5 billion in the Southeast and Mideast, to a low of $0.77 in the Rocky Mountain area. On a per capita basis, however, the Rocky ain area ranked highest with grant payments of $154 per capita, while the Lakes with $82 and Plains region with $104 per capita were lowest. ation density and per capita income are the two major factors that ac- d for this wide variation. Generally, the level of per capita aid is inversely l to population density primarily because of aid for highway construction ared revenues to thinly populated Western States. The population density Rocky Mountain area is the lowest of the regions, the holdings of Federal are extensive and per capita aid is the highest. At the other end of the per capita aid is lower in the regions where population density is greatest, deral land holdings are small.

Per capita aid is also inversely related to per capita income. There are t... reasons for this relationship. Some grant programs require lower matching rat... for the relatively poorer States. Other programs such as those for public assi... ance and elementary and secondary education, are designed as aids to the dis... vantaged and tend to flow to States having proportionately more individuals w... lower incomes. Within the rising total of Federal assistance to State and local governmen... another important qualitative shift is taking place—the increasing emphasis ... urban areas. Between 1960 and 1970, the major population growth in Amer... occurred in the metropolitan complexes. Today, about 70% of the population liv... in 268 metropolitan areas. In 1973, approximately $31.5 billion of the $43.5 bill... of total Federal grants will be spent in, or directly affect, standard metropolit... statistical areas (SMSA's). This is an increase of about $27 billion, or near... 700% over the amount of aid provided to these urban areas in 1961, and $17... billion in the last 4 years. The major increase in Federal grants for urban area... occurred in law enforcement and public assistance.

TYPES OF GRANTS

eral aid to State and local governments, as reflected in budget outlays, everal forms: grants; shared revenues, usually counted as grants; and Shared revenues (not to be confused with the President's revenue shar- ograms) are payments of a share of Federal revenues from a particular —such as receipts from timber sales—which are paid to State and local ments. These payments are frequently in lieu of taxes which would be f the Federal land were privately held. Grants are nonrepayable re- s provided by the Federal Government in support of a State or local pro- f service to the public.

practice, there are two types of grants—those with "strings" attached, ditional grants, and those with "no strings" attached, or unconditional . Only the former type is presently in use in the United States, but the ent's revenue sharing proposal is designed to change this.

litional grants may be divided into project grants and formula grants. t grants are a relatively recent development in the United States and are ed to meet specific problems. That is, a project grant is given for a speci- gram need, such as demonstration grants for education. The recipient ake the initiative in applying for the grant, and it is up to the discretion granting agency whether or not the particular project merits funding. t grants accounted for an estimated $9.4 billion in 1969 and $11.7 billion of total Federal aid.

ontrast, formula grants are allocated to all eligible jurisdictions for se- functions on the basis of some formula. The formula criteria may include al capacity of the recipient government, total or relevant population in ea, such as the number of poor people, or both. Hospital construction , and special revenue sharing programs are examples of formula grants. hing requirements on Federal grants specify the portion of the project gram cost that the recipient is required to provide in order to receive the Federal grant. Matching requirements vary widely depending on the progra

For some programs, the matching rates are uniform for recipient governmen
In other cases, differential rates have been established so that governmen with lower fiscal capacity are required to meet lower matching requiremen than those with high fiscal capacity.

Revenue sharing, a third type of grant, has been discussed in another pa of this analysis.

Three different statistical series showing Federal aid to State and lo governments are produced by the Federal Government. Table P 8 shows th principal differences between these three series over a 6-year period.

As the table indicates, there is a growing divergence between the series sho in this analysis and the other series. The principal cause of this divergen over these years was the treatment of payments by the Office of Economic O portunity, research payments, and the distribution of surplus agricultural co modities. Although these payments will be relatively stable in the years 197 72, the continued growth of food stamps will continue to widen this gap.

The series used in this analysis is focused on showing Federal aid for progra either operated directly by State or local governments or coordinated throu or approved by State agencies. It includes outlays whether cash payments or i kind, and includes aid to Governments of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands
The basic focus is on programs aimed to serve the public but not directly admin tered by the Federal Government. Therefore, it excludes payments for purcha of services to the Federal Government, such as research conducted by publ universities.

Both the census and the national income accounts (NIA) definitions of gra are designed to match their other definitions for data encompassing the enti economy. They exclude payments to private, nonprofit agencies even if coor nated under a State plan, since this money is reported in the private sector. T principal example of this is OEO, where a considerable amount of money in budget includes as grants goes to private nonprofit entities.

Both the census and the NIA definitions exclude payments in-kind fr grants—such as commodities donated under the school lunch program—and al exclude payments to territories or possessions. However, they focus on cash pa ments, so payments for research conducted by public universities are included their data, as the universities are included as part of the State local sector their various tabulations. These payments are not considered grants in th analysis.

There are various other—relatively minor—differences between the three serie
The one major outlay included in the budget and census series but excluded fr the NIA series is payments for low rent public housing, which the NIA cons as purchases by the Federal Government rather than grants.

Further information on the NIA series may be found in Special Analysis

MARYLAND v. WIRTZ, SYLLABUS, MARYLAND ET AL. v. WIRTZ, SECRETARY OF LA ET AL.

APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MARYL

No. 742. Argued April 23, 1968.—Decided June 10, 1968.

The Fair Labor Standards Act, as enacted in 1938, required every emplo to pay each of his employees "engaged in commerce or in the production goods for commerce" certain minimum wages and overtime pay. The definit of employer excluded States and their political subdivisions. In 1961 the A coverage was extended beyond employees individually connected to interst commerce to include all employees of certain "enterprises" engaged in comme or production for commerce. In 1966 the Act was amended to cover cert hospitals, institutions, and schools, and to modify the definition of employer remove the exemption of the States and their subdivisions with respect employees of hospitals, institutions, and schools. Appellants, 28 States and school district, sought to enjoin enforcement of the Act as it applies to scho and hospitals operated by the States or their subdivisions. They argued t the "enterprise concept" of coverage and the inclusion of state-operated hospit and schools were beyond Congress' power under the Commerce Clause, t the remedial provisions of the Act, if applied to the States, would conflict w the Eleventh Amendment, and that school and hospital enterprises do not ha the statutorily required relationship to interstate commerce. A three-ju district court declined to issue a declaratory judgment or an injunction, a concluded that the adoption of the "enterprise concept" and the extension coverage to state institutions do not, on the face of the Act, exceed Congr commerce power. That court declined to consider the Eleventh Amendment a statutory relationship contentions.

Held:

1. The "enterprise concept" of coverage is clearly within the power of Congr under the Commerce Clause. Pp. 188–193.

(a) A rational basis for Congress' finding the scheme necessary to the p tection of commerce was the logical inference that the pay and hours of employ of an interstate business who are not production workers, as well as those w are, affect an employer's competition with companies elsewhere. United State Darby, 312 U.S. 100, followed. Pp. 188–191.

(b) Another rational basis is the promotion of labor peace by the regulation wages and hours, subjects of frequent labor disputes. Pp. 191–192.

(c) The class of employers subject to the Act, approved in Darby, supra, w not enlarged by the addition of the "enterprise concept." P. 193.

2. The commerce power provides a constitutional basis for extension of t Act to state-operated schools and hospitals. Pp. 193–199.

(a) Congress has "interfered with" state functions only to the extent that subjects a State to the same minimum wage and over-time pay limitations as o employers whose activities affect commerce. Pp. 193–194.

(b) Labor conditions in schools and hospitals can affect commerce and a within the reach of the commerce power. Pp. 194–195.

(c) Where a State is engaging in economic activities that are validly regula by the Federal Government when engaged in by private persons, the State may forced to conform its activities to federal regulation. United States v. Califor 297 U.S. 175. Pp. 195–199.

3. Questions concerning the States' sovereign immunity from suit and whet particular state-operated institutions have employees handling goods in c merce are reserved for appropriate concrete cases. Pp. 199–201.

269 F. Supp. 826, affirmed.

Max M. Wilner, Assistant Attorney General of Maryland, and Charles A Wright argued the cause for appellants. riginally enacted,[1] the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 required every er to pay each of his employees "engaged in commerce or in the production ds for commerce" [2] a certain minimum hourly wage, and to pay at a higher r work in excess of a certain maximum number of hours per week. The Act l the term "employer" so as to exclude "the United States or any State or al subdivision of a State. . . ."[3] This case involves the constitutionality sets of amendments to the original enactment.

961, Congress changed the basis of employee coverage: instead of extend-otection to employees individually connected to interstate commerce, the w covers all employees of any "enterprise" engaged in commerce or producr commerce, provided the enterprise also falls within certain listed cate-

In 1966, Congress added to the list of categories the following:

is engaged in the operation of a hospital, an institution primarily en-in the care of th sick, the aged, the mentally ill or defective who reside premises of such institution, a school for the mentally or physically apped or gifted children, an elementary or secondary school, or an inon of higher education (regardless of whether or not such hospital, institur school is public or private or operated for profit or not for profit.)"[5]

ne same time, Congress modified the definition of "employer" so as to re-he exemption of the States and their political subdivisions with respect loyees of hospitals, institutions, and schools.[6]

State of Maryland, since joined by 27 other States and one school district, t this action against the Secretary of Labor to enjoin enforcement of the sofar as it now applies to schools and hospitals operated by the States r subdivisions. The plaintiffs made four contentions. They argued that pansion of coverage through the "enterprise concept" was beyond the power gress under the Commerce Clause. They contended that coverage of stated hospitals and schools was also beyond the commerce power. They as-that the remedial provisions of the Act,[7] if applied to the States, would with the Eleventh Amendment. Finally, they urged that even if their utional arguments were rejected, the court should declare that schools spitals, as enterprises, do not have the statutorily required relationship reasons to follow, we affirm the judgment of the District Court.

I

We turn first to the adoption in 1961 of the "enterprise concept." Whereas Act originally extended to every employee "who is engaged in commerce o the production of goods for commerce," it now protects every employee who employed in an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of go for commerce." [9] Such an enterprise is defined as one which, along with qualifications, "has employees engaged in commerce or in the production goods for commerce . . ." [10] Thus the effect of the 1961 change was to extend tection to the fellow employees of any employee who would have been prote by the original Act, but not to enlarge the class of employers subject to the In United States v. Darby, 312 U.S. 100, this Court found the original A legitimate exercise of congressional power to regulate commerce among States. Appellants accept the Darby decision, but contend that the extensio protection to fellow employees of those originally covered exceeds the comm power. We conclude, to the contrary, that the constitutionality of the "enterp concept" is settled by the reasoning of Darby itself and is independently est lished by principles stated in other cases.

Darby involved employees who were engaged in producing goods for merce. Their employer contended that since manufacturing is itself an intrast activity, Congress had no power to regulate the wages and hours of manu turing employees. The first step in the Court's answer was clear: "[Cong may] by appropriate legislation regulate intrastate activities where they hav substantial effect on interstate commerce." [11]

The next step was to discover whether such a "substantial effect" existed. C gress had found that substandard wages and excessive hours, when imposed employees of a company shipping goods into other States, gave the expor company an advantage over companies in the importing States. Having found, Congress decided as a matter of policy that such an advantage in in state competition was an "unfair" one, and one that had the additional desirable effect of driving down labor conditions in the importing States. [12] T Court was of course concerned only with the finding of a substantial effect interstate competition, and not with the consequent policy decisions. In acc ing the congressional finding, the Court followed principles of judicial rev only recently rearticulated in Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294, 303-304:

"Of course, the mere fact that Congress has said when particular activity sh be deemed to affect commerce does not preclude further examination by Court. But where we find that the legislators . . . have a rational basis for find a chosen regulatory scheme necessary to the protection of commerce, our vestigation is at an end." [13]

[9] U.S.C. §§ 206(a), 207(a) (1964 ed., Supp. II).
[10] 29 U.S.C. § 203(s) (1964 ed., Supp. II).
[11] 312 U.S. at 119. The Act prohibited both the interstate transportation of goods duced under substandard labor conditions, and the maintenance of such conditions ucts. The first prohibition, a restraint on commerce itself, was upheld against the tention that its real motive or purpose was to regulate manufacturing. The lang quoted in the text answered a challenge to the second prohibition.
[12] Section 2 of the Act, 52 Stat. 1060, 29 U.S.C. § 202, reads in part as follows:
"The Congress hereby finds that the existence, in industries engaged in commerce or the production of goods for commerce, of labor conditions detrimental to the maint of the minimum standard of living necessary for health, efficiency, and general well
. . . (2) burdens commerce and the channels and instrumentalities of commerce spread and perpetuate such labor conditions among the workers of the se (3) burdens commerce and the free flow of goods in commerce; (4) constitutes unfair method of competition in commerce . . ." [13] In Katzenbach v. McClung, it appeared that Congress had undertaken extensive hearings. The commercial need for the statute there involved. A major contention appellants in the present case is that the legislative history of the amendments now us has no factual predicate for extensions of the original Act. To the extent that the is quite incorrect. The original Act stated Congress' findings and purposes 1938. Subsequent extensions of coverage were presumably based on similar findings purposes with respect to the areas newly covered. We are not concerned with the ma in which Congress reached its factual conclusions.

re was obviously a "rational basis" for the logical inference that the pay urs of production employees affect a company's competitive position. logical inference does not stop with production employees. When a com-does an interstate business, its competition with companies elsewhere is d by all its significant labor costs, not merely by the wages and hours of employees who have physical contact with the goods in question. Consey, it is not surprising that this Court has already explicitly recognized 'ongress' original choice to extend the Act only to certain employees of ate enterprises was not constitutionally compelled; rather, Congress deat that time, "not to enter areas which it might have occupied [under the erce power]." Kirschbaum Co. v. Walling, 316 U.S. 517, 522.

"enterprise concept" is also supported by a wholly different line of analythe original Act, Congress stated its finding that substandard labor cons tended to lead to labor disputes and strikes, and that when such strife ted businesses involved in interstate commerce, the flow of goods in com-was itself affected.[14] Congress therefore chose to promote labor peace ulation of subject matter, wages, and hours, out of which disputes frey arise. This objective is particularly relevant where, as here,[15] the enter-in question are significant importers of goods from other States.

ough the Court did not examine this second objective in Darby, other cases ound a "rational basis" for statutes regulating labor conditions in order ect interstate commerce from labor strife. The National Labor Relations had been passed because "[t]he denial by employers of the right of ems to organize and the refusal by employers to accept the procedure of col-bargaining lead to strikes and other forms of industrial strife or unrest, have the intent or the necessary effect of burdening or obstructing com-
. . ."[16]

abor Board v. Jones & Laughlin, 301 U.S. 1, this Court held that the al Labor Relations Act (NLRA) was within the commerce power. The of the decision was contained in two propositions: "the stoppage of those dent's] operations by industrial strife would have a most serious effect nterstate commerce," id., at 41; and "[e]xperience has abundantly dem-ed that the recognition of the right of employees to self-organization and representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of collective bar-is often an essential condition of industrial peace." Id., at 42.

Fair Labor Standards Act, including the present "enterprise" definition erage, may also be supported by two propositions. One is identical with st proposition supporting the NLRA: strife disrupting an enterprise in-in commerce may disrupt commerce. The other is parallel to the second tion supporting the NLRA: there is a basis in logic and experience for clusion that substandard labor conditions among any group of employees, r or not they are personally engaged in commerce or production, may strife disrupting an entire enterprise.

her the "enterprise concept" is defended on the "competition" theory or "labor dispute" theory, it is true that labor conditions in businesses having few employees engaged in commerce or production may not affect com-very much or very often. Appellants therefore contend that defining l enterprises in terms of their employees is sometimes to permit "the tail the dog." However, while Congress has in some instances left to the or to administrative agencies the task of determining whether commerce ted in a particular instance. Darby itself recognized the power of Con-stead to declare that an entire class of activities affects commerce.[18] The estion for the courts is then whether the class is "within the reach of the power."[19] The contention that in Commerce Clause cases the courts have to excise, as trivial, individual instances falling within a rationally de-ass of activities has been put entirely to rest. Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S.
7–128; Polish Alliance v. Labor Board, 322 U.S. 643, 648; Katzenbach v.
g, supra, at 301. The class of employers subject to the Act was not en-by the addition of the enterprise concept. The definition of that class is as l now as it was when Darby was decided.

II

Appellants' second contention is that the commerce power does not afford constitutional basis for extension of the Act to schools and hospitals operated by the States or their subdivisions. Since the argument is made in terms of interference with "sovereign state functions," it is important to note exactly what the Act does. Although it applies to "employees," the Act specifically exempts "employee employed in a bona fide executive, administrative, or professional capacity (including any employee employed in the capacity of academic administrative personnel or teacher in elementary or secondary schools) . . ."[20] We assume, as did the District Court,[21] that medical personnel are likewise excluded from coverage under the general language.

The Act establishes only a minimum wage and a maximum limit of hours unless overtime wages are paid, and does not otherwise affect the way in which school and hospital duties are performed. Thus appellants' characterization of the question in this case as whether Congress may, under the guise of the commerce power, tell the States how to perform medical and educational functions is not factually accurate. Congress has "interfered with" these state functions only to the extent of providing that when a State employs people in performing such functions it is subject to the same restrictions as a wide range of other employers whose activities affect commerce, including privately operated schools and hospitals.[22]

It is clear that labor conditions in schools and hospitals can affect commerce. The facts stipulated in this case indicate that such institutions are major users of goods imported from other States. For example:

"In the current fiscal year an estimated $38.3 billion will be spent by State and local public educational institutions in the United States. In the fiscal year 1965 these same authorities spent $3.9 billion operating public hospitals. . . .

"For Maryland, which was stipulated to be typical of the plaintiff States,[23] of the $8 million spent for supplies and equipment by its public school systems during the fiscal year 1965 represented direct interstate purchases. Over 75% of the $576,000 spent for drugs, X-ray supplies and equipment and hospital supplies by the University of Maryland Hospital and seven other state hospitals were out-of-state purchases." [24]

Similar figures were supplied for other States.[24] Strikes and work stoppages involving employees of schools and hospitals, events which unfortunately are not infrequent,[25] obviously interrupt and burden this flow of goods across state lines. It is therefore clear that a "rational basis" exists for congressional action prescribing minimum labor standards for schools and hospitals, as for other supporting enterprises.[26]

Indeed, appellants do not contend that labor conditions in all schools and hospitals are without the reach of the commerce power, but only that the Act cannot be constitutionally applied to state-operated institutions because that power must yield to state sovereignty in the performance of governmental functions. This argument simply is not tenable. There is no general "doctrine implicit in the Federal Constitution that 'the two governments, national and state, are each to exercise its power so as not to interfere with the free and full exercise of the powers of the other.'" Case v. Bowles, 327 U.S. 92, 101.

In the first place, it is clear that the Federal Government, when acting within a delegated power, may override countervailing state interests whether these [21] See 269 F. Supp., at 832 (opinion of Judge Winter).

[22] In the court below, Judge Thomsen was troubled by the application of the overtime provisions to school and hospital personnel, who may have different arrangements and hours of work than employees of other enterprises. 269 F. Supp., at 851. Congress addressed its attention to this problem in 29 U.S.C. § 207 (1964 ed., Supp. II), which provides special means of computing hospital overtime. That this provision may seem to some inadequate and that no similar provision was made in the case of schools, are matters not for judicial cognizance. The Act's overtime provisions apply to a wide range of employees with differing patterns of worktime; they were intended to change some of these patterns. It is not for the courts to decide that such changes as may be required will result in the case of some industries and harmful in others.

[25] U.S. Department of Labor, Summary Release, Work Stoppages Involving Government Employees, 1965.

[26] Both under the present Act and the National Labor Relations Act, numerous cases have held that the employment of an employee in interstate commerce may consist of transportation. E.g. Wirtz v. Hardin & Co., 256 F. Supp. 579, aff'd 359 F. 2d 792 (CA8); N.L.R.B. v. Bevco Hotel, 311 F. 2d 528 (NLRA).

bed as "governmental" or "proprietary" in character. As long ago as ry District v. United States, 266 U.S. 405, the Court put to rest the conn that state concerns might constitutionally "outweigh" the importance of nerwise valid federal statute regulating commerce. Congress had imposed ory limits on the diversion of water from Lake Michigan. A unanimous speaking through Mr. Justice Holmes, declared that the sanitary dis-alleged need for more water than federal law allowed was "irrelevant" se federal power over commerce is "superior to that of the States to pro-or the welfare or necessities of their inhabitants." Id., at 426. See Oklahoma inson Co., 313 U.S. 508.

re remains, of course, the question whether any particular statute is an rwise valid regulation of commerce." This Court has always recognized that wer to regulate commerce, though broad indeed, has limits. Mr. Chief Jusarshall paused to recognize those limits in the course of the opinion that taked out the vast expanse of federal authority over the economic life new Nation. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 194 195. Mr. Chief Justice s, speaking only one Term after he delivered the opinion for the Court in & Laughlin, supra, put the matter thus:

subject of federal power is still 'commerce,' and not all commerce but rce with foreign nations and among the several States. The expansion of rise has vastly increased the interests of interstate commerce but the utional differentiation still obtains." Santa Cruz Co. v. Labor Board, 303 3, 466.

Court has ample power to prevent what the appellants purport to fear, ter destruction of the State as a sovereign political entity."[27]

while the commerce power has limits, valid general regulations of com-do not cease to be regulations of commerce because a State is involved.
tate is engaging in economic activities that are validly regulated by the l Government when engaged in by private persons, the State too may be to conform its activities to federal regulation.

was settled by the unanimous decision in United States v. California, S. 175. The question was whether a railroad, operated by the State, and y within the State, as a nonprofit venture for the purpose of facilitating ortation at a port, was nevertheless subject, like other railroads, to the Appliance Act. The Court first held that although the railroad operated tween points in California, it was within the reach of federal regulation state rail transportation. 297 U.S., at 181–183. The Court then proceeded to r the claim that the State "is not subject to the federal Safety Appliance nd reasoned as follows:

e think it unimportant to say whether the state conducts its railroad in its ign' or in its 'private' capacity. That in operating its railroad it is acting a power reserved to the states cannot be doubted. The only question we nsider is whether the exercise of that power, in whatever capacity, must ubordination to the power to regulate interstate commerce, which has been l specifically to the national government. The sovereign power of the states ssarily diminished to the extent of the grants of power to the federal nent in the Constitution.

e look to the activities in which the states have traditionally engaged king the boundary of the restriction upon the federal taxing power. But s no such limitation upon the plenary power to regulate commerce. The n no more deny the power if its exercise has been authorized by Congress n an individual." 297 U.S., at 183–185 (citations omitted).

dissent suggests that by use of an "enterprise concept" such as that we have ere, Congress could under today's decision declare a whole State an "enterprise" commerce and take over its budgeting activities. This reflects, we think, a mis-of the Act, of Wickard v. Filburn, supra, and of our decision. The Act's definition rprise" reads in part as follows:

erprise' means the related activities performed (either through unified operation ion control) by any person or persons for a common business purpose . . . but t include the related activities performed for such enterprise by an independent ld the enterprise concept on the explicit premise that an "enterprise" is a set of ns whose activities in commerce would all be expected to be affected by the wages rs of any group of employees, which is what Congress obviously intended. So the term is quite cognizant of limitations on the commerce power. Neither here Vickard has the Court declared that Congress may use a relative trivial impact on

See also Board of Trustees v. United States, 289 U.S. 48, where the Co rejected a claim of "state sovereignty" and held that a state university that i ported scientific apparatus from abroad could be made to pay import duties i posed pursuant to the power over foreign commerce.

The principle of United States v. California is controlling here. Appellan argument that the statute involved there was somewhat more directly a obviously a regulation of "commerce," and that the state activity involved the was less central to state sovereignty, misses the mark. This Court has examin and will continue to examine federal statutes to determine whether there is rational basis for regarding them as regulations of commerce among the Stat But it will not carve up the commerce power to protect enterprises indistinguis able in their effect on commerce from private businesses, simply because th enterprises happen to be run by the States for the benefit of their citizens."

Appellants raise two further issues, both of which the District Court found inappropriate to explore fully in a declaratory judgment proceeding. We agr In each case we conclude that no showing has been made that warrants declar tory or injunctive relief. In neither instance, however, do we mean to preclu future consideration on the facts of individual cases.

The first question is whether the Act violates the States' sovereign immun from suit guaranteed by the Eleventh Amendment.[28] The Act provides as follows

"Any employer who violates the provisions of section 206 (wages) or section 2 (hours) of this title shall be liable to the employee or employees affected in th amount of their unpaid minimum wages, or their unpaid overtime compensatio as the case may be, and in an additional equal amount as liquidated damage Action to recover such liability may be maintained in any court of competen jurisdiction. . . ." 29 U.S.C. § 216(b).

The Act also provides for suits by the Secretary of Labor to recover unpa minimum wages or overtime compensation, 29 U.S.C. § 216(c) and for injunctiv relief against violations, 29 U.S.C. § 217.

Percolating through each of these provisions for relief are interests of th United States and problems of immunity, agency, and consent to suit. Cf. Par v. Terminal R. Co., 377 U.S. 184. The constitutionality of applying the substa tive requirements of the Act to the States is not, in our view, affected by the po sibility that one or more of the remedies the Act provides might not be ava able when a State is the employer-defendant. Particularly in light of the Act "separability" provision, 29 U.S.C. § 219, we see no reason to strike down othe wise valid portions of the Act simply because other portions might not be co stitutional as applied to hypothetical future cases. At the same time, we decli to be drawn into an abstract discussion of the numerous complex issues th might arise in connection with the Act's various remedial provisions. They a almost impossible and most unnecessary to resolve in advance of particular facts stated claims, and identified plaintiffs and defendants. Questions of state i munity are therefore reserved for appropriate future cases.

Appellants' remaining contention presents similar problems. In order to b covered by the Act, an employer hospital or school must in fact have "employee engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, including em ployees handling, selling, or otherwise working on goods that have been mov in or produced for commerce by any person. . . ." 29 U.S.C. § 203 (s) (1964 ed Supp. II).

Appellants ask us to declare that hospitals and schools simply have no su employees. The word "goods" is elsewhere defined to exclude "goods after the delivery into the actual physical possession of the ultimate consumer there other than a producer, manufacturer, or processor thereof." 29 U.S.C. § 203 Appellants contend that hospitals and schools are the ultimate consumers of th cut of state products they buy, and hence none of their employees handles "goods in the statutory sense.

[28] Nor is it relevant that Congress originally chose to exempt all state enterprises f later partially removed that exemption. Congress was as free to include state activi within the general regulation at a later date as it would have been to omit the exempti in the first place.

[29] "The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any su at law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citize of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State."

think the District Court was correct in declining to decide, in the abstract n general, whether schools and hospitals have employees engaged in com-or production. Such institutions, as a whole, obviously purchase a vast of out-of-state commodities. These are put to a wide variety of uses, pre-ly ranging from physical incorporation of building materials into hospital hool structures, to over-the-counter sale for cash to patients, visitors, stuand teachers. Whether particular institutions have employees handling Court's opinion skillfully brings employees of state-owned enterprises with-reach of the Commerce Clause; and as an exercise in semantics it is unionable if congressional federation is the standard. But what is done here theless such a serious invasion of state sovereignty protected by the Tenth case has some of the echoes of New York v. United States, 336 U.S. 572, a divided Court held that the Federal Government could tax the sale of l waters owned and marketed by New York. My dissent was in essence that ision made the States pay the Federal Government "for privilege of exer-the powers of sovereignty guaranteed them by the Constitution." 326 U.S., present federal law takes a much more serious bite. The 1966 amendments Fair Labor Standards Act require the States to pay school and hospital ees a minimum wage escalating to $1.60 per hour in 1971.[30] As a general ne amendments make the States pay their employees who work over 40 week overtime compensation of 1½ times their regular wage.[31] There are nctions against the State and its political subdivisions,[32] and state officials parently, be subjected to criminal penalties.[33] The impact is pervasive, g at all levels of state government. As Judge Northrop said in his dissent 269 F. Supp. 826, 852: this Act Congress is forcing, under threat of civil liability and criminal es, the state legislature or the responsible political subdivision of the l and related institutions of the state; or ) reduce indispensable services in other governmental activities to meet lgets of those activities favored by the United States Congress; or ) refrain from entering new fields of governmental activity necessitated by ng social conditions."

e can be no doubt but that the 1966 amendments to the Fair Labor Stand-ct disrupt the fiscal policy of the States and threaten their autonomy in ulation of health and education. Yet, the Court considers it irrelevant that deral regulations are to be enforced against sovereign States and limits its ration to "whether there is a rational basis for regarding them as regula-commerce among the States."

State was prohibited from diverting water from the Great Lakes necessa to ensure navigability, a phase of commerce.

In none of these cases, however, did the federal regulation overwhelm sta fiscal policy. It is one thing to force a State to purchase safety equipment f its railroad and another to force it either to spend several million more dolla on hospitals and schools or substantially reduce services in these areas. Th commerce power cases the Court relies on are simply not apropos.

In the area of taxation, on the other hand, the Court has recognized that th constitutional scheme of federalism imposes limits on the power of the Nation Government to tax the States. E.g., New York v. United States, 326 U.S. 57
The Court will not permit the Federal Government to utilize the taxing powe

U. S. 294, 299-300. The immense scope of this constitutional power is demo strated by the Court's approval in this case of regulation on the basis of th "enterprise concept"--which is entirely proper when the regulated "businesses are not essential functions being carried on by the States.

Yet state government itself is an "enterprise" with a very substantial effe on interstate commerce, for the States spend billions of dollars each year on programs that purchase goods from interstate commerce, hire employees who labor strife could disrupt interstate commerce, and act on such commerce in countless subtle ways. If constitutional principles of federalism raise no "limi to the commerce power where regulation of state activities are concerned, can Congress compel the States to build superhighways crisscrossing their territo in order to accommodate interstate vehicles, to provide inns and eating place for interstate travelers, to quadruple their police forces in order to prevent commerce-crippling riots, etc? Could the Congress virtually draw up each State budget to avoid "disruptive effect[s] . . . on commercial intercourse."? Heart Motel v. United States, 379 U.S. 241, 257.

If all this can be done, then the National Government could devour the esse tials of state sovereignty, though that sovereignty is attested by the Tenth Amendment. The principles which should guide us in this case are set forth in the several opinions in New York v. United States, supra. As Mr. Chief Justic Stone said there, the National Government may not "interfere unduly with the State's performance of its sovereign functions of government." 326 U.S., at 58

Whether, in a given case, a particular commerce power regulation by Congres of state activity is permissible depends on the facts. The Court must draw the "constitutional line between the State as government and the State as trader."

I would reverse the judgment below.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order f
the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Ohio suc time as he may require.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I associate myself with the remarks of th distinguished Senator from New Jersey. I feel very strongly that there is another issue involved that he touched upon, one that, it seem to me, is more important to this amendment, perhaps, than perhaps other issue that is raised, and that is the exemplary nature of the dment. In other words, how can we expect patterns of discrimina- in private employment to be changed to promote full and equal oyment of all Americans if Government itself does not set an ple in this regard. It seems clear to me that that example should be n fact, I feel very strongly that if any truly effective progress be made in this area, it will be made more as a matter of volition, as a matter of example, than by means of compulsion, even gh compulsion, or at least legal endorsement of the principle, be necessary to effect progress.

hat I should like to mention particularly in this regard is that in ommittee, with regard to the employing of personnel by State ocal governments, there were a good many comments and a great of discussion as to whether or not constitutional problems that occur from the Federal Government's attempting to regulate and local governments might be serious and might result in vindictive aspects in the bill itself.

the Senator from New Jersey has stated, there are already holdings on this subject. However, we went further than that in scussions.

Senator from Missouri offered an amendment, and I and other bers of the committee on the minority side, as well, questioned the mies under which the Federal Commission might issue orders to te or a local government. We felt that in order to avoid any prob- n that respect, we should establish separate procedures, and this is ated in the language of the report, page 25, from which I should read:

enforcement scheme provides the necessary power to achieve results with- needless friction that might be created by a Federal executive agency orders to sovereign States and their localities. In short, the committee s that the objective of equal employment opportunity can best be achieved viding this particular means of enforcement where State or local govern- units fail to comply with the law.

required that there be direct access or direct referral to U.S. dis- ourt in these cases, rather than to go through the procedures of ommission.

el that with that practical problem, whether or not it will be a tutional problem, having been resolved, the provisions of the e desirable and necessary and will achieve, in a measure of time, emplary nature of open and equal employment opportunity in and local governments, an opportunity that is so necessary to ccess of this program, overall, and throughout our society.

that reason, I feel I must oppose the amendment offered by the guished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin).

JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

TAFT. I yield.

JAVITS. Mr. President, one thing that interests me greatly, what- ay be our differences with the administration on the question of and desist, is that it is a fact that the President's state of the message says:

o support legislation to strengthen the enforcement powers of the EEOC viding the Commission with authority to seek court enforcement of its ns and by giving it jurisdiction over the hiring practices of State and local ments.

So, I think it is important to point out that the administration itself has this feeling about this particular proposition, and we have findings of fact, which I am sure the Senator from Ohio has discussed, not only of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, but from our own hearing record, as well, which indicate that this remedial power is needed, so far as actual serious discrimination is concerned, which is of a kind inhibited by the Constitution and statute in respect of State and local employment, since we are dealing with an enormous number of employees—10 million. So it is really a very necessary part of the bill.

I am very grateful that we have support of our position by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I thank the Senator from New York and certainly concur in his remarks.

Supplementing those remarks, I might read briefly at this point in the same connection from the summary of the Report of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, on page 2, under:

PATTERNS OF MINORITY GROUP EMPLOYMENT IN STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The basic finding of this study is that State and local government have failed to fulfill their obligation to assure equal job opportunity. In many localities minority group members are denied access to responsible government jobs and often are totally excluded from employment except in the most menial capacities. In many areas of government, minority group members are excluded almost entirely from decisionmaking positions, and, even in those instances where they hold jobs carrying higher status, these jobs usually involve work only with the problems of minority groups and tend to limit contact largely to other minority group members. Examples include managerial and professional positions in human relations commissions or in welfare agencies.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. The Senator from Ohio, as I understand, was a member of the committee which phrased this bill.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ERVIN. The Senator from North Carolina has read the bill very carefully and has found that there is no express limitation whatever on the employees of States and political subdivisions of States that are subjected to the jurisdiction of Federal courts under the bill. Can the Senator from Ohio tell me whether there is any implied limit upon the jurisdiction of Federal courts to ultimately control the employment practices in respect to any State employees or employees of political subdivisions of States?

Mr. TAFT. As far as I know, there is no such limitation. I understand the Senator from North Carolina has an amendment which is pending which would go into the subject further, and I have studied that amendment, and, with certain changes in the amendment, I might well be inclined to go along with the Senator from North Carolina to work out some practical alternatives, but I will not agree to taking out the guts of the particular provision he is attempting to eliminate.

Mr. ERVIN. Is the Senator from North Carolina correct in inferring from the statement just made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio that the bill in its present form would give Federal district courts the ultimate power to compel States and subdivisions of States to yield to high decrees with respect to the employment of persons who exercise the legislative, executive, and judicial powers of the States and political subdivisions of States?

r. TAFT. As to elected officers, we certainly think not, under the stitution of the United States. I think as to elected officers that d not be true. As to any other positions, I believe it would be true.
r. ERVIN. Why would it not be true with respect to elected officers, se elected officers are undoubtedly employees of the States, and d officers of counties are undoubtedly employees of the State he counties?
r. TAFT. The selection process there is by the voters of the State. not believe there is any inference in the legislation proposed h would include elected officers. As I have indicated to the Senator North Carolina, I would be quite willing to go considerably ier and perhaps to cover other personnel as well, and to cover those e top decisionmaking levels in the executive and judicial branch ll.
r. ERVIN. Does the Senator from Ohio take the position that an of the State is not an employee of that State?
. TAFT. No, I do not take that position. I say there is an inference bill that it does not transcend what I think would be the constitu- l limitations involved.
. ERVIN. Is it not a fact that constitutional legislation by Congress sedes the State constitutions and the laws of the States?
. TAFT. It might supersede it if not prescribed in the State con- ion. In this case, I believe the State constitution would be the ng factor that would be involved.
. ERVIN. The U.S. Constitution authorizes the Congress to enact ation in the form in which this bill is at present, giving Federal s the ultimate power to determine the employment practices of s with respect to all State employees and the Governors of the s and the supreme court justices of the States and members of ate legislatures, who are now employees of the States, as I under- the Senator has admitted.
. TAFT. I think the Senator from North Carolina well knows, his tremendous knowledge of the Constitution—and I respect owledge of that document more than almost anyone in this body— he Federal Constitution does guarantee to the States a republi- rm of government—with the little "r"—this, it seems to me, im- g the fact that elected officers can be elected only by the people State involved, under its constitution.
ERVIN. The Constitution of the United States also says that the itution and the acts of Congress enacted pursuant thereto will be preme law of the land, and, as the supreme law of the land, will sede all State constitutions and all State laws. If this were a tutional enactment, then the Federal courts would be given juris- n to control the ultimate decision as to who is to be the Governor tate or the members of the supreme court of the State or the legis- of the State. I think that conclusion is inescapable.
TAFT. With all due respect to the legal ability and experience Senator from North Carolina, I respectfully disagree with that sion. I believe the Federal Constitution would be clear on that. lition, under its interpretation, no court would make a decision nder this bill a Federal commission could require a State to certain individual, because it would deprive that individual of hts and privileges and immunities, as well as that of all citizens.
ERVIN. Perhaps the Senator from Ohio will agree with the Senator from North Carolina on one thing: That if the Federal Government is to take the jurisdiction of exercising the ultimate power to determine who the officers and employees of the States are to be, the old statement of Chief Justice Salmon Chase, in Texas against White, that the Constitution and all its provisions look at an indestructible Union composed of indestructible States, has ceased to have validity. Is that not correct?

Mr. TAFT. I would not say that. I think the Senator from North Carolina may not have been on the floor when I quoted from a section of the committee report earlier, but there is another section to which I particularly call his attention. I think the question of legislative intent of the committee would control in any event, but I call the Senator's attention to page 11 of the committee report in which it states:

> A question as raised in the Committee concerning the application of Title VII in the case of a Governor whose cabinet appointees and close personal aides are drawn from one political party. The Committee's intention is that nothing in this bill should be interpreted to prohibit such appointments unless they are based on discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex or national origin. This intention is reflected in sections 703(h) and 706(w) of the law.

While it goes to the State elective office, I think it does infer that when we are talking about people appointed as personal aides of those individuals, it certainly was not intended to cover the officers themselves.

Mr. ERVIN. Unfortunately, however there is nothing to that effect in the bill, and where there is a conflict between a piece of legislation and a committee report, the piece of legislation controls and the committee report's effect becomes null and void.

Mr. TAFT. Well, of course, I am not saying, and the Senator I am sure will recognize that I am not saying, that the language of the bill in any way is in conflict with the committee report. In fact, I think quite the contrary is true. I think that the bill, within the Constitution, makes it perfectly clear, although there is no specific language to that effect, as to whether there is any intent to cover them, that there is in fact no intent to cover elected officials.

Mr. ERVIN. The bill in its amended form says that political subdivisions and States are employers, and then it says that an employee is anyone who is employed by an employer. The Senator from Ohio admits that the Governor of a State is employed by the State, and that the assistants to the Governor are employed by the State, and they are clearly covered by the provisions of the bill, and cannot be excluded from the provisions of the bill by any notions which may have been expressed by a committee member in the committee report.

Mr. TAFT. Well, I suspect that discussion of the subject has been pretty well extended. I cannot agree with the Senator's interpretation of the Constitution. I think it is a point which we ought to discuss when we get to a later amendment. I may not agree with the Senator on the exact language of that amendment, but if he would like to offer an amendment to make the language of the bill consistent with the committee report, I would be happy to go along with him to achieve that purpose.

Mr. ERVIN. The committee report says, in effect, that we do not intend to cover members of a Governor's cabinet who are appointed on the basis of politics. I have difficulty knowing just exactly what man in a State is appointed on the basis of politics. I do not take too much ation out of the reference of the Senator from Ohio to the clause Constitution which guarantees to every State a republican form ernment. My Constitution says that all powers not granted by nstitution to the Federal Government are reserved to the States, he people.

TAFT. Well, of course, the powers——

ERVIN. Perhaps that no longer means anything.

TAFT (continuing). The powers intended to be exercised are y exercised, as a matter of fact, I think, under the Equal Ement Opportunity Act. We have already resolved that question: urts have resolved and are resolving the question as to whether ower is exercised in accordance with the Federal Constitution.
question is not fully resolved, the remedy lies in the courts.

ERVIN. I suppose that logically we might just as well repose all wers with the Federal Government.
o the Senator's reference about the Constitution guaranteeing State a republican form of government, having lived in a which has long had a democratic form of government, I have ty understanding what such a constitutional provision guarana republican form of government would mean.

TAFT. I believe the Supreme Court would be glad to help the r out, if we pass this provision.

ERVIN. I have read the previous decisions on this point, and they ft me in a state of total unenlightenment.

TAFT. I thank the Senator from North Carolina for his remarks.

STENNIS. Mr. President, will the manager of the bill yield me minutes? I wish to speak in favor of the amendment.

WILLIAMS. Yes, Mr. President, under the situation existing,
e opponents have no time remaining, and since we do have time, appy to yield 3 or 4 minutes to the Senator from Mississippi.

STENNIS. Mr. President, I hope that this amendment can be d by a majority vote of this body. Otherwise we are going to ll the counties in this Nation, large and small, all the villages wns large and small, the cities large and small, and the States, e drainage districts and the little township governments that ist in some places, the school districts, and every other subdiviour various States, subject to the control and the regulations bill.

ke my remarks on this basis, Mr. President. I am ashamed to it, but as I see things, the quality of work that is being per-by a great many people, a great many employees today, is not up to the standards that it did a few years ago. I think pride in s either deteriorating or totally lacking. We do not have the f responsibility—I am not trying to paint a bad picture, but as and feel it, there is not that sense of responsibility in the minds itudes of a great number of employees, public and private, that eat country used to have. The sense of gratitude as I used to nanifested is lacking now, and this trend is nationwide.
nk one of the reasons for that is that there is so much governegulation and so much direction to employers as to what they uired to do that so many of the employees feel so independent, y, that they are lacking in gratitude, and they are lacking in se of responsibility that we used to try to instill and could instill ost everyone.

I believe that this measure is just another step in that direction. have been doing recently some reading about the Constitutional Co vention. I do not believe it would be possible to have a provision law that would be further from the intent of all the delegates. Th disagreed on many points, but this bill, in many of its points, is t the reverse of the intent of the original founders, and I do not thi there has been any amendment on this subject that has become a pa of the Constitution since then.

So I believe, if we are going to go on with these trends, if in t little county, the little village or town, if there is nothing left there their officials to do or to control because of being harassed at every t about whom they will employ, we will be unable to get people to s for those offices.

I think they are doing a fairly good job, by and large. They f a responsibility to the electorate. The people have a way of getting of office a man who does not have the right attitude toward hum itarian problems, who does not have some compassion. Such an offi does not last long. It just seems to me we are piling problem on top problem for those little officials and boards. We are taking away t basis for pride and gratitude and the things that go to make qua in our people, and that have been the distinct American strength, my opinion, for almost 200 years.

On top of all this, the people themselves are being taxed to de with taxes, taxes, and more taxes, and they are being regulated at ev turn. I think this bill goes a long way—a long way in accentuat those evils that are causing the deterioration in the attitudes of a gr many of our people; and I lament that.

I am not just bringing up troubles, but we have got to meet th troubles, in my view.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I am happy to yield to the Senator from North Ca lina, if I have time.

Mr. ERVIN. Does not the Senator from Mississippi agree with t Senator from North Carolina that Woodrow Wilson was the mo knowledgeable student of the American Government who has ev occupied the White House?

Mr. STENNIS. I believe the Senator is correct. I noticed his pict in the White House the other day, in the Cabinet Room.

Mr. ERVIN. Woodrow Wilson once stated this:

> Liberty has never come from government. Liberty has always come from t subjects of government. . . . The history of liberty is a history of the limitat of governmental power, not the increase of it.
> When we resist . . . concentration of power, we are resisting the power death, because concentration of power is what always precedes the destru of human liberties.

Does not the Senator from Mississippi agree with the Sena from North Carolina that the passage of this bill would do more to troy human liberties than any piece of legislation that has come bef Congress throughout its history?

Mr. STENNIS. The Senator from North Carolina has stated the well. I agree wholeheartedly. In fact, I shudder to think of this being enacted into a law that is enforceable. With all deference believe it is invalid on its face.

Mr. President, in addition to these matters, people do not kn to turn. People are afraid of their own Government, and they ot committed any crime. There are so many regulations that e afraid to go into a little business, because they hear people aln business talking about the difficulties, the obstacles, and the ions.

nk that we absolutely must make a turn in going in the other on. This entire bill tends to accentuate the very evils to which referred.
s leave people in the little villages, townships, districts, towns, ates, and subdivisions thereof—most of whom are chosen by ple and are up for reelection in a very short time—some reility. Let us leave them some obligation, and let us leave a ntrol of these affairs in the hands of the people. Otherwise, ill be the reason for even registering to vote or to go to the
to get involved in these elections? Let us do all these things by g this amendment.
nk the Senator from New York for the time he has given me.
Williams. Mr. President, I yield whatever time he requires to tor from New York.
Javits. Mr. President, it is very important, as we are about to this amendment, that we recognize that of all the provisions in , this has the most solemn congressional sanction, because it is ot on the commerce clause, which relates to the relationships individuals as well as with governments, but is based on the endment. This is a paramount right which is created for all ans.
4th amendment has been held applicable to just employment ination by the States. Also, in Maryland against Wirtz, in 1968, rt upheld the application of the Fair Labor Standards Act to classes of public employees as a legitimate exercise of congres-egulatory authority under the commerce clause.
President, this is critically important, because of all the people re just referred to as having the right to feel they would be d in terms of any inquisitorial denial of equal opportunity, it y is the employees of units of Government elected by them but ften do not operate in such a way as to serve them—all of ncluding minorities.
is no fanciful thing. This involves an enormous block of em-—10 million—of whom almost 3 million are dealing with educarecently as 1969, this was the subject of special consideration
.S. Commission on Civil Rights, as a factfinder, which held tates, themselves, have recognized this; and 33 of the 34 States ave fair employment practices statutes have made those applicable to State and local employees; and indeed they must, ost common and obvious equity.

Constitution is imperative not only in respect of employment in respect of all other matters dealing with the equal proteche laws by all citizens of States and their political subdivisions. reme Court has reinforced this directive in a whole host of ne could go through a list of citations that would take 3 days, cases in which the 14th amendment has been applied to the relationships between the citizen and his State. What more sacred more important relationship is there in terms of the life of the dividual than the extent to which he shall have a fair and even bre in respect of employment?

Not only is this applicable to minorities; it is also applicable on ground of sex. The committee report reflects that very clearly in te of the differentiation not only between members of minorities others in respect of income, and so forth, and having opportunities the higher levels of employment by States and their local subdivisio but also, it applies to women where, based upon overall figures, obvious that something is not right in terms of the way in which alleged concept of equal opportunity is being administered now.

It is for that reason, Mr. President, that one of the greatest refor in this bill is its applicability to those who are engaged in State local employment—I repeat, 10 million employees, the largest sin block in any one calling of all the employees, as there are now about million in the entire American work force. If anybody, as a matter morality, is entitled to equal employment opportunity, it certainly those people; and the only way they can get it, because the author so far as they are concerned is the State, is at the hands of the Uni States, under the 14th amendment. Section 5 of the 14th amendme giving the power to Congress to enforce by appropriate legislation provisions of this article, it seems to me, makes it mandatory, discretionary, in terms of the highest morality, that we act affir tively on this aspect of this bill.

For all those reasons, with the highest respect for the State and lo governments—because in this case there is no cease-and-desist pow but there is simply the power to litigate—that is the very least we give the individual—the aid of the Attorney General in litigating case through the courts, insofar as the paramount rights under 14th amendment are concerned. I think this is the very least we do. To me, it is one of the most unchallengeable parts of this bill.

For those reasons, I hope very much that the Senate will reject t amendment.

Mr. Cooper. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. Javits. I yield.

Mr. Cooper. I have listened to part of the Senator's argument, I understand its reasoning and rationale. I ask the Senator this qu tion: I think it is evident that there is discrimination in employm by a State when there is a clearcut case of State action. Is it not p sible, following another course and a very simple remedy, for the co to proceed against the State to require compliance with the 14 amendment?

Mr. Javits. That is entirely right, and the thrust of this bill is c sistent with that approach. In other words, we feel that where the dividual who is being denied equal opportunity under the 14th a ment faces the power of his own State, of which he is an employee is entitled to have the aid of the United States in order to assert a which the United States gives him—a constitutional right. The Sen is perfectly right. There is a legal right and a legal remedy, ev that the legal remedy is not affected in the absence of this kind of h ing which this particular statute gives it.

Mr. Cooper. It would seem to me that a court decision against a St requiring the termination if there is discrimination in employm be one of the clearest and simplest remedies which could be used hich could be enforced by the courts.

Javits. When the individual is an employee of a State, he is asked to take on a very tough assignment if he is asked to pro-gainst that State; hence, the high desirability of the interposithe United States on the process to protect these rights.

AMENDMENT NO. 833

Gambrell. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 833.

Presiding Officer (Mr. Weicker). The clerk will report the ment.

assistant legislative clerk read the amendment.

opy of Amendment No. 833 to S. 2515 appears on page 1019.)

Gambrell. Mr. President, the amendment I have offered at this xtends relief to small businesses under the pending bill. That is it provides for an allowance for attorneys' fees for certain bed small businesses against whom enforcement proceedings ught under this act.

ve under discussion with the committee the possibility of a time ion on the amendment. I am agreeable to limiting the time. n as the committee members have conferred, perhaps we could ether on that matter. I would say that if any Senator is inter- n supporting the amendment and would like to speak on it, d appreciate it if he would let me know before a time limitation ed to.

President, the amendment I have offered is a revision of an ment which I filed on January 21. At that time I made a state- n the Record describing the amendment and my reason for g it. I would not at this time repeat at great length my think- that subject as expressed at that time other than to say that mplate as we go into the situation, particularly with respect to nd-desist procedures, that more and more businesses, and par- ly those smaller businesses, will be imposed upon, not in an ef- destroy them but with that effect, by the court proceedings his act.

nk that Senators will recognize that it is not uncommon for all sinesses under Federal investigation under various pieces of ion to find themselves in a position from an economic point v of being unable to compete with the tremendous and over- ng resources available to the Federal Government with such ment procedures.

result, rather than to fight it out and determine the issues of ular investigation or enforcement and to submit proof to make arison—which I think is an un-American type of proceeding— large corporation against whom proceedings are brought, a tion which is able to set aside a certain amount of money for pose of defending itself to wear the Government out, if that ible, in order to fight the impact of the legislation, the im- of ability to defend against the Government means that small businesses are imposed upon in the enforcement of various types Federal legislation.

There is no question that this imbalance of relative strength d nies small businesses a fair opportunity for self-defense against Go ernment regulations.

In specific terms, the amendment provides that a business or union which has 25 or fewer employees or members will get its e tire expense and attorney's fee reimbursed by the Federal Gover ment through the EEOC in any proceeding against it.

Under the act, businesses and unions having from 25 to 100 mem bers or employees would be reimbursed up to $2,500. But in ea case, the Commission or the court before which a proceeding is pen ing would have to determine, before the amount could be paid, th the defenses made by small businesses were put on for purposes i consistent with the purposes of the act itself. That is to say, the cou or the EEOC would have an opportunity to determine whether t union or the small business was defending itself in bad faith. If s the payment of fees and expenses could be denied.

The amendment also provides that this compensation would ha to be paid prior to any enforcement proceedings being brought agai the small business or the small union. In other words, after the i vestigation, or after the Commission proceedings, the Commissi would determine the amount of award of a fee, and that fee wou have to be paid in cash before the Commission could go to court to g a restraining order.

It seems to me that this is only fair, in order to give small bus ness or small unions an opportunity to say, "Well, up to at least $2,5 or $25,000, I can fight the matter equally with the Federal Gover ment. I am the first, the fourth, the seventh, the 10th, or the 10 person being proceeded against under the act. I have some genui questions of fact or question of law that I want to litigate. I have competent attorney who advises me that I am not obligated to d what the Government says I am supposed to do, and I should ha to have that question determined.

Of course, I would prefer to have the case determined in court, b under the law I have got to go through the Commission. In any eve I do have an opportunity, within those limits, to defend myself in go faith against the overwhelming economic power at the command of th Federal Government.

Mr. President, the Civil Rights and Equal Employment Opportuni Acts themselves, which are being amended under the pending legisl tion, already provide discretionary authority for the Commission t pay costs and attorney fees to a prevailing party in such a case. In oth words, if I am proceeded against, and I win, the Commission can sa "We are sorry about the harassment we have caused, and we will p your costs and attorney fees."

We make this change or this addition: We leave the amendme without change except that we provide for discretionary authority the c— of the prevailing party. We say that any respondent—that a labor union or an employer—who qualifies as a small business or small union can be compensated for his expenses, or expenses and fe even if he loses or even if he is found at fault, so long as it is not de ied that he conducted his defense in a manner inconsistent with the ievement of the purposes of the act.

)ur thought in offering the amendment is simple. We feel that if a all business or a small union in good faith wishes to test some of the stions that are raised, it should have a right to do so without bank- ting itself. It should not have to depend upon its ultimately prevail-, because it could be wrong in good faith about the law, or it could vrong in good faith about the facts. It seems to me that certainly in early stages of enforcement under the act these questions should be ject to exploration by small businesses in the same manner as they uld be by large businesses.

t has been demonstrated time and again that what we fear will come pass. I should like to give some examples of the type of thing that erns me.

think the Senate is aware that northwest Georgia is the tufted pet capital of the world. More tufted carpet is manufactured in that than in any other single area of the world. In the fall of last year, ond march through Georgia took place—in this case, not by Gen- Sherman, but by the Federal Trade Commission, under the Flam- le Fabrics Act. Virtually all of the manufacturers in this fine istry undertook to comply with the standards applied by the Fed- Trade Commission, under this act, for reducing the flammability extile materials. The smaller manufacturers had a little more trou- complying with the standards than the larger ones. All of a sudden, Federal Trade Commission announced that it was going to initiate rcement proceedings and in that connection were going to require e who had not complied to invite their customers to return their peting in the manner we are all familiar with in connection with utomobile industry.

e immediately began to receive calls of concern, stating, "Well, are trying our best to comply with this and we would like to go ugh this procedure, but if we make a public announcement that or part of our carpet does not comply, we might as well go into kruptcy, because we would not be able to sell the carpet while it is er this shadow."

here was a lot of going back and forth and filling and reevaluat- with the Trade Commission. We finally developed a concept from Commission: It felt they could not give any exception to smaller nesses because it would interrupt the consistency of their law en- ement procedures. They say they have to apply the uniform, regu- standards to small businesses that they apply to large businesses. if it bankrupts a few along the way, that is their problem, and ours.

would not charge the Trade Commission people in that instance undertaking to act unfairly or insensitively. They thought it was istent with good enforcement practices that they should apply the standards to everyone. But it seems to me—and I think it is ous—that small businesses cannot meet the changing standards of ernment regulation as quickly and as completely and to the satis- ion of the regulatory authorities as large businesses can, and I k it is very important that the law make a distinction between e and small businesses if the purpose is—and in fact I think the purpose and intent of our laws relating to small businesses is—to make such a distinction.

In this connection, I should like to bring to the Senator's attention some comments of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Bible), as reported in the hearings before the Subcommittee on Small Business of the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs on April 21, 1971. The Senator from Nevada said:

Small businesses, which constitute 95 percent of every line of commerce, have played an indispensable part in the growth of the country. As we come further into the period of multiplying environmental and consumer concerns, however, it is natural that the role of small business would require some redefinition at this point, and continuing evaluation in the future.

I shall not read the quotation in its entirety at this point, but I ask unanimous consent that the statement, which appears on page 38 of the report, be incorporated at this point in the Record.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[Reprinted from the Congressional Record, Dec. 17, 1970]

THE 91ST CONGRESS ACTION GIVES HISTORIC RECOGNITION TO SMALL BUSINESS IN ENVIRONMENTAL AND CONSUMERS ERA

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee, it is gratifying to be able to report that the 91st Congress has distinguished itself by granting what I feel should be considered an historic recognition of the role of small business in this era of increasing environmental and consumer concerns.

Small businesses, which constitute 95 percent of every line of commerce, have played an indispensable part in the growth of the country. As we come further into the period of multiplying environmental and consumer concerns, however, it is natural that the role of small business would require some redefinition at this point, and continuing evaluation in the future.

Those who work with small business are aware of its valuable place in the new economic circle if we want to make our daily life more livable and pleasant. We know that small businesses make merchandise and amenities widely and conveniently available in every part of our cities and small towns. We have seen that they can combat inflation by competing to keep prices lower and quality higher. They give services which tend to be more personal and reliable; they maintain community control and local flavor and variety in our commercial life. New and small firms are a natural outlet for young people and the energetic and imaginative of all ages with better ideas. In short, we need more and stronger small businesses to improve the quality of life in America.

However, the long list of worthy consumer, health, safety, pollution, and sanitary standards which Congress has placed on the statute books during the past 5 years has had the unintended and unfortunate side effect of imperiling the very existence of entire segments of the small business community.

Deadline dates were imposed, and Government administrators were given the power to permanently shut down noncomplying firms without compensation. As a result literally thousands of firms—about 7,000 in the meat packing industry alone—in the small business community felt threatened, and actually were threatened, at many points by our citizens who sincerely wished to upgrade our environment through the avenue of legislating higher environmental and consumer standards.

Accordingly these two groups appeared to be in direct conflict. This situation was aggravated when businessmen setting out to comply with the new standards had to face high interest rates and tight money at their banks, coupled with a shortage of Small Business Administration loans. As compliance deadlines approached inexorably interest rates touched peaks not seen since the Civil War. Small firms found the required new plants and equipment were virtually unavailable in many parts of the country. As firms struggle under these conditions, we found an increasing atmosphere of desperation among small business.

SACRIFICE OF SMALL BUSINESS WOULD BE A TRAGEDY

was my feeling that it would be a national tragedy if the country's obvious re to upgrade our technical standards greatly diminished the quality of our nomy and commerce, and eventually the quality of daily life for all of us. It ned to me a manifest injustice for the Federal Government to be closing down hout legal recourse, thousands of small businesses which were making every sonable effort to comply with the laws.

hus, during the 90th Congress—in May 1968—I submitted a resolution—ate Resolution 209—asking the Small Business Administration to study the act of the new laws, as exemplified by the Wholesome Meat Act, on small iness. Of course, the new meat standards were having a direct impact in my State of Nevada and other neighboring Western States. Then, on April 1, 9, I was joined by the ditsinguished chairman of the Senate Banking and rency Committee (Mr. Sparkman) and 11 other Senators from every part of country in introducing a bill which would provide emergency loan assistance ugh the disaster loan program of the SBA. This bill, S. 1750, was designed to w the small business community to adjust to the environmental and con-er era; and to continue their record of good service to their owners and em-ees, their customers and communities.

CONGRESS RISES TO THE QUESTION

r. President, I am proud of the record of the 91st Congress in this regard. ree committees each in both the House and the Senate accorded recognition hese questions. Hearings were held followed by deliberations in executive ion which brought legislation to the floor of both of these great bodies. Then, Senate and the House of Representatives, in Congress assembled, acted sively.

et me cite the milestones in this record:

irst. In December, 1969, Congress approved the Federal Coal Mine Health Safety Act—Public Law 91-173—which provided relief to small mine oper-s required to meet the new requirements imposed by this legislation; econd. In mid-December of this year, the House-Senate Conference considered occupational safety and health bills—H.R. 19200 and S. 2193—and approved nal version which contains similar provisions for relief to small firms in plying with this measure; and hird. On December 14, the Senate completed congressional enactment of . 19888, which extended similar emergency loan eligibility to firms affected he Wholesome Meat Act of 1967, the Wholesome Poultry Products Act of , and the Egg Products Inspection Act of 1970.

y the terms of the legislation we have proposed, the loans will be for the ose of complying with specific standards erected by Federal—or equivalent e—legislation under definite deadlines. The loans will not be subsidized are intended to be at an interest rate equal to the cost of money to the eral Government plus one-fourth of 1 percent.

owever, the significant point is that Congress has acted to resolve the conflict ween consumers, conservationists, and all concerned with our environment on side and businessmen on the other. Congress has accorded this recognition mall business not only in rhetoric, but in a tangible way, by making money lable to ease the dilemma. This series of enactments will, in my opinion, make l businessmen full partners in progress again rather than its imminent ims.

am pleased that our Small Business Committee could play a part in this na by its work in the technical drafting of the language which served as a cle for the wider congressional consideration of the issues, and by providing ground to those committees and Members who were interested. We can rejoice at this kind of creative lawmaking.

believe the committees concerned, the leadership of both the House and the te, and Representative Neal Smith of Iowa, Representative Graham Purcell, Texas, and Representative Tom Foley, of Washington, as House sponsors of agribusiness provision, should be commended by all concerned with these ers.

FOCUS NOW SHIFTS TO IMPLEMENTATION

hese enactments will leave some gaps, which we can attempt to fill in the ng years. We also have still ahead the implementation of these statutes by the SBA and the executive branch of the Government. It will be of prime importance to inform small firms under Federal deadlines of their alternatives, and to have simple and workable procedures so that the needed loan capital can be obtained in time.

I have conferred with the House sponsors of these measures, and we have agreed that the next step to be taken is to ask the Small Business Administration for its views on how these acts should be implemented without delay.

With the background of Senate Resolution 260, the Small Business Administration has been pursuing its study of the financial needs of the meat industry in complying with the deadlines of the Wholesome Meat Act of 1967. We feel that this work should now be well along toward completion. This extensive effort will give the agency an excellent factual basis for prompt recommendations to the Congress and the president to keep small meat, eggs, and poultry businesses, as well as small coal mines and others subject to new occupational safety standards, in the business in cities and towns across the Nation.

I have undertaken to make this request of the Small Business Administration, stating that we wish to be helpful in bringing about prompt and full implementation of these relief laws.

STEP TOWARD COMPASSIONATE GOVERNMENT

In my opinion the precedents have now been established by the three acts which I have cited. Congress has shown it continues to care about small business as a part of our national life in the environmental and consumer era, and that it will back up this concern by appropriate action. By doing so, a giant step has been taken toward keeping our Government and our economy more compassionate and more serviceable for all of our people.

Mr. GAMBRELL. Mr. President, the substance of those remarks had to do with what the Senator from Nevada describes as a long list of worthy consumer health, safety, pollution, and sanitary standards which Congress has placed on the statute books, but wherein the administration of those acts threatens to destroy our small business community.

In particular, in connection with the clean rivers bill, which the Senate passed late last year, an amendment was adopted granting specific relief to smaller businesses to aid them in complying with the provisions of that act.

Here again is an illustration of this Congress' and this Government's intention not to impose on small businesses through the provisions of any regulatory legislation.

One other instance that I would like to call to the Senate's attention in this area is in the Safety Standards Act; and this has been brought to my attention on a number of occasions. It appears that the regulations published by the Department of Labor under and pursuant to the Construction Health and Safety Act has worked a tremendous hardship on those contractors and builders who are engaged in light construction, and particularly in residential construction.

Again, I would assume that this harm is unintentional and unwitting on the part of the Department of Labor; that the Department of Labor has no discriminatory intent against small businesses in this field; but from all the reports received in my office—and I am sure in the offices of other Senators—compliance with these regulations has made the cost of construction of small residences or residences intended for lower income people go up tremendously. These people typically employ what we call casual labor, labor that may be available one day and not the next day, or that may be available two or three days. As one man told me, "I have to buy a $13 helmet and give it to him on Monday, when he may not be back Tuesday, and this total day's wage may not be more than $13."

t is in this type of thing and this type of regulation that Congress, enacting bills, and the regulatory agencies, in carrying out those entions, should be more sensitive to the impact of such legislation on aller businesses.

it has been said that the amendment which I have offered will en- rage litigation, will encourage small businesses in the classification erred to, to be more litigious, and to insist on a lot of unworthy de- ses and that type of thing. We have tried to deal with that possi- ity in the act in a number of ways, although I do not conceive of it a real difficulty, because the average businessman has much more to than to want to go before the EEOC or a Federal court on an unfair ployment practices charge.

But the limits that are built into the amendment, aside from the ctical restrictions on what one will do and what he is to do, are, first. t the provision applies only to small businesses. Someone who em- ys up to 25 gets full compensation. Someone who employs between ind 100 gets only half of his fees and expenses taken care of. So first, pplies only to small businesses. Second, there are limits built into t. A very small one can get only up to $5,000 in total, and the slight- mall one, you might say, gets only $2,500. But there again there are ie practical limits built into it. The man going into litigation can see re is no bonanza of fees and expenses with which to defend himself. nother limitation is that the reasonableness of the charges that he mits must be comparable to those which the EEOC itself has spent prosecuting the charges against him.

So if the EEOC has spent only $1,000 on the claim, he would be en- d to only $2,500 or $5,000.

ly guess is that, in most cases, the EEOC will spend enormously re money in dealing with any of these claims than any private busi- s could possibly afford to do. But there are limits -that he cannot ive more for defending himself as was spent against him.

Finally, a limitation which is most important is that he does not get thing if the manner in which he conducts his defense is found by Commission or the court to be inconsistent with the purposes of the n my judgment, this amendment will encourage settlement rather n discourage it. The reason for that is this: A small business might into litigation thinking in good faith that he has a defense or that has a question of fact that would be adjudicated in his favor, and n ultimately find that he was mistaken.

So, Mr. President, I think the amendment will encourage settlement, ause a man, in considering whether to settle with the EEOC some im that is under adjudication, would be entitled to be compensated e will admit that he was in the wrong.

He might say, "Well, yes, you have proved to my satisfaction that id violate this act, and rather than going to the Commission or be- e the courts and have a knockdown, drag-out lawsuit about the tter, I would like to enter into consent, but I have these expenses l attorneys' fees incurred, and I would like for you to allow them." Under the present law, as I understand it, with a consent of that e, the Commission could not allow expenses and attorneys' fees, ause the respondent in the case would not have been a prevailing ty. This amendment says that so long as he has conducted his defense in a manner consistent with the purposes of the act itself, he can and in fact must be paid his expenses and attorneys' fees.

On this basis, from my own experience in observing the conduct of people in litigation, if a man found out that he was in the wrong, he would hurriedly admit it if he could just make himself whole on the question of his outlays for expenses and attorneys' fees at that point.

The limitations I have refered to would prevent anyone from being what we call, in our State law, "stubbornly litigious," simply fighting and blustering around in order to delay the day of ultimate justice.

Mr. President, I would suggest to the committee that they accept this amendment, because it would in fact encourage the settlement of cases when the respondent has found himself to be in the wrong. Therefore, Mr. President, I submit that the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have reservations about some of the details of the amendment, including the fact that the assessment of fees and costs in certain areas is mandatory and not discretionary, and the fact that they must be paid in advance. These are the two major reservations I have. Yet, a provision for the fair assessment of costs and fees certainly is a principle that I would like to agree to, and it should be included in this legislation.

As it stands, the fact that the fees and the costs are mandatorily assessed, win, lose, or draw, cause me to hesitate.

I should like to state to the Senator from Georgia, who is probably a lot closer to the practice of law than I, that I cannot think of any situation that we can look to for guidance from experience, any other area of law where there is an advance assessment of fees and costs before trial, where it is mandatory and it has no relationship to the outcome of the litigation.

Is there such an area?

Mr. GAMBRELL. First, Mr. President, I should like to clarify the interpretation that the Senator has put on the matter. I think he is mistaken in saying that it is payable in advance. In fact, I know he is, because as I understand the bill, you do not go to court and you do not have any rendering of any kind of decision until after there has been a very thorough investigation or until after the conciliation —

Mr. WILLIAMS. I said in advance of litigation, or I meant to say that.

Mr. GAMBRELL. The Senator did say before going to court, but the way the committee has insisted on doing it, in setting up a procedure, there will be a full scale, knock down and drag out fight before the Commission itself, and the court proceedings will be a simple aftermath, the court has its hands tied, and there will not be much for the law students to make of it. Under the type of cease-and-desist procedure the committee insists on, I think it should be recognized that the whole ball game is there in front of the Commission itself. This amendment is not to provide for payment prior to that, but it is a provision for payment under the order issued by the Commission in the proceeding itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, that is helpful in clarifying it. I had read the amendment, on page 2 at line 24, to me it sounds different than the Senator has just described it. Where the amendment says, "No enforcement procedure under this title may be initiated against a respondent employer or union until costs provided for herein shall have been paid in full," I inter-ted that to mean payment before the hearing on the complaint ore the trial examiner under cease and desist, at the Commission el. Am I in error? Is this to be paid only on appeal, then, to the uit court of appeals?

Mr. Gambrell. Of course, at the time we drew this, we did not know at type of enforcement procedure would be adopted; but the inten-n of that language is to mean an enforcement procedure in court.
n other words, I do not interpret the proceedings before the Com-ssion to be an enforcement procedure, in my own terminology bese it is not self-executing; it has to be taken to court to be made rative. But I would certainly not object to some clarifying change ng made in that language, in order to make it clear that we are king about at the end of the Commission proceedings, rather than he beginning.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The Presiding Officer. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. Mondale. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order
the quorum call be rescinded.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Mondale. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment in form of a substitute to the pending amendment, No. 833, and I ask nimous consent that the reading of the substitute amendment be ensed with.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, hout objection, the substitute amendment will be printed in the ORD.

The substitute amendment is as follows:

lieu of the language in amendment No. 833, insert the following new on:

e) subsection (w) of Section 706 of such Act, as redesignated by this section mended to read as follows:

(w) in any action or proceeding under this title the Commission or Court, he case may be, may allow the prevailing party, other than the Commission he United States, a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs, and the mission and the United States shall be liable for costs the same as a private on. Any prevailing party that is an employer of less than twenty-five em-ees or a labor organization of less than twenty-five members shall, upon ication to the Commission, be indemnified by the United States for the cost is defense against the charge in an amount not to exceed $5,000, including easonable expenses and attorney's fees incurred after the serving of notice im of the charge."

Any prevailing party that is an employer of twenty-five to one hundred em-ees whose average income from such employment is less than $7,500, or a r organization with twenty-five to one hundred members, shall, upon applicato the Commission, be indemnified by the United States for one-half of the of his defense against the charge not to exceed $2,500, including all reason-expenses and attorney's fees incurred after the serving of notice on him of charge. The costs evidenced by repondent's vouchers of his expenses and rney's fees shall be deemed reasonable so long as they are comparable to the l amount of the expenses and attorney's fees incurred by the Commission in stigating and prosecuting the charge. Disallowance of any part of such ret shall be made a part of the Commission's order in such proceedings. Any ed States court before which a proceeding under this title shall be brought upon request by the respondent make the determination provided for in this ection. The Treasurer of the United States shall indemnify the respondent rovided for herein upon certification by the Commission.'"

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a 30-minute limitation on the proposed substitute, to be evenly divided between the proposer of amendment No. 833, the distinguished Senator from Georgia, and the floor manager of the present proposal, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following that, should the substitute not prevail, there be a limitation of 10 minutes on the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Georgia, to be equally divided and controlled by the same parties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, what is the request?

Mr. GAMBRELL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In response to the Senator from New York, as the Chair understands it, a substitute amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia has been sent to the desk by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MONDALE. The Chair is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota requested that there be 30 minutes on the substitute amendment, to be equally divided. Then he made a further request that if the substitute amendment does not prevail, there be 10 minutes, to be equally divided, on the original amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GAMBRELL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like the record to show that I object to the substitute, but I do not object to the time limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands the Senator from Georgia, he has not objected to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GAMBRELL. That is right. He stated it all together, and I want it to be clear that I object to the substitute.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. CRANSTON. I simply want to request the Senator from Minnesota to list my name as a cosponsor of his very fine substitute amendment.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that request be granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

. MONDALE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my sub-e amendment.
e yeas and nays were ordered.
. MONDALE. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes.
e PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized minutes.
. MONDALE. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator Georgia, for which I wish to offer my amendment in the form ubstitute, is designed to preserve a basically valid proposition in mendment—but seeks to substitute language which I think is ial.
underlying law, which is unchanged by the bill, provides that action or proceeding under this title, the court, in its discretion, llow the prevailing party—other than the Commission or the l States—a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the cost; and the ission and the United States shall be liable for the costs the s a private person.
proposed substitute would liberalize that provision in two basic
ts. First, it would add authority to award costs to the prevailing with respect to the cost of a proceeding before the Commission.
nderlying law to which I have referred does not permit the ing of fees with respect to proceedings before the Commission. iberalizes the fee awarding powers in that respect.
nd, it makes awarding of such fees mandatory for small busi-and for unions, when they prevail before the Commission or bee court, rather than leaving it discretionary as it now is.
ould provide that employers having between eight to 25 ems or unions having between eight to 25 members, could receive able attorneys' fees up to $5,000, and large employers and unions, aving employees or union members in a number between 25 and uld receive up to $2,500—if they are the prevailing party. cipally, Mr. President, my objection to the amendment offered Senator from Georgia is that while I think it justifiably recog-he question of costs that may be visited on small businesses or nions, it has built within it an unfortunate dimension—a din allowing Government funds to be used to finance resistance timate cases; under the original amendment, it is not necessary e small business or the union be the prevailing party. Thus, they e a case that is without any foundation and, at Government ex-nd for long periods of time, hold proceedings before the Com-n or hold procedings before the courts and be awarded fees—ter how groundless the case is.
ems to me that this could encourage, at Government expense, ce through the assertion of groundless claims; and it could age litigation in cases that should otherwise be settled. Our ute would bring much needed relief to small business and small in cases where there was some hope that they would be the ing party. It would bring relief to that extent, and also bring or the cost of such proceedings before the Commission as well re the courts.
nk that modification retains the basic validity of the amendffered by the Senator from Georgia without risking, in addie problem to which I have made reference.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yie for one or two questions?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. These questions need to be answered. Does the amen ment take into consideration where the Commission or the Attorn General is not a party to litigation, where it is strictly private litig tion between a complainant and a respondent? Is it then expect that the United States will reimburse the prevailing party if he is small business?

Mr. MONDALE. It is not contemplated that that be the case. If the is some vagueness in the amendment, it should be modified to avo that possibility.

Mr. JAVITS. I think the amendment will have to be clarified if th is the intention of the moving party.

Mr. MONDALE. We can prepare a modification——

Mr. JAVITS. That will have to be submitted by someone as a amendment to the amendment by unanimous consent——

Mr. MONDALE. I realize that; but I do not believe there will be an objection to it.

Mr. JAVITS. We should try, and time may not allow, but we shou try, before we wind this up, to put some estimate on record as to th expected cost. Someone should get in touch with the Commission an get some estimate. After all, this is not an inappreciable sum of mone There are 20,000 complaints before the Commission already, so tha if the cost there would be $5,000 apiece, it could well run into a con siderable sum of money and we should have some idea on record a to how frequently this is likely to occur.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I hate to see my good friend from Ne York grieving over the problem of lack of money. I understand tha we are going to have a national debt limit of some $480 billion, s that we will have plenty of deficit in which to finance anything.

Mr. MONDALE. I think the Senator from North Carolina is correct.

Mr. GUMBRELL. Mr. President, I object to the amendment, becaus it would wholly thwart the purpose of the amendment, which is t offer some relief, some meaningful relief, to small business. I can ap preciate the concern of the Senator from New York over the cost o this to the Government. I think that no one can claim to have expresse any greater concern over the cost of the Government than I hav during the past year. However, I think that as long as we are goin to inquire about what the cost of this is to anybody, we might get th Small Business Administration or even the EEOC, if it has any fee ing for small business, to ascertain the cost of the 20,000 investigator proceedings that the Senator from New York has mentioned to th small businesses around this country, which small businesses hav defended themselves in good faith in these proceedings.

I suggest to the Senate and to the Senator from New York that thi has a devastating impact on small business which we are undertak to relieve. And we are talking about proceedings against someon who has enormous resources.

We are talking about small businesses that are going to be used a games guns to determine the force and effect of this act. There are any questions, as the Senator from Minnesota has indicated, about encouraging groundless defenses. In many cases, as the Senator from nnesota and other lawyers know and clients know, we do not know ther the defenses are groundless or not until they have been sub-ted for adjudication.

The limits that I have mentioned provide that only so much can be into this. And specifically the limit that the respondent should e of conducting his defense in a manner consistent with the pur-of this power will prevent any groundless defenses.
n other words, the Senator from Minnesota said they would be hout any foundation or for a long period of time. Actually his sub-ute would encourage people to prevail in a case rather than pursuan effort to settle. If we hold out that he has a mandatory fee comto him if he wins, and he has a 50-50 chance by either settling or tinuing, he will say, "By golly, I have a 50-50 chance if I get my litigated and win." And even if he has defended himself in good h, even though he would lose, my experience would be that he ld say, "Let's settle this case. I will agree that I have violated the n certain minor particulars. I will have my fees allowed." seems to me the incentive is entirely different from that suggested he Senator from Minnesota. That, in fact, perfectly clearly indi-s the intention of my amendment and the defects of his, referring ne incentive built in under the measure he advocates, whereas the ntive is to try to settle the case and get it out of the way.
o give that discretion to the Commission, as he has indicated, is ply to say that the Commission can use this as bait to get people gree to things that they would not otherwise agree to.
think the Commission already has too much discretion and that should be put into statutory law, because the courts and the legisre ought to tell the people what their rights are and they ought to have to be weighed in the balance on a case-by-case basis to see t today's discretion or today's Commission might say.
or that reason I very strongly oppose the substitute amendment red by the Senator from Minnesota, because it actually runs in the of making any fair provision for small business.
nder the situation suggested, in legal aid cases where we have, er our legal services program, provisions in the Federal law for ng the fees for defendants in Federal courts, if a defendant is d guilty of a bank robbery, the court cannot allow the lawyer any However, if he is found to be innocent, the lawyer will get a big submit that if a man enters a plea of innocent, he is entitled to a defense regardless. And the same principle applies here if the ernment has any commitment at all against the abuse of small ness.

r. President, I hope the substitute amendment is rejected.
r. MONDALE. Mr. President, what is the time situation?
he PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has 7 minutes ining, and the Senator from Georgia has 10 minutes remaining.
r. MONDALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify mendment to add in the second sentence of subsection (w) of my itute amendment, following the word "Any prevailing party" words "in any proceeding brought by or against the Commission e United States under this title," and further to add in the first of the second paragraph of subsection (w) after the words "Any iling party" the words "in such a proceeding."

The modification is designed to deal with a problem which t Sentor from New York brought up; namely, a wholly private proce ing in which the Commission is not involved. I would hope that the would be no objection.

The Presiding Officer. Will the Senator from Minnesota send modification to the desk?

Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment so modified.

Mr. Mondale. Mr. President, I hope that there is no misunderstan ing on the desirability of bringing relief to the small businesses a small unions in legitimate cases where they are the prevailing par
What we have proposed by way of substitute here greatly liberaliz that relief. To the credit of the Senator from Georgia, it was amendment which helped to make the need for such action appare

We do so in two ways.

First, we make fees available on a discretionary basis with respe to proceedings before the Commission, as well as to proceedings befo the court.

Second, we make the provision of such costs mandatory for sma businesses and for small unions when they are prevailing partie these fees would not be discretionary for small unions and for sma businesses.

To go beyond that is to bankroll resistance and to encourge basele litigation. It would put the Government in the business of financi resistance to the very legislative objective we seek to obtain here.

Mr. President, both the Senator from Georgia and I are attorney
We know that one of the sobering realities in the practice of law, a one which prevents many groundless lawsuits from being brought defended, is the practicalities and the legitimacy of the case itself. lawyer is not likely to take a case which has no basis to it simply t resist or to delay or to slow down justice.

Under the principle embodied in the amendment offered by the Sen tor from Georgia, we would be saying, "Never mind how baseless yo law suit is and never mind how discriminatory you have been in yo employment practices, you will get your fees anyway, as long as yo do not act in an unethical fashion, up to $5,500." We say, instead, "I you are the prevailing party, you will be entitled to part or all of th cost of this litigation."

That encourages litigation of responsible lawsuits. But to go beyon that, in my opinion, would be to encourage and to bankroll resistanc to the objectives of this legislation. I, therefore, hope that my amend ment in the nature of a substitute will be adopted.

Mr. Gambrell. Mr. President, if it is appropriate, I should like this time to offer a clarifying amendment to the pending amendmen
No. 833, in accordance with the comments of the Senator from Ne York (Mr. Javits).

The Presiding Officer. The Chair advises the Senator from Georgi that an amendment to the amendment would be in the third degre and would not be in order. It is possible to modify the amendment b unanimous consent.

Mr. Gambrell. Mr. President, if it is in order at this time to clarif the amendment, I ask unanimous consent, in accordance with the co ments of the Senator from New York, to modify the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to ask the Senator from orgia whether his amendment is to the amendment of the Senator m Georgia.

Mr. GAMBRELL. It is to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be in order. The Chair withws his comments as to the proposed amendment being in the third ree.

Mr. GAMBRELL. Mr. President, I will state what the amendments are. The first amendment would be on line 7, page 1, after the word "reondent," insert "in a proceeding brought by Commission or by the ited States under this title."

On page 2, line 4, after the word "respondent," insert "in such ceeding."

On line 24, prior to the words "no enforcement," insert "following inal determination whether respondent engaged in an unlawful ployment practice."

The purpose of the amendments is to make it clear that the fees ld be payable only in the event that the proceeding was brought by Commission or the United States, and also to make it clear that would not be payable until after the Commission had made its rmination in such proceeding.

ask unanimous consent that the modifications be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, it is so ordered.

Will the Senator please send his modifications to the desk?

Mr. GAMBRELL. I send the modifications to the desk. I yield back remainder of my time.

Mr. MONDALE. I yield back the rest of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The yeas nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from as (Mr. Bentsen), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Eagleton), Senator from Alaska (Mr. Gravel), the Senator from Oklahoma . So Mr. Gambrell's amendment, as amended, was agreed to.
Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which e amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 830

Mr. Chiles. Mr. President, I send to the desk a modification of my nendment No. 830 and ask that it be stated.
The Presiding Officer. The amendment as modified will be stated.
The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 59, line 25, following the comma, insert the following: "for the limited rpose of publicizing in the media the Commission and its activities".

Mr. Chiles. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the nendment.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. Chiles. Mr. President, last week, the distinguished Senator om Alabama (Mr. Allen) offered an amendment to section 705, bsection (e), to strike that section, whereby the Commission could, ntrary to present statutes, accept voluntary and uncompensated rvices. That amendment was rejected.
At that time, the distinguished chairman of the committee, the nator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams), made statements in the ecord to the extent that it was necessary or that they felt it was od for the Commission to be able to accept voluntary services solely be able to publicize the work and activities of the Commission. think the example was given that it was valid to have a provision nereby a personality like Bill Cosby could say on television, "If you n't think you have been treated fairly, there is a commission, and u can go to that commission and find out what your rights are."
Mr. President, I am not sure that it is necessary to have any lan-age in the bill, regardless of our present statutes, for any person be able to speak through any of the media to publicize anything it is the law of the United States.
The first amendment of the Constitution and the other provisions ould certainly give to every citizen the right to speak but, at the ne time, I was concerned that the amendment by the Senator from abama did fail, and the language now in the present law certainly sufficiently broad which would lend itself to the Commission, re-rdless of what the present purpose is today, and regardless of what ngress is today. Certainly the language was there, and sufficiently oad, and would allow the Commission to accept any number of lunteers up into the thousands for anyone, regardless of what the otivation and the interest is, to go to the Commission and, the way law is now framed, have the right not only to make findings of t but also to issue cease-and-desist orders of those findings.
If that is not the purpose, and we say it is not, then we should narrow scope of the law. That is what the amendment I have introduced oposes to do. In the language, where we seek to accept voluntary or compensated services, we would strike the express limitation or iting language for the limited purpose of publicizing in the media Commission and its activities. This would allow the Bill Cosby uation—it is allowable anyway—but if we strike the whole thing it is allowable, but certainly allowable under the language and, at the same time, we would narrow it, as I think the Senator from Alabama was attempting to do in his amendment; that is, to clarify that it would not have this open for any group of volunteers which felt it had to or expressed itself as wanting to come in and be clothed with authority to investigate and perhaps to prosecute activities of the Commission when we do not do this anyway in any agency of Government.

I first considered that we bring this to the attention of the Senate by way of drawing up an amendment which would say that any of the volunteers who were so accepted by the Commission would also be entitled to be volunteers with the FBI or the Internal Revenue Service. I think, when we think in those terms, none of us would consider having volunteers for any purpose; and yet the express purpose of this, we are told, is not for that but only to publicize it. If that is so, then I would think this amendment would clarify and narrow it.

I urge adoption of my amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there was an amendment offered to strike from the bill the provisions that permitted acceptance of volunteer services. It was an amendment which did not carry. This provision stayed in. Notwithstanding that vote, there has been some discussion of just what services are contemplated under the provisions in the bill.

As I have listened to the Senator from Florida, it seemed to me that some of the anxieties expressed were expressed in extravagant terms as to what it really meant.

As I debated, in opposition to the original amendment, I indicated that it was the basic purpose of the provisions in the bill to permit the Commission to receive the services of volunteers who wanted to publicize the work of the Commission and what it was all about. I mentioned certain people who do work and are prominent in the media. I recall mentioning particularly Bill Cosby. It may be my impression but the limitations we were contemplating is that this is an amendment that clarifies in bill language the purpose that I thought were the intentions in the bill and, for that reason, it clarifies and pinpoints the activities that can be accepted publicizing in the media the Commission and its activities. It is certainly acceptable to me. The Senator from New York and I have discussed this and he shares my view. It is acceptable to him as well.

The Senator's clarification is in good order.

So Mr. Chiles' amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider th vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 815

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished Senato from Alabama and myself, I call up amendment No. 815 and ask tha it be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 33, strike out everything from the word "or" on line 20 through th word "activities" on line 24, and insert the following in lieu thereof: "or to th employment of any individuals by any educational institutional institution or b any religions corporation, association, or society."

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, for the information o Senators, there will be no more rollcall votes today.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous con sent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 11:30 having arrived, and pur- nt to the unanimous-consent agreement, the remaining time from y until the hour of 12:30 will be equally divided between and con- lled by the manager of the bill, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. lliams) and the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN).

The clerk will report the pending business.

The legislative clerk read the bill by title, as follows:

bill (S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportunities for erican workers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The rk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, acting for the distinguished senior Sen- from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN), I yield myself 6 minutes.

The best way to save the time of the Senate and of the Congress is vote against the cloture motion. If cloture fails today and fails morrow, in all likelihood the proposal will be laid aside, and the ate can go on to more important matters. We have a west coast k strike. We are in the midst of a recession. We are in a period of ation. We are at war. The Secretary of the Treasury has requested increase in the debt limit by $50 billion. Yet we spend the time of Senate on a proposal which is a power grab on the part of the OC, a proposal that would seek to make of this Federal Bureau or ney a court, a jury, a judge, and a prosecutor in investigating and dicating complaints of unfair labor practices.

Mr. President, if cloture should prevail, the proponents of this sure can write any bill that they see fit to write. Out the window be any chance of knocking out the cease-and-desist provision, though the House used the court enforcement procedure. The House bill, which we sought to substitute on the floor for the comm tee amendment, provides for enforcement of such complaints throu court procedures. Forty-six Members of the Senate, out of 94 Senato voting, voted for the same plan. More than 48 percent of the Senato voted for the court procedure rather than for making this Comm sion a court and jury and prosecutor.

It is not often that a Senator or a Member of the House has opportunity to cast a vote which is so important as this cloture vo It will be striking a blow against expanding, mushrooming Feder bureaucracy. It will be striking a blow against further control of e everyday lives by Federal bureaus and agencies here in Washingto It is a most important vote, and if the 46 Members of the Senate wh voted to adopt the amendment substituting court procedure for Com mission determination will stand together on this vote and on th succeeding vote, we will be able to kill this bill.

Mr. President, some suggestion has been made that possibly a retur will be made to the House plan. If the Senate votes for cloture, ther will be no chance of returning to the House plan of court action, cou determination, court adjudication, court enforcement, because all bar will be down. There is a majority in the Senate that wants cease-and desist powers for the EEOC, but 46 Members of the Senate do no along with a majority of the Members of the House.

So, Mr. President, if cloture is invoked, if the debate does end, wha then will be the procedure? In time, the bill will be passed in the Sen ate, with cease-and-desist powers for the EEOC. It will go to th House, where there will be additional debate. On passage of the bil in the House, it will return to the Senate, where further lengthy debat can be held on whether to concur in the House amendment or sen the bill to conference. After that issue has been debated for days o end, then, in all likelihood, the bill would go to conference, and then on the question of agreeing to the conference report on its submissio to the two bodies, there again there will be an opportunity to debat this issue.

On the other hand, if 34 Members of the Senate will vote agains the cloture motion today and tomorrow, the chances are that will b the end of this pernicious bill, which is the biggest grab for powe that has been asserted by those who wish to lodge all power in Gov ernment, all power over our everyday lives in bureaus and agencie here in Washington.

I urge my fellow Senators to vote "no" on the cloture motion.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILES). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, the Senate is now in its 10th day of debate on S. 15, a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for merican workers. For a good deal of the time we have been engaged extremely productive and valuable analysis of the most appropriate d efficient way to provide the Equal Employment Opportunity Com- ssion with enforcement powers.

To date the Senate has given this legislation extremely careful and ose consideration. In doing so it has achieved a number of worthy jectives:

First. It has required the exhaustion of administrative remedies ior to contract cancellations;

Second. It has required that Commission findings be based on a ponderance of the evidence;

Third. It has created an independent General Counsel;

Fourth. It has provided financial assistance to small business and all union defendants; and Fifth. It has limited the use of voluntary services to publicity in the dia.

Over and above these achievements the committee itself in reporting bill took into account the views of a majority of the Members of s body by:

First. Providing for a special Attorney General procedure for the orcement of the law against State and local governments;

Second. Retaining the functions of the Civil Service Commission Federal employment while authorizing individual lawsuits in the leral courts;

Third. Permitting a phase-in period for the transfer of "pattern l practice" jurisdiction from the Department of Justice to the OC; and Fourth. Eliminating the provision authorizing a Commissioner's rge.

We have already had 18 rollcall votes on this legislation. We have n had substantial debate on two significant amendments which have yet been voted on: the coverage of educational and religious insti- ons and the coverage of employers and unions with between eight 25 employees and members.

Mr. President, the ultimate goal of this debate has been to increase employment opportunities of our minorities and women by pro- ing the necessary machinery to bring an end to job discrimination e and for all in our country.

very much respect the views that have been expressed in this mber about the merits of court enforcement as opposed to the inistrative cease and desist hearing approach together with court ew.

seems to me that no useful purpose is served by continuing the og on the subject of enforcement powers or at least on the mecha n of the enforcement powers any longer. The Senate has worked vill and it is my sincere desire to respectfully suggest that we get with the legislative process, mindful particularly of the very heavy burdensome load of legislation which awaits us at the end of this ate.

There should be no doubt that the Senate has decided the issue an that the Members of this body have had ample opportunity to registe their views.

Two years ago, after debate, the Senate voted for cease and desis This year the Senate has already had six rollcall votes on that or aspect of this legislation.

I recognize that the Senate was closely divided on which procedur would be more effective. But, under our principles of Government, th Senate has decided. And now again I respectfully suggest that w should move on.

However, Mr. President, the debate in the past few days has take on a very ominous and undesirable tone to my way of thinking. I a afraid that many of the arguments that have been presented befor this Chamber have been an attempt to revise the past in all its sad ness and wastefulness of human resources.

Mr. President, those days are gone. That era is passed. The questio of whether or not employment discrimination is unconstitutional an should be proscribed by statute has long since been passed. It has bee put to rest. It should stay at rest. For the good of the country, it shoul not be resurrected.

We are no longer debating whether or not employment discrimina tion is evil. We are no longer debating whether employment discrimi nation should be outlawed. The simple truth is that this debate for years has been limited to the scope and kind of enforcement power that the Government of the United States should have to enable mi norities and women to secure their rights to equal job opportunities.

Mr. President, the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare wa unanimous in its views that an enforcement mechanism was needed The President of the United States, in his state of the Union message delivered only a little over a week ago, agreed that an enforcement mechanism is needed.

Mr. President, I think it is time to get on and pass this bill and provide that enforcement mechanism.

I recognize and appreciate that my distinguished colleague from North Carolina agreed to a time limitation on one of his major issues the coverage of State and local governments. Time limitations have also been agreed upon on several other votes.

However, I find it ominous to note that 47 amendments have now been offered most of which are duplicative in nature. We have even had an amendment offered which is almost identical, and I repeat that, almost identical, to one which the Senate voted to table by a rollcall vote of 45 to 32.

Even more important, this debate has really lasted almost 9 years now. The original Kennedy administration bill provided this method of enforcement. It was compromised out of the bill, because of extended debate or a filibuster. And here we are today still debating the issue.

Mr. President, the time has long since passed for debate. We have had ample debate. It is time for the Senate to act.

I certainly urge the Senate to bring to a close the debate and vote for the cloture motion now pending before the Senate on S. 2515.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield 6 minutes to the distinguished Senator from California (Mr. Cranston).

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Chiles). The Senator from California recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. Cranston. Mr. President, I rise to speak very briefly on the ture motion on S. 2515, the pending bill to strengthen the Equal ployment Opportunity Commission, a bill which I enthusiastically ponsor.

This cloture motion has been filed by the distinguished chairman of Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, the Senator from New sey (Mr. Williams), and the distinguished ranking minority mem- of the committee, the Senator from New York (Mr. Javits).

I have the greatest respect for both these gentlemen, and share their otion to the cause of equal employment opportunity and other civil hts.

Nonetheless, I intend to vote against this cloture motion.

n doing so, I remain fully committed to the purpose and provisions he bill reported by the committee along with the few excellent r amendments thus far adopted.

continue to disagree most strongly with the several amendments ch have been offered and have been defeated by the Senate. These ndments would, in my view, destroy the essential thrust of this will vote against cloture at this time, because I do not believe sub- ntive disagreement with those attempting to prolong debate, in er to present fully and forcefully to the Senate and to the public at ge the basis for their opposition to a pending measure, provides an quate justification for shutting off debate at such a relatively early ge in the discussion.

he opponents of the bill are entitled to be heard in the Senate and in country setting forth their position for longer than the scant 2 ks which have elapsed in the debate thus far.

he points they have been making and the amendments they have n offering have been reasonable ones from their points of view. I eve it would be unfair of the majority to silence dialog on such a or piece of legislation at this point in the deliberations and in the rts of those who wish to make their case further.

point out also that one of the substitute and modifying amend- ts which has been offered has improved and strengthened the bill. s occurred in one case yesterday in the substitute amendment of- d by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Mondale) ch I cosponsored.

r. President, the last cloture vote before this body occurred ap- ximatley 6 weeks ago on another matter with strong civil rights lications. This was the pending nomination of now Mr. Justice lim H. Rehnquist to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. pposed cloture at that point, because I felt those of us in a mi- ty—were entitled to continue our attempt to explore as fully ossible and dramatize both to the Senate and the Nation our very ly felt concerns. I was grateful at the early point of debate that Senate chose not to invoke cloture against those of us so deeply erned about human rights and liberties.

closing, Mr. President, I wish to note what a very difficult this is for me today. I recognize how strongly the proponents of bill feel about the need to move ahead with it promptly in the Senate. I share this concern. I wish to make clear that at such ti as I am convinced that failure to invoke cloture on this bill v threaten timely Senate action—that is, lead to a decision to lay bill aside and proceed to other business—I will then vote for clotu

I just do not believe we are at that point today.

I urge my colleagues not to shut off debate today. In the name those same rights and liberties, despite the great importance of pending measure and the need for congressional action soon.

Mr. President, I yield back whatever time remains that was al cated to me.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yi me 5 minutes?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am happy to yield to the Senator from New Yo such time as he may need within our time limit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recogniz for 5 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, as the Senator from California has pro erly stated, the cloture motion is essentially presented by those w have managed the bill on the floor, the Senator from New Jersey a myself.

As we approach the first vote on cloture, we very well know th there will probably be another one and perhaps another one after th

We owe the Senate an accounting of why we did what we did, a why we feel that we are entitled to the support of at least a majority Senators for our efforts.

As debates go, this debate has gone on about its normal length time—about 10 working days.

Mr. President, with unanimous-consent agreements, which gene ally ensue about this time, we could have finished the bill in 10 or working days which, considering the timing of the bill, in the ear days of the session, is all right. The difficulty is that we have had very clear statement by the opponents of the measure—they have much right to oppose as we have to propose, and I make no mor judgments whatever—that they will use the power they have und the rule. Again, I do not say that invidiously. The Senator from Cal fornia has just said that he feels that that is a beneficient rule a is a good thing. However, they feel that they should make use of th power in order to reverse a decision taken by five votes by a majorit of the Senate. And they have told us, "Gentlemen, if we can hel it, there will be no bill if you do not accept basically the propositio which was defeated."

Mr. President, it seems to me that this poses the issue very sharpl to us. Is the Senate of the United States to be run according to th dictates of the Constitution, that a majority shall determine in th final analysis what shall or shall not be done, or is the Senate of th United States to be run by former Senator Calhoun's rule of a co current majority, which means that we cannot do anything arou here unless two thirds of the Members present and voting agree to i

Mr. President, that is because of rule XXII and not because of t Constitution. It has always been argued, when we have argued wit respect to the provisions of rule XXII, that if the Senate really wan to work its will, it can do so. We will see about that.

Mr. President, that just is not so unless there are enough Senators o feel that should not be the rule, notwithstanding their votes on a rticular measure. Obviously unless some of the proponents of the minick amendment vote for cloture, there will be no EEOC bill cept on the terms of those who refuse to agree with the majority.

Mr. President, this is the issue, starkly and clearly stated. Can a nority successfully frustrate the majority, notwithstanding the t that the majority after a decent length of debate calls for the ocation of rule XXII? The answer is decidedly yes, unless Sena- s will rise above their opinions on a particular measure to the hest degree and see that the Senate is permitted to function accord- to its constitutional duty, not just its right.

We have already voted on a number of amendments. I, myself, sup- ted the decision to strike out the transfer of the Office of Federal ntract Compliance which was an issue that was debated very much. We have supported the reasonable disposition of the volunteers stion. We have supported the reasonable disposition of the affirma- action plan and the small business indemnification question.

Mr. President, there are a few other amendments which will come which we will do our utmost to deal with reasonably according to best sensibilities of the Senate. They can be disposed of within 48 rs, as can be seen from an inspection of the amendment.

Mr. President, as we come to the first vote on cloture, the issue is r. Does the Senate function by the concurrent majority? The ate cannot pass anything unless two-thirds are willing. Are there enough Senators who will rise above their personal feelings on easure and subserve the total national interest so that the Senate not be immobilized by the minority.

That is the issue, Mr. President. We will begin to decide it and the ntry will have a very important influence on that decision, be- se when at the beginning of every session, as I have noted now e 1957 when I first came here, a concurrent periodic effort is made mend rule XXII, that is not the time to argue. That is not the e to state the issues. That is not the time when the case is made or ade.

he case is made or unmade in every session as we approach an e on which opinions are deeply held or felt by an enormous ma- ty of the population. And if they see themselves frustrated by application of a Senate rule which can be undone by a majority he Senators in the beginning of the Congress, it is there that the ulative wrath of the country can manifest its will, and not until he case is not made, Mr. President, in the beginning of these suc- ive Congresses. The case is made now, in each February, March, il, and May when the majority feels it is frustrated and not able erform its constitutional duty because of the presence of this rule our books, a rule which has nothing to do with complete and honest ate.

hat has not been denied in this Chamber. There is no gag rule . But it has a lot to do with the feelings of the minority that it can trate the majority. That is built into the rule. That is not the way ght to be.

I hope very much that the Senate, in the absence of a change the rule—which it cannot make now—will exercise its duty, patriotis and fidelity to its own responsibility so that the hands of the major may be unmanacled and there can be given a decent opportunity debate of amendments with complete reasonableness and freedom that the Senate may be in a position to act.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I hope that Senators who h any doubt in their minds, like those voiced by the Senator from Ca fornia, will vote for cloture this first time out. The case has got to built. And we cannot build it without the necessary support.

Mr. President, I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, how much time do I have remainin

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has 9 minut remaining.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recogniz for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not see the need for all of the important and basic changes in the law the EEOC has been operati under for some 7 years. It has not had the powers that the proponen seek to give to it. It has not had the power to deal with employe of as few as eight people.

The distinguished Senator from New Jersey ticked off a number amendments that have been adopted, making major changes. But t amendments that have been adopted do not affect in any way the pow grab of this bill that would make it applicable to employers of as fe as eight people.

They do not eliminate the expansion of power of the EEOC ov every State, county, and city employee or every agency of every Stat county, and city.

They have not amended out the grab for power by which EEOC seeking to assert its will over every single educational institution i this country.

They have not amended out of the bill the provision transferrin from the Justice Department over to this department the authority t bring pattern and practice suits against employers throughout th country.

Mr. President, this is just a case of the EEOC asking for too muc They ask for all of these changes and all of these expansions of the authority. Then, how do they want to enforce the substantive and basi rights of individuals? Are they satisfied to go into court?

What we are asking is that these complaints, these charges, be trie be adjudicated, be determined, and be enforced through a Federal dis trict court rather than to have them determined by the Commissio which will continue to serve as a prosecutor, as a judge, and as a jury

Mr. President, the EEOC seeks power over State, county, and cit employees. It seeks power over educational institutions. It seeks powe over employers of as few as three persons. But that does not satisf their reaching out for more power. If they do not get all those power what will they do? They will do as they have done for the last 7 years If the bill shall be defeated, no power will have been taken away fro the Commission.

We can vote in favor of the passage of the House bill. The House bill s passed and is on the Senate calendar. It calls for court enforce-nt of complaints of unfair labor practices. I dare say that if the l allowed court enforcement, court adjudication of these complaints, re would be no difficulty in passing the bill. But the Senate propo-nts of the bill are insisting on setting up a tremendous bureaucracy ving almost unlimited power.

t occurs to the junior Senator from Alabama that, truly, as the tinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) has said, this is, effect, a vote up or down on the effort to provide court adjudication her than determination by the Commission. Senators who want rt enforcement of the basic substantive rights should vote against ure.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. Allen. I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. President, the best way to dispose of the bill is to vote against ure today and to vote against cloture tomorrow. That will have the ate, in all likelihood, many days of debate upon this issue.

am hopeful that the proponents of the bill will come to the thought idea of providing for court enforcement of these basic rights. But e invoke cloture, that wish and that hope will have gone forever, use a majority will then be able to write the bill in any terms it so res.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The Presiding Officer. Who yields time?

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, as time runs out and we approach the
, the rhetoric of the Senator from Alabama suggests some heavy-ded and unconscionable grabbing for power by the Equal Employ-t Opportunity Commission. Nothing could be clearer than the his-with respect to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission whether it should have effective enforcement powers.

his is no 12th-hour grab by a hungry agency. Sixty-three Senators are Members of the Senate today were here on the day in 1964 when ivil rights bill was passed, when Title VII was included, and when Commission was created. Sixty-three of us went through that long od after the day when the messages came from President Kennedy ng for equal employment and for an effective commission having e-and-desist powers. We went through the debate in 1964. We went ugh what was known to be a filibuster—584 hours of debate.

tting in the chair across the aisle to my right, the minority leader, rett Dirksen, finally said, "If you will take from the bill the ceasedesist enforcement powers of the EEOC, we will be able to support After that decision was reached, cloture was voted, and we went will say that cases that have finally worked through the long and minable process of getting to court have been a day of hope to who have been discriminated against. But it is a long, long, expensive journey; and those 30,000 people who are now complaining EEOC have no chance of carrying their cases all the way through full procedures of the district courts. But if the EEOC is given power that all other agencies have, to hold hearings, with all the process on a complaint, and to reach a finding, a finding that can reviewed in a circuit court of appeals, I suggest that the hope of 19 when the plan was first suggested by President Kennedy for the N tion, will be alive again for the millions of people who now know th they live in a country where they are not fully protected against d crimination. That is all that the bill is about—that is, a constitutio right through statutory enactment.

The Presiding Officer. The time of the Senator from New Jers has expired.

The Senator from Alabama has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, I was not one of the Senators present the time to which the distinguished Senator from New Jersey h alluded. He spoke of a compromise having been reached. Apparentl that compromise no longer exists, because what was compromised out not coming forward again.

No one disagrees with the need or the right of every individual the country to have a fair and equal opportunity to obtain employme where job opportunities exist. All advocate that substantive right. Th difficulty arises in the manner of enforcement of that right.

The proponents would have that right enforced by a commission th first accepts or receives charges and then investigates, prosecutes, an passes judgment on those charges. Whether that is fair, whether that due process, or whether, accepting all the rights that each citizen h enforced in a court of law—in a Federal district court. District cour throughout the country have not been lacking in compassion, or lac ing in the enforcement of civil rights. All that the Senator from Al bama is suggesting is that those substantive rights be enforced in th Federal courts, not by an agency that serves in all capacities.

I hope that the Senate will reject the cloture motion.

The Presiding Officer. All time has expired. The hour of 12:30 p.m having arrived, pursuant to rule XXII, and under the unanimous-co sent agreement, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending clotu motion, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 815

The pending amendment is amendment No. 815, by the Senator from rth Carolina (Mr. Ervin) for himself and the Senator from Alana (Mr. Allen).

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senators yield?

Mr. ERVIN. I yield.

* * * * * * *

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) to ther promote equal employment opportunities for American kers.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, in lines 18 to 24, both inclusive, on the tom of page 33 of the bill present a drastic proposal. These lines vide:

ec. 702. This title shall not apply to an employer with respect to the employt of aliens outside any State, or to a religious corporation, association, edu-nal institution, or society with respect to the employment of individuals of rticular religion to perform work connected with the carrying on by such oration, association, educational institution, or society of its religious rities.

Mr. President, as I construe those words, they attempt to do an imsible thing, that is, to separate the religious activities of a religious oration, association, educational institution, or society, from those ts activities which can be said to be not religious, nonreligious, or eligious.

As Supreme Court Justice Douglas so well declared in one of th school prayer cases, it is impossible to separate the religious and non religious activities of a religious corporation or religious association o religious educational institution or religious society from its other ac tivities. This is so because the whole religious organization is one body and yet the bill would attempt to divorce the two kinds of activitie each from the other and give a Federal agency the power to dictate, o at least ultimately to control, the employment practices of religiou corporations, religious associations, religious educational institutions and religious societies from each other.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515 to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amend ment of the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN).

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I have much concern about any bill which takes away, from any segment of the American people, freedom. I happen to think that freedom is the greatest blessing which people can enjoy on this earth. I also happen to think that it is unwise to take away freedom from some people on the theory that robbing them of their freedom will promote the interests of other people.

I respectfully submit that any law which gives any agency of Government the right to compel employers to employ persons selected by the Government rather than by themselves should be restricted to those who employ persons in great numbers.

This bill proposes that the EEOC shall have the power to ultimately control the hiring, the promotion, and the firing of every employer within the borders of the 50 States who employs as few as 8 persons. I happen to believe that an employer of such a small number of persons who invests his resources or his talents in a business has the right in any free society, or should have the right in any free society, to employ the persons who he himself thinks are best qualified to make his business a success rather than a failure.

I also think that when you get down to a small number of employees like 8, 9, or 10, whether a business is going to be a success is largely going to depend on whether the personal relationships among that small group of employees are amicable, and that it is a great hazard to the success of the business for a governmental agency to say to that employer of so few persons that he has to employ persons selected by the Government, even though their employment will destroy the congeniality of the employees of that establishment and in that way imperil the success of the employer.

As one who loves his country, I am distressed as I go abroad in this land to find that the Federal Government has undertaken to dictate to the people of this country in respect to so many of their affairs, and that many of the Government agents who exercise this power of the Government are so arbitrary that a very substantial part of the people of this country have grown to fear the Federal Government.

I also find, as I go to and fro, a growing contempt among people in general for many of the activities of government. For example, a short time ago a Federal judge sitting in the city of Richmond usurped—and I use that word advisedly—and exercised the power to quire the Old Dominian to consolidate two independent counties and a independent city into one school district, and to deny 78,000 little ildren, black and white, what I consider to be their right to attend eir neighborhood schools, and required the authorities of the State f Virginia in that independent city and those two independent coun-es to bus those 78,000 little children, black and white, away from their omes, not for the purpose of enlightening their minds but merely for e purpose of integrating their bodies.

It has been stated in the public press that this judge made it im-ossible for any Federal judge to visit such political tyranny upon his vn children, but avoided it by sending his own children to private hools, which are not subject to such tyrannical power on the part of ederal judges. I am somewhat at a loss to comprehend how anyone ho believes in justice and fairplay could fail to entertain a contempt r governmental action of that nature.

Under this bill, employers of small groups of employees, numbering pproximately the same as the number of staff members that U.S. enators and Representatives have, would be subjected to a law which ives an agency of the Federal Government, namely, the EEOC, the ower to determine whom they shall hire, whom they shall promote, hom they may fire, and whom they must retain in their employment.

It is worthy of notice that the Members of the Senate are not asked impose upon themselves the same tyranny that they would impose pon private employers of similar numbers of employees. In fact, the ll, by a provision which appears on page 32, exempts the entire U.S. overnment from the provisions of this bill.

How are we going to enhance the respect which the people of the nited States, so we think, ought to have for the Senate of the nited States, when the Senate emulates the example of the old doctor ho prescribed medicine for his patients which he would not take imself?

Several days ago, I called attention to the assertion made by the ounding Fathers to the Preamble to the Constitution. They asserted that portion of that great document that they ordained and estab-shed the Constitution to secure the blessings of liberty for themselves nd their posterity.

I dislike to say this, but truth compels me to do so. Since I came to he Senate of the United States 17 years ago, one of the principal occu-ations of Congress has been to rob the posterity of the Founding athers of the blessings of liberty which the Constitution was ordained nd established to secure to them.

We are told by laws such as this that men must think like the overnment thinks and that they are going to be penalized in their mployment practices if they fail so to think.

For example, I entertain an honest conviction that a small business-an ought to have the liberty to employ a person of his own race nstead of a person of another race. I do not think there is any evil r any wickedness or any iniquity in a small businessman enjoying hat right.

Furthermore, I happen to think that a person who is of American rigin has an inherent right to employ a person of American origin nstead of a person of some other national origin. I think that when a erson of American national origin does that, he commits an entirely atural act, an act which is in no respect evil or iniquitous or sinful.

I also happen to believe that a person of a particular religion ough to have—and that he will have, in a free society—the right to emplo a person whose religious beliefs are similar to his. I do not believ that when a person prefers to employ a person of his own religio rather than a person of another religion, he does anything evil or an thing iniquitous.

Yet, under this bill, a person commits an illegal act if he does an of these things and in so doing is actuated to any degree whatsoev by a preference for a person of his own race or his own religion or h own national origin.

This bill undertakes to deprive small businessmen of basic righ which they have enjoyed in this land ever since George Washingto took his first oath of office as President of the United States. We a told that this bill is to promote equality. I deny it. If the law compel A to work for B against A's will, that is slavery, within the purview o the 13th amendment. If the law says to B, "You must employ A, eve though you prefer to employ some person of your own race or religio or national origin," that does not make A and B equal. It subordinate the rights of B to the artificially created privilege of A, and no amoun of sophistry can erase this plain truth.

Mr. President, in my judgment, it would be bad enough to rob th small businessman, who invests his resources and his talents in a law ful business, of his right to select his own employees; but the depriva tion of freedom which this bill envisages is made worse because th Government agency which is to exercise this autocratic power has ordi narily been staffed in the past—and will almost certainly be staffed i the future—by crusaders for a cause. That, too, is pretty bad. But thi bill establishes procedures which are designed to prevent the courts when they review the decisions of these agencies, from basing their de cisions upon the truth. The law is specifically designed to handicap th courts; and place them in a straitjacket in their search for truth, by say ing that they are bound by the findings of the Commission if those find ings are supported by substantial evidence—that is, merely more than a scintilla—even though the greater weight of the evidence, the more convincing evidence, the evidence which shows the probability that th findings are false, is to the contrary and that, to my mind, is a prostitu tion of the judicial process. I know that no greater evil can be done in the name of justice than to prostitute the judicial process.

Mr. GAMBRELL. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from North Carolina yield for a question.

Mr. ERVIN. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GAMBRELL. I was interested in the Senator's comments with reference to the imposition on small businesses. That was a concern I undertook to express yesterday in an amendment I offered which, with a modification, was eventually adopted. The Senator will recall that the thrust of the amendment which I offered was to provide financial assistance to small businesses to defend themselves when under investigation or prosecution by the EEOC under the bill. The proposal was according to my amendment, to provide that assistance to a small busi ness defending itself as long as that small business did not conduct it self in a manner inconsistent with the purposes of the act, regardless of whether it eventually won or lost the case. The Senator recalls that amendment?

Mr. ERVIN. Yes. I was pleased to support that amendment, because think it is necessary to achieve a balance in the financial structure. he applicant for employment or the person selected by the Commis- on for employment has all the wealth of the United States arrayed ainst the small businessman.

Mr. GAMBRELL. The Senator will recall that the committee offered a bstitute or an amendment to my amendment which limited its ap- ication only to those small businesses or unions which became the evailing parties in litigation; that is to say, if the small business or union succeeded in establishing that it was not guilty of the charge en it was in a position to be reimbursed for its expenses. The Senator alls that?

Mr. ERVIN. That is true. After the amendment of the Senator from orgia was modified by the amendment of the Senator from Minne- a (Mr. Mondale), I supported the modified amendment not because nought it was a better solution to the problem, but because I thought ould serve justice better.

Mr. GAMBRELL. The Senator will recall that the opposition to the endment as originally offered and the basis for the modification ich tied this benefit to small business or a union which might be uccessful, even though they offered to settle, recognized and agreed t they had been in violation of the act, that denial of the benefit to h small business or union was based on the thought or the observa- that this would be financed to obstruct enforcement of the act that the Government should not finance anyone who might, even ood faith, because they believed in their defense, be in error, or find uselves to be in error and so could not receive such assistance.

ask the Senator, as the Senator from North Carolina is a dis- guished constitutional authority and recognizing, I am sure, that he supported the provisions of adequate assistance for the defense of ccused criminal in Federal court —

Mr. ERVIN. I am proud to say that I am one of the authors of the minal Justice Act and amendments to the Criminal Justice Act gned entirely to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. GAMBRELL. I would ask the Senator—I was not here at the time en all of that was passed—whether there was a hue and cry raised he time the Criminal Justice Act was passed, along the lines that vision of money to an accused criminal might promote the obstruc- or the administration of criminal justice? Was there any such ction made on the part of the Senator from Minnesota or others, took that position here yesterday?

Mr. ERVIN. No. At that time, the Senators who now disagree with Senator from North Carolina were wise enough to accept the ad notion of the Senator from North Carolina to support his en- or.

Mr. GAMBRELL. This is a matter of deep concern to me, that we should a small businessman or a small union who happens to be going ut its business in good faith and who may by accident, through lack nowledge, lack of information, lack of good advice, or something , accidentally violate this act, be considered to have obstructed jus- by defending itself; whereas the most disreputable criminal in our ety, from murderer right on up and down the scale of justice, ac- d of serious crimes, infamous crimes, can get Federal financial assistance to defend himself, whereas a small business or a union is n permitted to defend itself with Federal assistance. Is that not t utmost hypocrisy, in the Senator's opinion?

Mr. ERVIN. It certainly is. If the Senator from North Carolina w not such a trusting individual and was not so charitable in his opinio of his colleagues, I would suspect that perhaps the reluctance to ha a law that gives a small businessman reasonable opportunity to defe himself is that it is desirous the small businessman, no matter ho righteous he may believe his cause to be, will throw out the white fl and make complete obeisance to the Federal bureau in Washingto because the little man in Georgia or in North Carolina is in no financi condition to contest his Government with all its wealth arrayed again him on the side of his adversary.

Mr. President, I have pointed out that this bill takes from sma businessmen the liberty that they have always enjoyed and whic they should continue to enjoy if the United States is to remain a fr society.

I have pointed out that if the law is to be enforced against them b an agency which is notorious for the biased attitude of its member they will be greatly injured.

I have pointed out that the procedures which those who operate th agency pursue are incompatible with any fair system of justice. I woul like to make the further observation at this point that the men wh constitute the members of the Commission and who select the peopl that they will compel the small businessman to employ are usuall without experience, without knowledge, and without understanding o the business in which the small businessman is engaged or what i takes to make that business a success instead of a failure.

So much for the small businessman and private industry. This bil goes a long way beyond the businessmen. It even gives this Commissio jurisdiction over all the private institutions of learning in this coun try. It gives them the final say-so as to who will be the members o the faculty of those private institutions of learning. But it is not con tent with arrogating all of this power to the EEOC. It even gives th EEOC the power to lay the political hands of Caesar upon the insti tutions of God.

I pointed out previously that the amendment offered by the dis tinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen) and myself, whic is now under consideration is to lines 18 through 24, both inclusive at the bottom of page 33 of the bill. These lines comprehend section 70 and read as follows:

> This title shall not apply to an employer with respect to the employment o > aliens outside any State, or to a religious corporation, association, educationa > institution, or society with respect to the employment of individuals of a pa > ticular religion to perform work connected with the carrying on by such corp > ration, association, educational institution, or society of its religious activities

This section would split the activities of a religious organizatio into two segments, although they are irretrievably held mainly by th organization itself. It would be so generous to the good Lord as t permit the good Lord to retain jurisdiction over those employees o the religious organizations who did work strictly in the religious field but it would arrogate to the Commission jurisdiction of those em ployees of the religious organizations whose work was more of a mun dane nature.

For example, under the bill in its present form, the EEOC would ave the power to compel a Christian church to employ a Mohammen- n or an atheist or an agnostic as secretary. When the Federal Gov- nment begins to grasp the power of things of the Lord, it is reaching state of governmental intemperance which is alien to the first amend- ent. The first amendment was designed to build a wall of separation tween church and state; the bill proposes to tear down, in part, that all of separation and to give to Caesar some of the jurisdiction over e affairs of the Lord. The first amendment reads:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or pro- biting the free exercise thereof.

In order that the Senate might understand what that provision eans, and why it was designed to build an impregnable wall of sep- ation between church and state, I invite the attention of the Senate the case of Everson against Board of Education of the township of ing, which is reported in 30 U.S. Reports at page 1. I read from it opinion, first from the brief statement of facts contained in it:

n a suit by a taxpayer, the New Jersey Supreme Court held that the state slature was without power under the state constitution to authorize reim- sement to parents of bus fares paid for transporting their children to ools other than public schools. 132 N.J.L. 98, 39 A. 2d 75. The New Jersey rt of Errors and Appeals reversed, holding that neither the statute nor a olution passed pursuant to it violated the state constitution or the provisions he Federal Constitution in issue. 133 N.J.L. 350, 44 A. 2d 333. On appeal he federal questions to this Court, affirmed, p. 18.

do not read this case for the purpose of judging the soundness of plying the first amendment to the facts in the case, but for the pur- e of disclosing to the Senate how the first amendment was attempted build an impregnable wall of separation between the state—that n being applied here to the Federal Government—and religion. Justice Black delivered the opinion of the Court. His opinion rts on page 3 and reads as follows:

New Jersey statute authorizes its local school districts to make rules and racts for the transportation of children to and from schools. The appellee, a nship board of education, acting pursuant to this statute, authorized reim- sement to parents of money expended by them for the bus transportation heir children on regular busses operated by the public transportation system. t of this money was for the payment of transportation of some children in community to Catholic parochial schools. These church schools give their ents, in addition to secular education, regular religious instruction con- ning to the religious tenets and modes of worship of the Catholic Faith. superintendent of these schools is a Catholic priest.

he appellant, in his capacity as a district taxpayer, filed suit in a state t challenging the right of the Board to reimburse parents of parochial ol students. He contended that the statute and the resolution passed pur- nt to it violated both the State and the Federal Constitution. That court held the legislature was without power to authorize such payment under the constitution. 132 N.J.L. 98, 39 A. 2d 75. The New Jersey Court of Errors Appeals reversed holding that neither the statute nor the resolution passed rsuant to it was in conflict with the State constitution or the provisions of Federal Constitution in issue. 133 N.J.L. 350, 44 A. 2d 333. The case is here ppeal under 28 U.S.C. § 344 (a).

nce there has been no attack on the statute on the ground that a part of its nage excludes children attending private schools operated for profit from ving State payment for their transportation, we need not consider this exclu- ary language; it has no relevancy to any constitutional question here ented. Furthermore, if the exclusion clause had been properly challenged, o not know whether New Jersey's highest court would construe its statutes cluding payment of the school transportation of any group of pupils, even those of a private school run for profit. Consequently, we put to one side t question as to the validity of the statute against the claim that it does n authorize payment for the transportation generally of school children in Ne Jersey.

The only contention here is that the state statute and the resolution, insof as they authorized reimbursement to parents of children attending parochi schools, violate the Federal Constitution in these two respects, which to sor extent overlap. First. They authorize the State to take by taxation the priva property of some and bestow it upon others, to be used for their own priva purposes. This, it is alleged, violates the due process clause of the Fourteen Amendment. Second. The statute and the resolution forced inhabitants to p taxes to help support and maintain schools which are dedicated to, and whi regularly teach, the Catholic Faith. This is alleged to be a use of state pow to support church schools contrary to the prohibition of the First Amendme which the Fourteenth Amendment made applicable to the states.

First. The due process argument that the state law taxes some people to he others carry out their private purposes is framed in two phases. The first pha is that a state cannot tax A to reimburse B for the cost of transporting his chi dren to church schools. This is said to violate the due process clause because th children are sent to these church schools to satisfy the personal desires of thei parents, rather than the public's interest in the general education of all childre
This argument, if valid, would apply equally to prohibit state payment for th transportation of children to any non-public school, whether operated by church or any other non-government individual or group. But, the New Jers legislature has decided that a public purpose will be served by using tax-raise funds to pay the bus fares of all school children, including those who atte parochial schools. The New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals has reached th same conclusion. The fact that a state law, passed to satisfy a public need, coi cides with the personal desires of the individuals most directly affected is cer tainly an inadequate reason for us to say that a legislature has erroneously ap praised the public need.

It is true that this Court has, in rare instances, struck down state statutes o the ground that the purpose for which tax-raised funds were to be expended wa not a public one. Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655; Parkersburg v. Brow 106 U.S. 487; Thompson v. Consolidated Gas Utilities Corp., 300 U.S. 55. But th Court has also pointed out that this far-reaching authority must be exercise with the most extreme caution. Green v. Frazier, 253 U.S. 233, 240. Otherwise, state's power to legislate for the public welfare might be seriously curtailed, power which is a primary reason for the existence of states. Changing loca conditions create new local problems which may lead a state's people and it local authorities to believe that laws authorizing new types of public services ar necessary to promote the general well-being of the people. The Fourteenth amendment did not strip the states of their power to meet problems previously left for individual solution. Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U.S. 97, 103–104; Ba

District No. 1 of Kalamazoo, 30 Mich. 69 (1874). The same thing is no less tru of legislation to reimburse needy parents, or all parents, for payment of the fare of their children so that they can ride in public busses to and from schools rathe than run the risk of traffic and other hazards incident to walking or "hitch hiking." See Barbier v. Connolly, supra, at 31. See also cases collected 63 A.L.R 413, 118 A.L.R. 806. Nor does it follow that a law has a private rather than a public purpose because it provides that tax raised funds will be paid to reimburse individuals on account of money spent by them in a way which furthers a publi purpose. See Carmichael v. Southern Coal & Coke Co., 301 U.S. 495, 518. Sub sidies and loans to individuals such as farmers and home owners, and to pri vately owned transportation systems, as well as many other kinds of businesses have long been commonplace practices in our state and national history.

Insofar as the second phase of the due process argument may differ from the first, it is by suggesting that taxation for transportation of children to church schools constitutes support of a religion by the State. But if the law is invalid for this reason, it is because it violates the First Amendment's prohibition inst the establishment of religion by law. This is the exact question raised by llant's second contention, to consideration of which we now turn.

cond. The New Jersey statute is challenged as a "law respecting an estabment of religion." The First Amendment, as made applicable to the states by Fourteenth, Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, commands that a state ll make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the exercise thereof . . ." These words of the First Amendment reflected in the ds of early Americans a vivid mental picture of conditions and practices h they fervently wished to stamp out in order to preserve liberty for themes and for their posterity. Doubtless their goal has not been entirely reached; so far has the Nation moved toward it that the expression "law respecting stablishment of religion," probably does not so vividly remind present-day ricans of the evils, fears, and political problems that caused that expression written into our Bill of Rights. Whether this New Jersey law is one re-ing an "establishment of religion" requires an understanding of the mean-of that language, particularly with respect to the imposition of taxes. Once , therefore, it is not inappropriate briefly to review the background and ronment of the period in which that constitutional language was fashioned adopted.

arge proportion of the early settlers of this country came here from Europe cape the bondage of laws which compelled them to support and attend gov-ent-favored churches. The centuries immediately before and contemporane-with the colonization of America had been filled with turmoil, civil strife, persecutions, generated in large part by established sects determined to tain their absolute political and religious supremacy. With the power of nment supporting them, at various times and places, Catholics had pered Protestants, Protestants had persecuted Catholics, Protestant sects had cuted other Protectant sects, Catholics of one shade of belief had persecuted olics of another shade of belief, and all of these had from time to time pered Jews. In efforts to force loyalty to whatever religious group happened on top and in league with the government of a particular time and place, nd women had been fined, cast in jail, cruelly tortured, and killed. Among ffenses for which these punishments had been inflicted were such things as ing disrespectfully of the views of ministers of government-established hes, non-attendance at those churches, expressions of non-belief in their nes, and failure to pay taxes and tithes to support them.
se practices of the old world were transplanted to and began to thrive in il of the new America. The very charters granted by the English Crown to dividuals and companies designated to make the laws which would control stinies of the colonials authorized these individuals and companies to erect us establishments which all, whether believers or non-believers, would be ed to support and attend. An exercise of this authority was accompanied repetition of many of the old-world practices and persecutions. Catholics themselves hounded and proscribed because of their faith; Quakers who ed their conscience went to jail; Baptists were peculiarly obnoxious to n dominant Protestant sects; men and women of varied faiths who hap-to be in a minority in a particular locality were persecuted because they astly persisted in worshipping God only as their own consciences dictated. ll of these dissenters were compelled to pay tithes and taxes to support ment-sponsored churches whose ministers preached inflammatory ser-designed to strengthen and consolidate the established faith by generating ing hatred against dissenters.
se practices became so commonplace as to shock the freedom-loving colo-into a feeling of abhorrence. The imposition of taxes to pay ministers' s and to build and maintain churches and church property aroused their ation. It was these feelings which found expression in the First Amend-No one locality and no one group throughout the Colonies can rightly be entire credit for having aroused the sentiment that culminated in adoption Bill of Rights' provisions embracing religious liberty. But Virginia, where tablished church had achieved a dominant influence in political affairs and many excesses attracted wide public attention, provided a great stimulus ble leadership for the movement. The people there, as elsewhere, reached nviction that individual religious liberty could be achieved best under a ment which was stripped of all power to tax, to support, or otherwise to any or all religions, or to interfere with the beliefs of any religious dual or group.

The movement toward this end reached its dramatic climax in Virginia 1785-86 when the Virginia legislative body was about to renew Virginia's levy for the support of the established church. Thomas Jefferson and Jam Madison led the fight against this tax. Madison wrote his great Memorial a Remonstrance against the law. In it, he eloquently argued that a true religi did not need the support of law; that no person, either believer or non-believ should be taxed to support a religious institution of any kind; that the b interest of a society required that the minds of men always be wholly free; a that cruel persecutions were the inevitable result of government-establis religions. Madison's Remonstrance received strong support throughout Virgin and the Assembly postponed consideration of the proposed tax measure un its next session. When the proposal came up for consideration at that sessi it not only died in committee, but the Assembly enacted the famous "Virgi Bill for Religious Liberty" originally written by Thomas Jefferson. The preamb to that Bill stated among other things that—

"Almighty God hath created the mind free; that all attempts to influence by temporal punishments of burthens, of by civil incapacitations, tend only beget habits of hypocrisy and meanness, and are a departure from the plan the Holy author of our religion, who being Lord both of body and mind, yet cho not to propagate it by coercions on either . . .; that to compel a man to furni contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves, sinful and tyrannical; that even the forcing him to support this or that teach of his own religions persuasion, is depriving him of the comfortable liberty giving his contributions to the particular pastor, whose morals he would ma his pattern. . . ."

And the statute itself enacted:

"That no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious wo ship, place, or ministry whatsoever, nor shall be enforced, restrained, molest or burthened in his body or goods, nor shall otherwise suffer on account of h religious opinions or belief. . . ."

This Court has previously recognized that the provisions of the First Amen ment, in the drafting and adoption of which Madison and Jefferson played su leading roles, had the same objective and were intended to provide the sa protection against governmental intrusion on religious liberty as the Virgin statute. Reynolds v. United States, supra at 164; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 67 Davis v. Beason, 133 U.S. 333, 342. Prior to the adoption of the Fourteen Amendment, the First Amendment did not apply as a restraint against the stat Most of them did soon provide similar constitutional protection for religio liberty. But some states persisted for about half a century in imposing restrain upon the free exercise of religion and in discriminating against particular re gious groups. In recent years, so far as the provision against the establishm of a religion is concerned, the question has most frequently arisen in connecti with proposed state aid to church schools and efforts to carry on religious teac ings in the public schools in accordance with the tenets of a particular se Some churches have either sought or accepted state financial support for th schools. Here again the efforts to obtain state aid or acceptance of it have n been limited to any one particular faith. The state courts, in the main, ha remained faithful to the language of their own constitutional provisions design to protect religious freedom and to separate religions and governments.

Mr. President, I would like to emphasize the portion of Justi Black's opinion which I have just read that these State constitution provisions similar to the first amendment are designed to prote religious freedom and to separate religion from government, whi this bill undertakes to wed in some respects.

I resume the reading:

These decisions, however, show the difficulty in drawing the line between t legislation which provides funds for the welfare of the general public and th which is designed to support institutions which teach religion.

The interpretation and scope of the First Amendment, preventing establishment religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, in the light of its history a the evils it was designed forever to suppress, have been several times elab by the decisions of the court prior to the application of the First Amendme to the states by the Fourteenth. The broad meaning given the Amendment these earlier cases has been accepted by this Court in its decisions concern ndividual's religious freedom rendered since the Fourteenth Amendment interpreted to make the prohibitions of the First applicable to state action lging religious freedom. There is every reason to give the same application broad interpretation to the "establishment of religion" clause. The interrela- of these complementary clauses was well summarized in a statement of the t of Appeals of South Carolina, quoted with approval by this Court in son v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 730: "The structure of our government has, for preservation of civil liberty, rescued the temporal institutions from religious ference. On the other hand, it has secured religious liberty from the inva- of the civil authority."

digress from reading the opinion to emphasize that statement, the gist and effect of the first amendment and similar constitu- al provisions in the constitutions of the States is to secure religious rty from the invasion of the civil authorities. I respectfully submit we are not securing religious liberty from the invasion of the civil orities when we give the civil authorities power to regulate whom ious institutions, such as religious corporations, religious educa- l institutions, and religious societies, can employ, whom they must ote, whom they must retain in employment, and whom they may esume the reading of the decision:

"establishment of religion" clause of the First Amendment means at least Neither a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church. Neither pass laws which aid one religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion another. Neither can force nor influence a person to go to or to remain away church against his will or force him to profess a belief or disbelief in eligion. No person can be punished for entertaining or professing religious s or disbeliefs, for church attendance or nonattendance. No tax in any nt, large or small, can be levied to support any religious activities or tions, whatever they may be called, or whatever form they may adopt ch or practice religion. Neither a state nor the Federal Government can, or secretly, participate in the affairs of any religious organizations or s and vice versa. In the words of Jefferson, the clause against establish- of religion by law was intended to erect "a wall of separation between h and State." Reynolds v. United States, supra at 164.

. President, I should like to emphasize that statement, that, in words of Jefferson, the clause against the establishment of reli- by law was intended to erect a wall of separation between church tate. I respectfully submit that we do not erect a wall of separa- between church and state when we permit the agents of the state l a religious corporation, a religious association, a religious edu- al institution, or a religious society, whom it is to employ for any se, whom it is to promote for any purpose, or whom it may dis- e for any reason.

this bill is an assault on the wall of separation which the first lment was intended to build between civil government and on.

esume the reading of the opinion:

must consider the New Jersey statute in accordance with the foregoing tions imposed by the First Amendment. But we must not strike that state down if it is within the State's constitutional power even though it ches the verge of that power. See Interstate Ry. v. Massachusetts, Holmes, ra at 85, 88. New Jersey cannot consistently with the "establishment gion" clause of the first Amendment contribute tax-raised funds to the t of an institution which teaches the tenets and faith of any church. On the hand, other language of the amendment commands that New Jersey cannot r its citizens in the free exercise of their own religion. Consequently, it exclude individual Catholics, Lutherans, Mohammedans, Baptists, Jews,

Methodists, Non-believers, Presbyterians, or the members of any other fa because of their faith, or lack of it, from receiving the benefits of public wel legislation.

Under the provisions of this bill, the EEOC, which is given ju diction over certain aspects of the employment practices of religi organizations, can deny to members of those organizations empl ment by those religious organizations for purposes not connected w the actual dissemination of religious doctrines.

I resume the reading of the opinion:

While we do not mean to intimate that a state could not provide transpo tion only to children attending public schools, we must be careful, in tecting the citizens of New Jersey against state-established churches, to be s that we do not inadvertently prohibit New Jersey from extending its gen state law benefits to all its citizens without regard to their religious belief.

Measured by these standards, we cannot say that the First Amendment hibits New Jersey from spending tax-raised funds to pay the bus fares parochial school pupils as a part of a general program under which it pays fares of pupils attending public and other schools. It is undoubtedly true children are helped to get to church schools. There is even a possibility some of the children might not be sent to the church schools if the parents w compelled to pay their children's bus fares out of their own pockets when tra portation to a public school would have been paid for by the State. The s possibility exists where the state requires a local transit company to provide duced fares to school children including those attending parochial schools, where a municipally owned transportation system undertakes to carry all sch children free of charge. Moreover, state-paid policemen, detailed to pro children going to and from church schools from the very real hazards of tra would serve much the same purpose and accomplish much the same result state provision intended to guarantee free transportation of a kind which state deems to be best for the school children's welfare. And parents might ref to risk their children to the serious danger of traffic accidents going to and fr parochial schools, the approaches to which were not protected by policem Similarly, parents might be reluctant to permit their children to attend sch which the state had cut off from such general government services as ordin police and fire protection, connections for sewage disposal, public highways a sidewalks. Of course, cutting off church schools from these services, so separ and so indisputably marked off from the religious function, would make it more difficult for the schools to operate. But such is obviously not the purpos the First Amendment. That Amendment requires the state to be a neutral in relations with groups of religious believers and non-believers; it does not req the state to be their adversary. State power is no more to be used so as handicap religions than it is to favor them.

This Court has said that parents may, in the discharge of their duty un state compulsory education laws, send their children to a religious rather th a public school if the school meets the secular educational requirements wh the state has power to impose. See Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 appears that these parochial schools meet New Jersey's requirements. The St contributes no money to the schools. It does not support them. Its legislation, applied, does no more than provide a general program to help parents get th children, regardless of their religion, safely and expeditiously to and from credited schools.

The First Amendment has erected a wall between church and state. That w must be kept high and impregnable. We could not approve the slightest brea
New Jersey has not breached it here.

Affirm

I digress from reading further opinions in this case to emphas these words:

The First Amendment has erected a wall between church and state. That w must be kept high and impregnable.

I respectfully submit that this bill would destroy in part the w between church and state. I submit that it would not keep that w high and impregnable.

cannot understand why the EEOC or those who support it are so ious to extend its powers so that it will have jurisdiction over who nployed by a church to be a janitor, or who is employed to be a etary for a church, or who is employed—as is done in many in- ces where religious organizations have fundraising drives—to raise ey for them. Yet, this bill would extend the power of the EEOC these employees of churches; and, as I have said, it would lay olitical hands of Caesar upon the things of God.

ther opinions in this case illustrate the truth that the first amend- t was a design to raise a wall of separation between church and and was designed to keep the state's hands off the church and hurch's hands off the state. Certainly, a bill which is designed to he hand of the state on the employment practices of religious de- inations is not keeping the hands of the state off the church.

. Justice Jackson wrote a dissenting opinion in the Everson case h has some very strong statements on the aspect of the first dment. I read from the dissenting opinion:

nd myself, contrary to first impressions, unable to join in this decision. I a sympathy, though it is not ideological, with Catholic citizens who are lled by law to pay taxes for public schools, and also feel constrained by ence and discipline to support other schools for their own children. Such to them as this case involves is not in itself a serious burden to taxpayers had assumed it to be as little serious in principle. Study of this case con- me otherwise. The Court's opinion marshals every argument in favor te aid and puts the case in its most favorable light, but much of its reason- nfirms my conclusions that there are no good grounds upon which to sup- he present legislation. In fact, the undertones of the opinion, advocating ete and uncompromising separation of Church from State, seem utterly dant with its conclusion yielding support to their commingling in educa- matters. The case which irresistibly comes to mind as the most fitting lent is that of Julia who, according to Byron's reports, "whispering 'I e'er consent.'—consented."

Court sustains this legislation by assuming two deviations from the facts s particular case; first, it assumes a state of facts the record does not sup- nd secondly, it refuses to consider facts which are inescapable on the .

Court concludes that this "legislation, as applied, does no more than pro- general program to help parents get their children, regardless of their n, safely and expeditiously to and from accredited schools," and it draws parison between "state provisions intended to guarantee free transporta- for school children with services such as police and fire protection, and s that we are here dealing with "laws authorizing new types of public es. . . ." This hypothesis permeates the opinion. The facts will not bear nstruction.

Township of Ewing is not furnishing transportation to the children in rm; it is not operating school busses itself or contracting for their oper- and it is not performing any public service of any kind with this tax- s money. All school children are left to ride as ordinary paying passengers regular busses operated by the public transportation system. What the hip does, and what the taxpayer complains of, is at stated intervals to rse parents for the fares paid, provided the children attend either public s or Catholic Church schools. This expenditure of tax funds has no possi- ct on the child's safety or expedition in transit. As passengers on the busses they travel as fast and no faster, and are as safe and no safer. eir parents are reimbursed as before.

ddition to thus assuming a type of service that does not exist, the Court sists that we must close our eyes to a discrimination which does exist. solution which authorizes disbursement of this taxpayer's money limits rsement to those who attend public schools and Catholic schools. That ay the Act is applied to this taxpayer.

The New Jersey Act in question makes the character of the school, not needs of the children, determine the eligibility of parents to reimburse The Act permits payment for transportation to parochial schools or pu schools but prohibits it to private schools operated in whole or in part for fit. Children often are sent to private schools because their parents feel they require more individual instruction than public schools can provide because they are backward or defective and need special attention. If all dren of the state were objects of impartial solicitude, no reason is obvious denying transportation reimbursement to students of this class, for these are as needy and as worthy as those who go to public or parochial schools fusal to reimburse those who attend such schools is understandable only in light of a purpose to aid the schools, because the state might well abstain f aiding a profit making private enterprise. Thus, under the Act and resolu brought to us by this case, children are classified according to the schools attend and are to be aided if they attend the public schools or private Cath schools, and they are not allowed to be aided if they attend private sect schools or private religious schools of other faiths.

Of course, this case is not one of a Baptist or a Jew or an Episcopalian o pupil of a private school complaining of discrimination. It is one of a taxp urging that he is being taxed for an unconstitutional purpose. I think he entitled to have us consider the Act just as it is written. The statement by New Jersey court that it holds the Legislature may authorize use of local fu "for the transportation of pupils to any school," 133 N. J. L. 350, 354, 44 A. 2d 337, in view of the other constitutional views expressed, is not a holding t this Act authorizes transportation of all pupils to all schools. As applied t taxpayer by the action he complains of, certainly the Act does not authorize imbursement to those who choose any alternative to the public school exc Catholic Church schools.

If we are to decide this case on the facts before us, our question is simply th Is it constitutional to tax this complainant to pay the cost of carrying pupils Church schools of one specified denomination?

II

Whether the taxpayer constitutionally can be made to contribute aid to pare of students because of their attendance at parochial school depends upon nature of those schools and their relation to the Church. The Constitution s nothing of education. It lays no obligation on the states to provide schools a does not undertake to regulate state systems of education if they see fit to ma tain them.

I digress here, Mr. President, to say that that statement seems to ha been drawn out of the Constitution and lost in a legal garbage somewhere.

But they cannot, through school policy any more than through other mea invade rights secured to citizens by the Constitution of the United States. Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624. One of our ba rights is to be free of taxation to support a transgression of the constitutio command that the authorities "shall make no law respecting an establishm of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof . . ." U.S. Const., Amend. Cantwell v. Connecticut, 319 U.S. 296.

The function of the Church school is a subject on which this record is mea It shows only that the schools are under superintendence of a priest and "religion is taught as part of the curriculum." But we know that such sch are parochial only in name—they, in fact, represent a world wide and age policy of the Roman Catholic Church. Under the rubric "Catholic Schools," Canon Law of the Church, by which all Catholics are bound, provides:

"1215. Catholic children are to be educated in schools where not only noth contrary to Catholic faith and morals is taught, but rather in schools wh religious and moral training occupy the first place. . . (Canon 1372.)"

"1330. In every elementary school the children must, according to their ag instructed in Christian doctrine.

"The young people who attend the higher schools are to receive a deeper r gious knowledge, and the bishops shall appoint priests qualified for such w by their learning and piety. (Canon 1373.)"

1217. Catholic children shall not attend non-Catholic, indifferent, schools that mixed, that is to say, schools open to Catholics and non-Catholics alike. The op of the diocese only has the right, in harmony with the instructions of the y See, to decide under what circumstances, and with what safeguards to ent loss of faith, it may be tolerated that Catholic children go to such schools. non 1374.)"

224. The religious teaching of youth in any schools is subject to the au- ity and inspection of the Church.

The local Ordinaries have the right and duty to watch that nothing is taught rary to faith or good morals, in any of the schools of their territory.

They, moreover, have the right to approve the books of Christian doctrine and teachers of religion, and to demand, for the sake of safeguarding religion morals, the removal of teachers and books. (Canon 1381.) (Woywod, Rev. islaus, The New Canon Law, under imprimatur of Most Rev. Francis J. lman, Archbishop of New York and others, 1940.)" is no exaggeration to say that the whole historic conflict in temporal policy een the Catholic Church and non-Catholic comes to a focus in their respec- school policies. The Roman Catholic Church, counseled by experience in ages and many lands and with all sorts and conditions of men, takes what, the viewpoint of its own progress and the success of its mission, is a wise ate of the importance of education to religion. It does not leave the individ- pick up religion by chance. It relies on early and indelible indoctrination e faith and order of the Church by the word and example of persons con- ted to the task.

r public school, if not a product of Protestantism, at least is more consistent it than with the Catholic culture and scheme of values. It is a relatively t development dating from about 1840. It is organized on the premise that ar education can be isolated from all religious teaching so that the school nculcate all needed temporal knowledge and also maintain a strict and lofty ality as to religion. The assumption is that after the individual has been in- ted in worldly wisdom he will be better fitted to choose his religion. Whether a disjunction is possible, and if possible whether it is wise, are questions I not try to answer.

ould be surprised if any Catholic would deny that the parochial school is l, if not the most vital, part of the Roman Catholic Church. If put to the , that venerable institution, I should expect, would forego its whole service ture persons before it would give up education of the young, and it would vise choice. Its growth and cohesion, discipline and loyalty, spring from its ls. Catholic education is the rock on which the whole structure rests, and der tax aid to its Church school is indistinguishable to me from rendering me aid to the Church itself.

III

s of no importance in this situation whether the beneficiary of this expendi- f tax-raised funds is primarily the parochial school and incidentally the or whether the aid is directly bestowed on the pupil with indirect benefits school. The state cannot maintain a Church and it can no more tax its s to furnish free carriage to those who attend a Church. The prohibition st establishment of religion cannot be circumvented by a subsidy, bonus or ursement of expense to individuals for receiving religious instruction and rination.

Court, however, compares this to other subsidies and loans to individuals ays. "Nor does it follow that a law has a private rather than a public pur- because it provides that tax-raised funds will be paid to reimburse individ- n account of money spent by them in a way which furthers a public pro- See Carmichael v. Southern Coal & Coke Co., 301 U.S. 495, 518." Of course, ate may pay out tax-raised funds to relieve pauperism, but it may not under nstitution do so to induce or reward piety. It may spend funds to secure old ainst want, but it may not spend funds to secure religion against skepticism. compensate individuals for lots of employment, but it cannot compensate or adherence to a creed.

ems to me that the basic fallacy in the Court's reasoning, which accounts failure to apply the principles it avows, is in ignoring the essentially reli- test by which beneficiaries of this expenditure are selected. A policeman s a Catholic, of course—but not because he is a Catholic; it is because he n and a member of our society. The fireman protects the Church school—but not because it is a Church school; it is because it is property, part of the a of our society. Neither the fireman nor the policeman has to ask before he rer aid "Is this man or building identified with a Catholic Church?" But before school authorities draw a check to reimburse for a student's fare they muss just that question, and if the school is a Catholic one they may render aid cause it is such, while if it is of any other faith or is run for profit, the help be withheld. To consider the converse of the Court's reasoning will best dis its fallacy. That there is no parallel between police and fire protection and plan of reimbursement is apparent from the incongruity of the limitation of Act if applied to police and fire service. Could we sustain an Act that said police shall protect pupils on the way to or from public schools and Cat schools but not while going to and coming from other schools, and firemen extinguish a blaze in public or Catholic school buildings but shall not put blaze in Protestant Church schools or private schools operated for profit? is the true analogy to the case we have before us and I should think it pl plain that such a scheme would not be valid.

The Court's holding is that this taxpayer has no grievance because the s has decided to make the reimbursement a public purpose and therefore we bound to regard it as such. I agree that this Court has left, and always sh leave to each state, great latitude in deciding for itself, in the light of its conditions, what shall be public purposes in its schemes of things. It may soci utilities and economic enterprises and make taxpayers' business out of w conventionally had been private business. It may make public business of indi ual welfare, health, education, entertainment or security. But it cannot m public business of religious worship or instruction, or of attendance at relig institutions of any character. There is no answer to the proposition, more fully pounded by Mr. Justice Rutledge, that the effect of the religious freedom Ame ment to our Constitution was to take every form of propagation of religion of the realm of things which could directly or indirectly be made public busin and thereby be supported in whole or in part at taxpayers' expense. That is a ference which the Constitution sets up between religious and almost every ot subject matter of legislation, a difference which goes to the very root of relig freedom and which the Court is overlooking today. This freedom was first in Bill of Rights because it was first in the forefathers' minds; it was set forth absolute terms, and its strength is its rigidity. It was intended not only to k the states' hands out of religion, but to keep religions' hands off the state, a above all, to keep bitter religious controversy out of public life by denying every denomination any advantage from getting control of public policy or public purse. Those great ends I cannot but think are immeasurably compromi by today's decision.

This policy of our Federal Constitution has never been wholly pleasing most religous groups. They all are quick to invoke its protections; they all irked when they feel its restraints. This Court has gone a long way, if not unreasonable way, to hold that public business of such paramount importa as maintenance of public order, protection of the privacy of the home, and t tion may not be pursued by a state in a way that even indirectly will inter with religious proselyting. See dissent in Douglas v. Jeannette, 319 U.S.
166; Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105; Martin v. Struthers, 319 U.S.
Jones v. Opelika, 316 U.S. 584, reversed on rehearing, 319 U.S. 103.

But we cannot have it both ways. Religious teaching cannot be a private af when the state seeks to impose regulations which infringe on it indirectly, a public affair when it comes to taxing citizens of one faith to aid another those of no faith to aid all. If these principles seem harsh in prohibiting aid Catholic education, it must not be forgotten that it is the same Constitu that alone assures Catholics the right to maintain these schools at all when dominant local sentiment would forbid them. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, U.S. 510. Nor should I think that those who have done so well without this

Many groups have sought aid from tax funds only to find that it carried p tical control with it. Indeed this Court has declared that "It's hardly lack due process for the Government to regulate that which it subsidizes." Wick
v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 131.

But in any event, the great purposes of the Constitution do not depend the approval or convenience of those they restrain. I cannot read the hist of the struggle to separate political from ecclesiastical affairs, well summari in the opinion of Mr. Justice Rutledge in which I generally concur, without nviction that the Court today is unconsciously giving the clock's hands a backrd turn.

Mr. Justice Frankfurter joins in this opinion.

Mr. President, I would like to emphasize what Justice Jackson said his opinion in these words, speaking of the first amendment:

It was intended not only to keep the states' hands out of religion, but to keep igion's hands off the state.

Congress does not keep the state's—that is, the Government's—nds out of religion by enacting a bill which says that the Govern-nt can regulate and control the employment practices of all of the igious groups in this country and all of the religious schools in this ntry; that is, all of the religious institutions in this country, in rect to all of their employees who are not strictly engaged in carrying the religious affairs of those institutions.

I submit, without fear of successful contradiction, that if Congress e to enact the bill and thereby say that the Commission can con-the employment practices of all religious groups in the United tes in respect to what persons may be employed by them, other than se who are engaged stricty in preaching and activities of that d, that is not keeping the hands of the state off religion. For the life me, I cannot comprehend why the EEOC and why those who are mpioning this cause are so greedy for power that they want to lay political hands of Caesar on the employment practices of churches God.

t the risk of rereading this case, I want to point out exactly what amendment does. The amendment would change the wording of ion 702, as set forth in lines 8 to 24, both inclusive, at the bottom age 33, so that it would read as follows:

c. 702. This title shall not apply to an employer with respect to the employof agents outside any State or for the employment of any individual's by educational institution or by any religious corporation, association, or society.

he amendment, if adopted, would take away the jurisdiction of Commission over the employment practices of all religious coritions, of religious associations, of religious educational institus, and of religious societies. In addition, it would take away the mission's jurisdiction over educational institutions in general, state and private.

r. Williams. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina l for an observation?

r. Ervin. I yield.

r. Williams. If the Senator should yield the floor at this point or , representatives of the National Council of Churches and other nizations are in the reception room and would be glad to see the tor and express their reasons for being opposed to his amendment.

r. Ervin. I happen to be familiar with some of the activities of the onal Council of Churches. The National Council of Churches rep-its certain Protestant religious organizations, including my own, h happens to be the Southern Presbyterian Church.

the National Council of Churches were to speak to me on a reli-s subject, I would probably listen to them. But when the National ncil of Churches starts talking, as it so often does, about the affairs esar, I do not give very much mind to what it has to say on that ct.

I remember that on one occasion a man who wore the cloth ca before a committee and stated that he represented the National Co cil of Churches, and that the National Council of Churches re resented 40 million Protestants; hence, he said he spoke for million Protestants.

I said to him, "You may say that you represent 40 million Prote ants, but you do not speak for hundreds of thousands of them; you not speak for me."

So he said, "Maybe I have taken in a little too much territory."

That was the only time I ever heard a representative of the Natio Council of Churches concede that they took in too much territory.

But I have followed their work. Years ago, the predecessor organiz tion, the Federal Council of Churches, changed its name to the N tional Council of Churches, and I expressed the opinion that the N tional Council of Churches was a political organization with ve slight religious leanings.

My minister, who was a great advocate of the Federal Council Churches, the predecessor of the National Council of Churches, sug gested to me that I get their publications and read their committ reports, and that that might change my mind and cause me to be strong advocate of the National Council of Churches.

I did so, and I found, in committee report after committee repor that, in substance, there was no evidence that the free enterprise syste of America was better than the collective systems of Communis Russia.

I also found among the reports statements that committees ha passed resolutions telling the Governor of Tennessee and the cour of Tennessee exactly how they ought to deal with a certain riot tha had taken place in Columbia, Tenn., before the trial was begun an before the evidence was disclosed.

The National Council of Churches, time after time, undertook t speak for Protestants whom they did not represent, so far as politica beliefs were concerned, on political questions.

So I am not interested in the slightest degree to hear what the Na tional Council of Churches has to say on this subject, because I woul say that I am more interested in what Justice Jackson said: That th first amendment was designed to keep the hands of the state out o religion. I have enough understanding of the English language an the terms of the bill to know that when the Federal Government, act ing through the EEOC, undertakes to prescribe or control the employ ment practices, in general, of religious organizations, the Federal Gov ernment is not keeping the state's hands out of religion.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one mor observation?

Mr. Ervin. I yield.

Mr. Williams. It is clearly in the law that, where the question relig on, this legislation does not apply. I would make one further ob servation before we deal with that: That the representatives of th National Council of Churches would be happy to greet the Senato from North Carolina in the reception room. Representatives of the U.S Catholic Council and also, I understand, representatives of the Jewis faith are in the reception room, and they also oppose the amendment

Mr. Ervin. I will restrict my remarks to the political activities o the National Council of Churches. I do not condemn such religious tions as they practice; but I believe in the separation of church and ate. I do not believe that the church ought to dictate to Caesar or at Caesar ought to control the church.

Will the Senator from New Jersey tell the Senator from North arolina what this language means:

This title shall not apply to . . . a religious corporation, association, educational titution, or society with respect to the employment of individuals of a particu- religion to perform work connected with the carrying on by such corporation, ociation, educational institution, or society of its religious activities.

Why is the language restricted to religious activities? Churches int bulletins. They employ people to print bulletins. They employ retaries. They sometimes employ professional fund raising groups.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I must say that it seems to me that, for good reason, are perhaps building on the spirit of the first amendment, that the vernment should not be involved in religious activities.

Therefore, where we are saying that nobody should be discriminated inst in employment, we will not carry that into an area where we e a first amendment situation, where we have religious activities.

Mr. ERVIN. Under this very provision, if the clause I have just read omes law, it would provide that the EEOC could compel a Christian omination to employ a Mohammedan secretary or to employ an ist as a secretary or to employ an agnostic as a secretary. If the ator from New Jersey interprets that to the contrary, all I am ing him to do is to accept an amendment that says the EEOC shall e no jurisdiction at all over religious institutions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the Senator inquiring of the situation in an edu- onal institution that is operated by a religious organization?

Mr. ERVIN. I am inquiring about religious corporations. I take the d "religious" in line 20. It says religious corporation, association, cation, or society. I think the word "religious" applies to corpora- . It applies to association. It applies to educational institutions. It lies to society.

Mr. WILLIAMS. First of all, let us deal with the situation where we e an educational institution which is owned, operated, and spon- d by a religious order, faith, or whatever the proper word would Let us take Catholic University, where the name tells us the spon- of that great university. The law is crystal clear, and we do not urb that law in any way. If the president, or the governing body, atholic University desired to hire only people of the Catholic faith, they can do. That they will be able to do if the bill passes and mes law.

r. ERVIN. The section to which my good friend from New Jersey les applies only to educational institutions. This applies to rches, convents, monasteries; it applies to religious corporations, ther they are running a school or not. It applies to religious asso- ons. It applies to religious societies. Under this provision, it could eld to be illegal for a Catholic convent to employ a Catholic to be janitor there because the janitor happened to be a Catholic in gion. That is exactly what it could do.

r. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator's amendment limit itself to the ortunity of a religious organization to have the right to hire people s own faith? Is that the limitation of the amendment?

Mr. ERVIN. I would allow the religious corporation to do what pleased. That is what my amendment would allow it to do. It would allow it liberty. It would take it out from under the control of the EEOC entirely.

This is not the amendment to which I referred, because this is an amendment to section 702, and the provision to which the Senator from New Jersey referred is section 703, an entirely different section, subsection (2), which applies only to educational institutions. It applies only to schools, colleges, universities, or other educational institutions.

I am trying to take the political hands of Caesar off all religious corporations, off all religious associations, and off all religious societies. I am trying to take them even off the National Council of Churches.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator deal with any activity that a religious organization might be engaged in—any activity?

Mr. ERVIN. Any activity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am going to tread onto an area now where I know little, but I will tread on it perhaps knowing of my limited knowledge in that area. Let us hypothesize a situation in which a religious order has a distillery and produces an alcoholic beverage. Would the Senator say that business activity of the religious order should be wholly exempt from the provisions or would he say it cannot discriminate because of a person's race, religion, color, or sex?

Mr. ERVIN. I think section 702 in the bill would exempt it if it used the alcoholic beverage for the purpose of communion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am certain that is true. Again, I am talking in an area where, perhaps, I do not know as much as I should to risk the opportunity to debate it, but I believe I am right that there is a religious order that goes well beyond producing such a beverage for communion.

Mr. ERVIN. Well, I would take the hands of Caesar off it entirely, and if they wanted to carry out the injunction of St. Paul to take a little wine for the stomach's sake and to make a little wine for the stomach's sake, I would have no objection. I am trying to take those activities out from under the EEOC and put them under the religious organizations themselves.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Apparently in this area the Senator from North Carolina knows more about the subject matter than the Senator from New Jersey, so I will withdraw myself from that arena.

Mr. ERVIN. The reason why I mentioned the National Council of Churches is that I give my contribution to my church, and that church gives a contribution to the National Council of Churches, and, in a way, I might claim that they ought to act as my religious agent, but I do not think a religious agent should tell me how to vote on political matters in Congress. I make no statement about any of the other religious organizations, because I am not a member of them. I express no opinion about them. I am sure their activities are concentrated entirely in the affairs of the Lord and they do not mess too much in the affairs of Caesar.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ERVIN. I yield.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Would the Senator from North Carolina indicate whether he might be willing to reach an agreement as to a time for voting on the amendment today?

Mr. ERVIN. Yes. If it is satisfactory to my good friend the cosponsor the amendment, the Senator from Alabama, I should be glad to e on the amendment at 4:30.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Would the able manager agree to that e for a vote on it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I certainly would. If there were a possibility of ving it up by 15 minutes, there are Members of the Senate who uld appreciate it because they have other activities scheduled.

Mr. ERVIN. Just to show I am not aggravated with my good friend m New Jersey because he does not share the sound views I have o what should be done with section 702, I would agree to move the e for voting to 4 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Four o'clock. That would be agreeable to many mbers of this body. I dislike to shut this debate down by a half r, because I appreciate the opportunity to listen to the Senator n North Carolina, to learn from him, and to learn his reasons for porting an amendment that I find very objectionable.

r. ERVIN. Of course, I would find the original provision entirely in er if I thought Caesar ought to lay his political hands on the gs that belong to God, but not believing that, I cannot accept the inal wording of section 702.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, would the Senator allow o make a unanimous-consent request to effectuate the understand- we have reached?

Mr. ERVIN. On the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. May I ask the Senator whether or not time between now and 4 o'clock should be equally divided, or ld the Senator want more time?

r. ERVIN. I am going to yield in a moment to the Senator from ama, and I will leave the answer to that question to him.

ou know, the Scriptures speak about the man who sowed seed on y ground, and I would have to speak of the Senate, which is note- hy at this moment for the absence of Senators, as being stony nd. I do not care to talk too much longer on this subject for that on.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous con- that the vote on the pending amendment occur at 4:10 p.m. today, that the time—to wit, 30 minutes—between now and 4:10 p.m. be lly divided between the manager of the bill and the distinguished tor from North Carolina.

e PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

r. ERVIN. Mr. President, I have been reading the opinion of Jus- Rutledge in the Everson case. It is a very illuminating opinion e question of the necessity, under the first amendment, of keeping ch and state separate. I ask unanimous consent that Justice Rut- e's opinion, which begins on page 29 and ends on page 74, be ed in the Record as this point.

ere being no objection, the opinion was ordered to be printed in ecord as follows:

MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE, with whom MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, MR. JUSTICE JACKSON and MR. JUSTICE BURTON agree, dissenting.

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof . . . ." U.S. Const., Amend. I.

"Well aware that Almighty God hath created the mind free; . . . that to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves, is sinful and tyrannical; . . . .

"We, the General Assembly, do enact, That no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship place, or ministry whatsoever, nor shall be enforced, restrained, molested, or burthened in his body or goods, nor shall otherwise suffer, on account of his religious opinions or belief . . . ."[1]

I cannot believe that the great author of those words, or the men who made them law, could have joined in this decision. Neither so high nor so impregnable today as yesterday is the wall raised between church and state by Virginia's great statute of religious freedom and the First Amendment, now made applicable to all the states by the Fourteenth.[2] New Jersey's statute sustained is the first, if indeed it is not the second breach to be made by this Court's action. That's a third, and a fourth, and still others will be attempted, we may be sure. For just as Cochran v. Board of Education, 281 U.S. 370, has opened the way by obliquity ruling[3] for this decision, so will the two make wider the breach for a third. Thus with time the most solid freedom steadily gives way before continuing corrosive decision.

This case forces us to determine squarely for the first time[4] what was "an establishment of religion" in the First Amendment's conception: and by that measure to decide whether New Jersey's action violates its command. The facts may be stated shortly, to give setting and color to the constitutional problem.

By statute New Jersey has authorized local boards of education to provide for the transportation of children "to and from school other than a public school" except one operated for profit wholly or in part, over established public school routes, or by other means when the child lives "remote from any school."[5] The school board of Ewing Township has provided by resolution for "the transportation of pupils of Ewing to the Trenton and Pennington High Schools and Catholic schools by way of public carrier. . . ."[6]

Named parents have paid the cost of public conveyance of their children from their homes in Ewing to three public high schools and four parochial schools outside the district.[7] Semiannually the Board has reimbursed the parents from public school funds raised by general taxation. Religion is taught as part of the curriculum in each of the four private schools, as appears affirmatively by the testimony of the superintendent of parochial schools in the Diocese of Trenton.

[3] The briefs did not raise the First amendment issue. The only one presented was whether the state's action involved a public or an exclusively private function under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. See Part IV infra. On the facts, the cost of transportation here is inseparable from both religious and secular teaching in the religious school. In the Cochran case the state furnished secular textbooks only. But see text infra at note 40 et seq., and Part IV.

[4] Cf. note 3 and text Part IV, see also note 35.

[5] The statute reads: "Whenever in any district there are children living remote from any schoolhouse, the board of education of the district may make rules and contracts for the transportation of such children to and from school . . . other than a public school except such school as is operated for profit in whole or in part.

"When any school district provides any transportation for public school children to and from school other than a public school except such school as is operated for profit in whole or in part." Laws of New Jersey (1941) c. 191.

[6] The full text of the resolution is given in note 59 infra.

[7] The pupils attended were the Trenton Senior High School, the Trenton Junior High School and the Pennington High School. Ewing Township itself provides no public schools, affording only elementary public schools which stop with the eighth grade. The Ewing school board pays for both transportation and tuitions of pupils attending these schools. The four private schools, all Catholic, covered in application of the resolution, were the Trenton Catholic Boys High School and Trenton Catholic Girls High School, both secondary schools, St. Hedwig's Parochial School and St. Frances School. The Ewing board pays only for transportation to these schools, not for tuitions. So far as the record discloses, the board does not pay for or provide transportation to any other elementary school, public or private. See notes 58, 59 and text infra.

The Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey, reversing the Supreme urt's decision, 132 N. J. L. 98, 39 A. 2d 75, has held the Ewing board's action in contravention of the state constitution or statutes or of the Federal nstitution, 133 N. J. L. 350, 44 A. 2d 333. We have to consider only whether s ruling accords with the prohibition of the First Amendment implied in the process clause of the Fourteenth.

ot simply an established church, but any law respecting an establishment of gion is forbidden. The Amendment was broadly but not loosely phrased. It is compact and exact summation of its author's views formed during his long ggle for religious freedom. In Madison's own words characterizing Jefferson's for Establishing Religious Freedom, the guaranty he put in our national ter, like the bill he piloted through the Virginia Assembly, was "a Model of nical precision, and perspicuous brevity." Madison could not have confused urch" and "religion," or "an established church" and "an establishment of gion."

he Amendment's purpose was not to strike merely at the official establishment single sect, creed or religion, outlawing only a formal relation such as had ailed in England and some of the colonies. Necessarily it was to uproot all relationships. But the object was broader than separating church and state his narrow sense. It was to create a complete and permanent separation of pheres of religious activity and civil authority by comprehensively forbidding y form of public aid or support for religion. In proof the Amendment's word-nd history unite with this Court's consistent utterances whenever attention been fixed directly upon the question.

eligion" appears only once in the Amendment. But the word governs two pro-ions and governs them alike. It does not have two meanings, one narrow to d "an establishment" and another, much broader, for securing "the free exer thereof." "Thereof" brings down "religion" with its entire and exact content, ore and no less, from the first into the second guaranty, so that Congress and the states are as broadly restricted concerning the one as they are regarding other.

one would claim today that the Amendment is constricted, in "prohibiting ree exercise" of religion, to securing the free exercise of some formal or al observance, of one sect or of many. It secures all forms of religious expres-creedal, sectarian or nonsectarian, wherever and however taking place.
of conduct which trenches upon the like freedoms of others or clearly and ntly endangers the community's good order and security." For the protecpurposes of this phase of the basic freedom, street preaching, oral or by ibution of literature, has been given "the same high estate under the First dment as . . . worship in the churches and preaching from the pulpits." And is basis parents have been held entitled to send their children to private, ous schools. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510. Accordingly, daily ous education commingled with secular is "religion" within the guaranty's rehensive scope. So are religious 'training and teaching in whatever form vord connotes the broadest content, determined not by the form or formality teaching or where it occurs, but by its essential nature regardless of those ls.

eligion" has the same broad significance in the twin prohibition concerning stablishment." The Amendment was not duplicitous. "Religion" and "estab-ent" were not used in any formal or technical sense. The prohibition broadly

II.

No provision of the Constitution is more closely tied to or given content by generating history than the religious clause of the First Amendment. It is once the refined product and the terse summation of that history. The histo includes not only Madison's authorship and the proceedings before the Fi Congress, but also the long and intensive struggle for religious freedom America, more especially in Virginia,[11] of which the Amendment was the dire culmination.[12] In the documents of the times, particularly of Madison, who w leader in the Virginia struggle before he became the Amendment's sponsor, t also in the writings of Jefferson and others and in the issues which engender them is to be found irrefutable confirmation of the Amendment's sweeping co tent.

For Madison, as also for Jefferson, religious freedom was the crux of t struggle for freedom in general. Remonstrance, Par. 15, Appendix hereto. Madis was coauthor with George Mason of the religious clause in Virginia's gre Declaration of Rights of 1776. He is credited with changing it from a me statement of the principle of tolerance to the first official legislative pronounc ment that freedom of conscience and religion are inherent rights of the i dividual.[13] He sought also to have the Declaration expressly condemn the exis ing Virginia establishment.[14] But the forces supporting it were then too stron

Accordingly Madison yielded on this phase but not for long. At once he resume the fight, continuing it before succeeding legislative sessions. As a member of th General Assembly in 1779 he threw his full weight behind Jefferson's histor Bill for Establishing Religious Freedom. That bill was a prime phase of Jeffe son's broad program of democratic reform undertaken on his return from th Continental Congress in 1776 and submitted for the General Assembly's co sideration in 1779 as his proposed revised Virginia code.[15] With Jefferson's d parture for Europe in 1784, Madison became the Bill's prime sponsor.[16] Enac ment failed in successive legislatures from its introduction in June, 1779, unti its adoption in January, 1786. But during all this time the fight for religiou freedom moved forward in Virginia on various fronts with growing intensity Madison led throughout, against Patrick Henry's powerful opposing leadershi until Henry was elected governor in November, 1784.

The climax came in the legislative struggle of 1784–1785 over the Assessmen Bill. See Supplemental Appendix hereto. This was nothing more nor less than a ing measure for the support of religion, designed to revive the payment of es suspended since 1777. So long as it singled out a particular sect for pref- nce it incurred the active and general hostility of dissentient groups. It broadened to include them, with the result that some subsided temporarily in r opposition.[17] As altered, the bill gave to each taxpayer the privilege of desig- ing which church should receive his share of the tax. In default of designation legislature applied it to pious uses.[18] But what is of the utmost significance ", "in its final form the bill left the taxpayer the option of giving his tax to cation."[19] adison was unyielding at all times, opposing with all h' vigor the general non-discriminatory as he had the earlier particular and discriminatory as- ments proposed. The modified Assessment Bill passed second reading in Decem- 1784 and was all but enacted. Madison and his followers, however, manen- d deferment of final consideration until November, 1785. And before the As- bly reconvened in the fall he issued his historic Memorial and Remon- nce.[20]

his is Madison's complete, though not his only, interpretation of religious ty.[21] It is a broadside attack upon all forms of "establishment" of religion, general and particular, nondiscriminatory or selective. Reflecting not only many legislative conflicts over the Assessment Bill and the Bill for Estab- ng Religious Freedom but also, for example, the struggles for religious porations and the continued maintenance of the glebes, the Remonstrance once the most concise and the most accurate statement of the views of First Amendment's author concerning what is "an establishment of religion." use it behooves us in the dimming distance of time not to lose sight of he and his coworkers had in mind when, by a single sweeping stroke of en, they forbade an establishment of religion and secured its free exercise. ext of the Remonstrance is appended at the end of this opinion for its wider nt reference, together with a copy of the bill against which it was directed. e Remonstrance, stirring up a storm of popular protest, killed the Assess- Bill.[22] It collapsed in committee shortly before Christmas, 1785. With this way was cleared at last for enactment of Jefferson's Bill for Establishing ious Freedom. Madison promptly drove it through in January of 1786, years from the time it was first introduced. This dual victory substantially l the fight over establishments, setting the issue against them. See note 33. e next year Madison became a member of the Constitutional Convention. Its done, he fought valiantly to secure the ratification of its great product in nia as elsewhere, and nowhere else more effectively.[23] Madison was certain s own mind that under the Constitution "there is not a shadow of right in general government to intermeddle with religion"[24] and that "this subject r the honor of America, perfectly free and unshackled. a Bill of Rights, including a specific guaranty of religious freedom, and Virgi with other states, ratified the Constitution on this assurance.[26]

Ratification thus accomplished, Madison was sent to the first Congress. Th he went at once about performing his pledge to establish freedom for the nat as he had done in Virginia. Within a little more than three years from legislative victory at home he had proposed and secured the submission ratification of the First Amendment as the first article of our Bill of Righ

All the great instruments of the Virginia struggle for religious liberty became warp and woof of our constitutional tradition, not simply by the cou of history, but by the common unifying force of Madison's life, thought sponsorship. He epitomized the whole of that tradition in the Amendment s pact, but nonetheless comprehensive, phrasing.

As the Remonstrance discloses throughout, Madison opposed every fo and degree of official relation between religion and civil authority. For religion was a wholly private matter beyond the scope of civil power either restrain or to support.[27] Denial or abridgement of religious freedom was violation of rights both of conscience and of natural equality. State aid was less obnoxious or destructive to freedom and to religion itself than other for of state interference. "Establishment" and "free exercise" were correlative a coextensive ideas, representing only different facets of the single great and fund mental freedom. The Remonstrance, following the Virginia statute's exam referred to the history of religious conflicts and the effects of all sorts of esta lishments, current and historical, to suppress religion's free exercise. W Jefferson, Madison believed that to tolerate any fragment of establishment wo be by so much to perpetuate restraint upon that freedom. Hence he sought tear out the institution not partially but root and branch, and to bar its retu forever.

In no phase was he more unrelentingly absolute than in opposing state suppo or aid by taxation. Not even "three pence" contribution was thus to be exact from any citizen for such a purpose. Remonstrance, Par. 3.[28] Tithes had be the lifeblood of establishment before and after other compulsions disappeare Madison and his coworkers made no exceptions or abridgments to the comple separation they created. Their objection was not to small tithes. It was to a tithes whatsoever. "If it were lawful to impose a small tax for religion, t admission would pave the way for oppressive levies." [29] Not the amount but "t principle of assessment was wrong." And the principle was as much to preve
"the interference of law in religion" as to restrain religious intervention political matters.[30] In this field the authors of our freedom would not tolera
"the first experiment on our liberties" or "wait till usurped power had streng religious exercises. But if more were called for, the debates in the First gress and this Court's consistent expressions, whenever it has touched on the y contrast with the Virginia history, the congressional debates on consideran of the Amendment reveal only sparse discussion, reflecting the fact that the ential issues had been settled.[33] Indeed the matter had become so well underod as to have been taken for granted in all but formal phrasing. Hence, the y enlightening reference shows concern, not to preserve any power to use lic funds in aid of religion, but to prevent the Amendment from outlawing ate gifts inadvertently by virtue of the breadth of its wording.[34] In the gin are noted also the principal decisions in which expressions of this Court

As is pointed out above, note 3, and in Part IV infra, Cochran v. Board of Education, U.S. 370, was not such a case.

See text supra at notes 24, 25. Madison, of course, was but one of many holding such s but nevertheless agreeing to the common understanding for adoption of a Bill of s in order to remove all doubt engendered by the absence of explicit guaranatees in riginal Constitution.

1791 the great fight over establishments had ended, although some vestiges remained and later, even in Virginia. The glebes, for example, were not sold there until 1802. ckenrode, 147. Fixing an exact date for "disestablishment" is almost impossible, since rocess was piecemeal. Although Madison failed in having the Virginia Bill of Rights re explicitly against establishment in 1776, cf. note 14 and text supra, in 1777 the for support of the Anglican clergy was suspended. It was never resumed. Eckenrode s: "This act, in effect, destroyed the establishment. Many dates have been given for d, but it really came on January 1, 1777, when the act suspending the payment of became effective. This was not seen at the time. . . . But in freeing almost half of axpayers from the burden of the state religion, the state religion was at an end.
ly could be forced to support it, and an attempt to levy tithes upon Anglicans alone be to recruit the ranks of dissent." P. 53. See also pp. 61, 64. The question of assess-however was revived "with far more strength than ever, in the summer of 1784."
4. It would seem more factual therefore to fix the time of disestablishment as of ber, 1785–January, 1786, when the issue in large was finally settled.

t one point the wording was proposed: "No religion shall be established by law, nor the equal rights of conscience be infringed." 1 Annals of Congress 729. Cf. note 27.
sentative Huntington of Connecticut feared this might be construed to prevent al enforcement of private pledges. He stated "that he feared . . . that the words be taken in such latitude as to be extremely hurtful to the cause of religion. He stood the amendment to mean what had been expressed by the gentleman from ia; but others might find it convenient to put another construction upon it. The lers of their congregations to the Eastward were maintained by the contributions se who belonged to their society; the expense of building meeting houses was con-ed in the same manner. These things were regulated by by-laws. If an action was ht before a Federal Court on any of these cases, the person who had neglected to m his engagements could not be compelled to do it; for a support of ministers or ng of places of worship might be construed into a religious establishment." 1 Annals Leupp, 210 U.S. 50. The Court distinguished sharply between appropriations from religion and civil power which the first Amendment commands is through of the taxing power to support religion, religious establishments having a ligious foundation whatever their form or special religious function.

Does New Jersey's action furnish support for religion by use of the taxi power? Certainly it does, if the test remains undiluted as Jefferson and Madis made it, that money taken by taxation from one is not to be used or given support another's religious training or belief, or indeed one's own.[38] Today then the furnishing of "contributions of money for the propagation of opini which he disbelieves" is the forbidden exaction; and the prohibition is absol for whatever measure brings that consequence and whatever amount may sought or given to that end.

The funds used here were raised by taxation. The Court does not dispute, could it, that their use does in fact give aid and encouragement to religi instruction. It only concludes that this aid is not "support" in law. But Madis and Jefferson were concerned with aid and support in fact, not as a legal c clusion "entangled in precedents." Remonstrance, Par. 3. Here parents pay mon to send their children to parochial schools and funds raised by taxation are us to reimburse them. This not only helps the children to get to school and t parents to send them. It aids them in a substantial way to get the very thi which they are sent to the particular school to secure, namely, religious traini and teaching.

Believers of all faiths, and others who do not express their feeling towa ultimate issues of existence in any creedal form, pay the New Jersey tax. Wh the money so raised is used to pay for transportation to religious schools, t Catholic taxpayer to the extent of his proportionate share pays for the tra portation of Lutheran, Jewish and otherwise religiously affiliated children receive their non-Catholic religious instruction. Their parents likewise pay p portionately for the transportation of Catholic children to receive Catholic i struction. Each thus contributes to "the propagation of opinions which he dis lieves" in so far as their religions differ, as do others who accept no creed wit regard to those differences. Each thus pays taxes also to support the teaching his own religion, an exaction equally forbidden since it denies "the comfortab liberty" of giving one's contribution to the particular agency of instruction approves.[39]

New Jersey's action therefore exactly fits the type of exaction and the ki of evil at which Madison and Jefferson struck. Under the test they framed cannot be said that the cost of transportation is no part of the cost of edu tion or of the religious instruction given. That it is a substantial and a necessa element is shown most plainly by the continuing and increasing demand f the state to assume it. Nor is there pretense that it relates only to the secul instruction given in religious schools or that any attempt is or could be ma toward allocating proportional shares as between the secular and the religio instruction. It is precisely because the instruction is religious and relates to particular faith, whether one or another, that parents send their children religious schools under the Pierce doctrine. And the very purpose of the stat contribution is to defray the cost of conveying the pupil to the place where will receive not simply secular, but also and primarily religious, teaching a guidance.

Indeed the view is sincerely avowed by many of various faiths,[4] that the bas purpose of all education is or should be religious, that the secular cannot be a adequacy of public or secular education and the necessity for sending the chi justification, there is undeniably an admixture of religious with secular tea

n all such institutions. That is the very reason for their being. Certainly for oses of constitutionality we cannot contradict the whole basis of the ethical educational convictions of people who believe in religious schooling.

t this very admixture is what was disestablished when the First Amend- forbade "an establishment of religion." This would be true, whether or not secular activities were d with the religious. If such an appropriation could not stand, then it is to see how one becomes valid for the same thing upon the more extended of daily instruction. Surely constitutionality does not turn on where or how the mixed teaching occurs.

we are told that the New Jersey statute is valid in its present application e the appropriation is for a public, not a private purpose, namely, the pro- of education, and the majority accept this idea in the conclusion that all e here is "public welfare legislation." would seem a strange ruling that a "reasonable," that is, presumably a small, license ot be placed upon the exercise of the right of religious instruction, yet that under relative constitutional guaranty against "an establishment" taxes may be levied d to aid and promote religious instruction, if only the amounts so used are small. Remon- Par. 9; II Madison 183, 188.

For then there could be no possible objection to more extensive support of r gious education by New Jersey.

If the fact alone be determinative that religious schools are engaged in edu tion, thus promoting the general and individual welfare, together with the le lature's decision that the payment of public moneys for their aid makes th work a public function, then I can see no possible basis, except one of dubi legislative policy, for the state's refusal to make full appropriation for supp of private, religious schools, just as is done for public instruction. There co not be, on that basis, valid constitutional objection.[42]

Of course paying the cost of transportation promotes the general cause education and the welfare of the individual. So does paying all other items educational expense. And obviously, as the majority say, it is much too lar urge that legislation designed to facilitate the opportunities of children to see a secular education serves no public purpose. Our nation-wide system of pu education rests on the contrary view, as do all grants in aid of education, pub or private, which is not religious in character.

These things are beside the real question. They have no possible material except to obscure the all-pervading, inescapable issue. Cf. Cochran v. Board Education, supra. Stripped of its religious phase, the case presents no substan federal question. Ibid. The public function argument, by casting the issue in ter of promoting the general cause of education and the welfare of the individu ignores the religious factor and its essential connection with the transportati thereby leaving out the only vital element in the case. So of course do the "pub welfare" and "social legislation" ideas, for they come to the same thing.

We have here then one substantial issue, not two. To say that New Jerse appropriation and her use of the power of taxation for raising the funds app priated are not for public purposes but are for private ends, is to say that th are for the support of religion and religious teaching. Conversely, to say that th are for public purposes is to say that they are not for religious ones.

This is precisely for the reason that education which includes religious tra ing and teaching, and its support, have been made matters of private right a function, not public, by the very terms of the First Amendment. That is the eff not only in its guaranty of religion's free exercise, but also in the prohibi of establishments. It was on this basis of the private character of the fun of religious education that this Court held parents entitled to send their childr to private, religious schools. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, supra. Now it do in effect that the appropriation of public funds to defray part of the cost of atte ing those schools is for a public purpose. If so, I do not understand why the sta cannot go farther or why this case approaches the verge of its power.

In truth this view contradicts the whole purpose and effect of the Fir Amendment as heretofore conceived. The "public functions"—"public welfare"
"social legislation" argument seeks, in Madisons words, to "employ Religi [that is, here religious education] as an engine of Civil policy." Remonstran is not because religious teaching does not promote the public or the indi- l's welfare but because neither is furthered when the state promotes ous education, that the Constitution forbids it to do so. Both legislatures ourts are bound by that distinction. In failure to observe it lies the fallacy "public function"—"social legislation" argument, a fallancy facilitated sy transference of the argument's basing from due process unrelated to eligious aspect to the First Amendment.

no declaration that a gift of public money to religious uses will promote eneral or individual welfare, or the cause of education generally, can tive bodies overcome the Amendment's bar. In these conflicts whatever success has been obtained it has been upon contention that by providing the transportation the general cause of educati the general welfare, and the welfare of the individual will be forwarded: he that the matter lies within the realm of public function, for legislative de mination.[48] State courts have divided upon the issue, some taking the vi that only the individual, others that the institution receives the benefit.[49] A f have recognized that this dichtomoy is false, that both in fact are aided.[50]

The majority here does not accept in terms any of those views. But neit does it deny that the individual or the school, or indeed both, are benefi directly and substantially.[51] To do so would cut the ground from under public function—social legislation thesis. On the contrary, the opinion concec that the children are aided by being helped to the religious schooling. By c verse necessary implication as well as by the absence of express denial, it ma be taken to concede also that the school is helped to reach the child with religious teaching. The religious enterprise is common to both, as in the intere of having transportation for its religious purposes provided.

Notwithstanding the recognition that this two-way aid is given and the a sence of any denial that religious teaching is thus furthered, the Court c cludes that the aid so given is not "support" of religion. It is rather only s port of education as such, without reference to its religious content, and th becomes public welfare legislation. To this elision of the religious elements fr the case is added gloss in two respects, one that the aid extended partakes the nature of a safety measure, the other that failure to provide it would ma the state unneutral in religious matters, discriminating against or hamperi such children concerning public benefits all others receive.

As will be noted, the one gloss is contradicted by the facts of record and t other is of whole cloth with the "public function" argument's excision of religious factor.[52] But most important is that this approach, if valid, suppli a ready method for nullifying the Amendment's guaranty, not only for this c and others involving small grants in aid for religious education, but equa for larger ones. The only thing needed will be for the Court again to transpla the "public welfare—public function" view from its proper nonreligious d process bearing to First Amendment application, holding that religious edu tion is not "supported" though it may be aided by the appropriation, and th the cause of education generally is furthered by helping the pupil to secu that type of training.

This is not therefore just a little case over bus fares. In paraphrase of Mad son, distant as it may be in its present form from a complete establishment religion, it differs from it only in degree; and is the first step in that direction Par. 9.[53] Today as in his time "the same authority which can force a citizen ontribute three pence only . . . for the support of any one [religious] establishment, may force him" to pay more; or "to conform to any other establishment in all cases whatsoever." And now, as then, "either . . . we must say, that he will of the Legislature is the only measure of their authority; and that in he plenitude of this authority, they may sweep away all our fundamental ights; or, that they are bound to leave this particular right untouched and acred." Remonstrance, Par. 15.

The realm of religious training and belief remains, as the Amendment made it, he kingdom of the individual man and his God. It should be kept inviolately rivate, not "entangled . . . in precedents" [54] or confounded with what legislatures legitimately may take over into the public domain.

No one conscious of religious values can be unsympathetic toward the burden hich our constitutional separation puts on parents who desire religious instruction mixed with secular for their children. They pay taxes for others' ildren's education, at the same time the added cost of instruction for their vn. Nor can one happily see benefits denied to children which others receive, cause in conscience they or their parents for them desire a different kind of aining others do not demand.

But if those feelings should prevail, there would be an end to our historic constitutional policy and command. No more unjust or discriminatory in fact is it deny attendants at religious schools the cost of their transportation than is to deny them tuitions, sustenance for their teachers, or any other educational pense which others receive at public cost. Hardship in fact there is which ne can blink. But, for assuring to those who undergo it the greater, the most mprehensive freedom, it is one written by design and firm intent into our sic law.

Of course discrimination in the legal sense does not exist. The child attending e religious school has the same right as any other to attend the public school. it he foregoes exercising it because the same guaranty which assures this eedom forbids the public school or any agency of the state to give or aid him in curing the religious instruction he seeks.

Were he to accept the common school, he would be the first to protest the aching there of any creed or faith not his own. And it is precisely for the reason at their atmosphere is wholly secular that children are not sent to public hools under the Pierce doctrine. But that is a constitutional necessity, because have staked the very existence of our country on the faith that complete separation between the state and religion is best for the state and best for religion. monstrance, Par. 8, 12.

That policy necessarily entails hardship upon persons who forego the right educational advantages the state can supply in order to secure others it is cluded from giving. Indeed this may hamper the parent and the child forced by science to that choice. But it does not make the state unneutral to withhold at the Constitution forbids it to give. On the contrary it is only by observing prohibition rigidly that the state can maintain its neutrality and avoid partisanship in the dissensions inevitable when sect opposes sect over demands public moneys to further religious education, teaching or training in any m or degree, directly or indirectly. Like St. Paul's freedom, religious liberty th a great price must be bought. And for those who exercise it most fully, by isting upon religious education for their children mixed with secular, by the ms of our Constitution the price is greater than for others.

The problem then cannot be cast in terms of legal discrimination or its absence. This would be true, even though the state in giving aid should treat all igious instruction alike. Thus, if the present statute and its application were wn to apply equally to all religious schools of whatever faith,[55] yet in the t of our tradition it could not stand. For then the adherent of one creed still uld pay for the support of another, the childless taxpayer with others more tunate. Then too there would seem to be no bar to making appropriations for transportation and other expenses of children attending public or other secular schools, after hours in separate places and classes for their exclusively religious instruction. The person who embraces no creed also would be forced to pay for teaching what he does not believe. Again, it was the furnishing of "contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves" that the fathers outlawed. That consequence and effect are not removed by multiplying to all-inclusiveness the sects for which support is exacted. The Constitution requires, not comprehensive identification of state with religion, but complete separation.

[54] Thus each brief filed here by the supporters of New Jersey's action, see note 47, not only es strongly on Cochran v. Board of Education, 281 U.S. 370, but either explicitly or effect maintains that it is controlling in the present case.

[55] See text at notes 17–19 supra and authorities cited; also Foote, Sketches of Virginia 50) c. XV. Madison's entire thesis, as reflected throughout the Remonstrance and in other writings, as well as in his opposition to the final form of the Assessment Bill, see 43, was altogether incompatible with acceptance of general and "nondiscriminatory" port. See Brant, C. XII.

VI.

Short treatment will dispose of what remains. Whatever might be said of some other application of New Jersey's statute, the one made here has no semblance of bearing as a safety measure or, indeed, for securing expeditious conveyance. The transportation supplied is by public conveyance, subject to all the hazards and delays of the highway and the streets incurred by the public generally in going about its multifarious business.

Nor is the case comparable to one of furnishing fire or police protection or access to public highways. These things are matters of common right, part of the general need for safety.[56] Certainly the fire department must not stand idly by while the church burns. Nor is this reason why the State should pay the expense of transportation or other items of the cost of religious education.[57]

Needless to add, we have no such case as Green v. Frazier, 253 U.S. 233, or Carmichael v. Southern Coal Co., 301 U.S. 495, which dealt with matters wholly unrelated to the First Amendment, involving only situations where the "public function" issue was determinative.

I have chosen to place my dissent upon the broad ground I think decisive, though strictly speaking the case might be decided on narrower issues. The New Jersey statute might be held invalid on its face for the exclusion of children who attend private, profitmaking schools.[58] I cannot assume, as does the majority, that the New Jersey courts would write off this explicit limitation from the statute. Moreover, the resolution by which the statute was applied expressly limits its benefits to students of public and Catholic schools.[59] There is no showing that there are no other private or religious schools in this populous district.[60] I do not think it can be assumed there were none.[61] But in the review I have taken, it is unnecessary to limit grounding to these matters.

[56] The protections are of a nature which does not require appropriations specially made from the public treasury and earmarked, as is New Jersey's here, particularly for religious institutions or uses. The First Amendment does not exclude religious property or activities from protection against disorder or the ordinary accidental incidents of community life. It forbids support, not protection from interference or destruction.

It is a matter not frequently recalled that President Grant opposed tax exemption of religious property as leading to a violation of the principle of separation of church and state. See President Grant's Seventh Annual Message to Congress, December 7, 1875, in IX Messages and Papers of the Presidents (1897) 4288, 4289. Garfield, in a letter accepting the nomination for the presidency, said: ". . . it would be unjust to our people, and dangerous to our institutions, to apply any portion of the revenues of the nation, or of the States, to the support of sectarian schools. The separation of the Church and the State in everything relating to taxation should be absolute." II The Works of James Abram Garfield (ed. by Hinsdale, 1883) 783.

[57] Neither do we have here a case of ratemaking by which a public utility extends reduced fares to all school children, including patrons of religious schools. Whether or not [illegible] a compulsion upon a private utility to extend such an advantage would be valid, or its extension by a municipally owned system, we are not required to consider. In the former instance, at any rate, and generally if not always the latter, the vice of using the taxing power to raise funds for the support of religion would not be present.

[illegible] children should be excluded simply because the only school [illegible] for them to attend in view of geographic or other situation might be one conducted in whole or part for profit. Cf. note 5.

Two great drives are constantly in motion to abridge, in the name of education, ie complete division or religion and civil authority which our forefathers made. ne is to introduce religious education and observances into the public schools. he other, to obtain public funds for the aid and support of various private ligious schools. See Johnson, The Legal Status of Church-State Relationships the United States (1934); Thayer, Religion in Public Education (1947), Note 941) 50 Yale L.J. 917. In my opinion both avenues were closed by the Constitu- on. Neither should be opened by this Court. The matter is not one of quantity, be measured by the amount of money expended. Now as in Madison's day it is ie of principle, to keep separate the separate spheres as the First Amendment ew them; to prevent the first experiment upon our liberties; and to keep the estion from becoming entangled in corrosive precedents. We should not be less rict to keep strong and untarnished the one side of the shield of religious free- m than we have been of the other.

The judgment should be reversed.

APPENDIX

Memorial and remonstrance against religious assessments

To the Honorable the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia. A morial and Remonstrance.

We, the subscribers, citizens of the said Commonwealth, having taken into ious consideration, a Bill printed by order of the last session of General Assem- , entitled "A Bill establishing a provision for Teachers of the Christian ligion," and conceiving that the same, if finally armed with the sanctions of a , will be a dangerous abuse of power, are bound as faithful members of a free te, to remonstrate against it, and to declare the reasons by which we are deter- ned. We remonstrate against the said Bill.

. Because we hold it for a fundamental and undeniable truth, "that Religion the duty which we owe to our Creator and the Manner of discharging it, can be ected only by reason and conviction, not by force or violence." [62] The Religion n of every man must be left to the conviction and conscience of every man; l it is the right of every man to exercise it as these may dictate. This right in its nature an unalienable right. It is unalienable; because the opinions of n, depending only on the evidence contemplated by their own minds, cannot ow the dictates of other men: It is unalienable also; because what is here a ht towards men, is a duty towards the Creator. It is the duty of every man to der to the Creator such homage, and such only, as he believes to be acceptable him. This duty is precedent both in order of time and degree of obligation, to claims of Civil Society. Before any man can be considered as a member of il Society, he must be considered as a subject of the Governor of the Universe: d if a member of Civil Society, who enters into any subordinate Association, st always do it with a reservation of his duty to the general authority; much re must every man who becomes a member of any particular Civil Society, do vith a saving of his allegiance to the Universal Sovereign. We maintain there- e that in matters of Religion, no man's right is abridged by the institution of il Society, and that Religion is wholly exempt from its cognizance. True it is, t no other rule exists, by which any question may divide a Society, can be mately determined, but the will of the majority; but it is also true, that the jority; may trespass on the rights of the minority.

. Because if religion be exempt from the authority of the Society at large, l less can it be subject to that of the Legislative Body. The latter are but the atures and vicegerents of the former. Their jurisdiction is both derivative limited: it is limited with regard to the coordinate departments, more nec- rily is limited with regard to the constituents. The preservation of a free gov- ment requires not merely, that the metes and bounds which separate each de- tment of power may be invariably maintained; but more especially, that ther of them be suffered to overleap the great Barrier which defends the rights part from the Court's admission that New Jersey's present action approaches the verge er power, it would seem that a statute, ordinance or resolution which on its face sin- out one sect only by name for enjoyment of the same advantages as public schools or students should be held discriminatory on its face by virtue of that fact alone, unless re positively shown that no other sects sought or were available to receive the same ntages.

Decl. Rights, Art : 16 [Note in the original.]

of the people. The Rulers who are guilty of such an encroachment, exceed the commission from which they derive their authority, and are Tyrants. The People who submit to it are governed by laws made neither by themselves, nor by an authority derived from them, and are slaves.

3. Because, it is proper to take alarm at the first experiment on our liberties. We hold this prudent jealousy to be the first duty of citizens, and one of [the] noblest characteristics of the late Revolution. The freemen of America did not wait till usurped power had strengthened itself by exercise, and entangled the question precedents. They saw all the consequences in the principle, and they avoided the consequences by denying the principle. We revere this lesson too much, soon to forget it. Who does not see that the same authority which can establish Christianity, in exclusion of all other Religions, may establish with the same ease any particular sect of Christians, in exclusion of all other Sects? That the same authority which can force a citizen to contribute three pence only of his property for the support of any one establishment, may force him to conform to any other establishment in all cases whatsoever?

4. Because, the bill violates that equality which ought to be the basis of every law, and which is more indispensible, in proportion as the validity or expediency of any law is more liable to be impeached. If "all men are by nature equally free and independent." [63] all men are to be considered as entering into Society on equal conditions; as relinquishing no more, and therefore retaining no less, one than another, of their natural rights. Above all are they to be considered as retaining an "equal title to the free exercise of Religion according to the dictates of conscience" [64] Whilst we assert for ourselves a freedom to embrace, to profess and to observe the Religion which we believe to be of divine origin, we cannot deny an equal freedom to those whose minds have not yet yielded to the evidence which has convinced us. If this freedom be abused, it is an offence against God, not against man: To God, therefore, not to men, must an account of it be rendered. As the Bill violates equality by subjecting some to peculiar burdens; so it violates the same principle, by granting to others peculiar exemptions. Are the Quakers and Menonists the only sects who think a compulsive support of their religions unnecessary and unwarrantable? Can their piety alone be intrusted with the care of public worship? Ought their Religions to be endowed above all others, with extraordinary privileges, by which proselytes may be enticed from all others? We think too favorably of the justice and good sense of these denominations, to believe that they either covet preeminencies over their fellow citizens, or that they will be seduced by them, from the common opposition to the measure.

5. Because the bill implies either that the Civil Magistrate is a competent Judge of Religious truth; or that he may employ Religion as an engine of Civil policy. The first is an arrogant pretension falsified by the contradictory opinions of Rulers in all ages, and throughout the world: The second and unhallowed perversion of the means of salvation.

6. Because the establishment proposed by the Bill is not requisite for the support of the Christian Religion. To say that it is, is a contradiction to the Christian Religion itself; for every page of it disavows a dependence on the powers of this world: it is a contradiction to fact; for it is known that this Religion both existed and flourished, not only without the support of human laws, but in spite of every opposition from them; and not only during the period of miraculous aid, but long after it had been left to its own evidence, and the ordinary care of Providence: Nay, it is a contradiction in terms; for a Religion not invented by human policy, must have pre-existed and been supported, before it was established by human policy. It is moreover to weaken in those who profess this Religion a pious confidence in its inmate excellence, and the patronage of its Author; and to foster in those who still reject it, a suspicion that its friends are too conscious of its fallacies, to trust to its own merits.

7. Because experience witnesseth that ecclesiastical establishments, instead of maintaining the purity and efficacy of Religion, have had a contrary operation. During almost fifteen centuries, has the legal establishment of Christianity been on trial. What have been its fruits? More or less in all places, pride and indolence in the Clergy: ignorance and servility in the laity: in both, superstition, bigotry and persecution. Enquire of the Teachers of Christianity for the ages in which it appeared in its greatest lustre: those of every sect, point to the ages prior to its incorporation with Civil policy. Propose a restoration of this primitive state in which its Teachers depended on the voluntary rewards of eir flocks; many of them predict its downfall. On which side ought their stimony to have greatest weight, when for or when against their interest?

s. Because the establishment in question is not necessary for the support of vil Government. If it be urged as necessary for the support of Civil Govern-nt only as it is a means of supporting Religion, and it be not necessary for e latter purpose, it cannot be necessary for the former. If Religion be not thin [the] cognizance of Civil Government, how can its legal establishment said to be necessary to civil Government? What influence in fact have clesiastical establishments had on Civil Society? In some instances they have en seen to erect a spiritual tyranny on the ruins of Civil authority; in many stances they have been seen upholding the thrones of political tyranny; in instance have they been seen the guardians of the liberties of the people.
lers who wished to subvert the public liberty may have found an established rgy convenient auxiliaries. A just government, instituted to secure & per-tuate it, needs them not. Such a government will be best supported by pro-ting every citizen in the enjoyment of his Religion with the same equal d which protects his person and his property; by neither invading the equal hts of any Sect, nor suffering any Sect to invade those of another.
. Because the proposed establishment is a departure from that generous policy, ich, offering an asylum to the persecuted and oppressed of every Nation and ligion, promised a lustre to our country, and an accession to the number of citizens. What a melancholy mark is the Bill of sudden degeneracy? Instead holding forth an asylum to the persecuted, it is itself a signal of persecution.
legrades from the equal rank of Citizens all those whose opinions in Religion not bend to those of the Legislative authority. Distant as it may be, in its sent form, from the Inquisition it differs from it only in degree. The one is first step, the other the last in the career of intolerance. The magnanimous ferer under this cruel scourge in foreign Regions, must view the Bill as a con on our Coast, warning him to seek some other haven, where liberty and lanthrophy in their due extent may offer a more certain repose from his ibles.
). Because, it will have a like tendency to banish our Citizens. The allurents presented by other situations are every day thinning their number. To eradd a fresh motive to emigration, by revoking the liberty which they now oy, would be the same species of folly which has dishonoured and depopu-d flourishing kingdoms.
1. Because, it will destroy that moderation and harmony which the forbear e of our laws to intermeddle with Religion, has produced amongst its several
s. Torrents of blood have been spilt in the old world, by vain attempts of the ular arm to extinguish Religious discord, by proscribing all difference in igious opinions. Time has at length revealed the true remedy. Every relax-n of narrow and rigorous policy, wherever it has been tried, has been found ssuage the disease. The American Theatre has exhibited proofs, that equal complete liberty, if it does not wholly eradicate it, sufficiently destroys its ignant influence on the health and prosperity of the State. If with the salu-effects of this system under our own eyes, we begin to contract the bonds Religious freedom, we know no name that will too severely reproach our folly.
least let warning be taken at the first fruits of the threatened innovation.
very appearance of the Bill has transformed that "Christian forbearance," and charity," which of late mutually prevailed, into animosities and jealous-which may not soon be appeased. What mischiefs may not be dreaded should enemy to the public quiet be armed with the force of a law?
2. Because, the policy of the bill is adverse to the diffusion of the light of istianity. The first wish of those who enjoy this precious gift, ought to be it may be imparted to the whole race of mankind. Compare the number of e who have as yet received it with the number still remaining under the inion of false Religions; and how small is the former! Does the policy of the tend to lessen the disproportion? No; it at once discourages those who are ngers to the light of [revelation] from coming into the Region of it; and ntenances, by example the nations who continue in darkness, in shutting out e who might convey it to them. Instead of levelling as far as possible, every cle to the victorious progress of truth, the Bill with an ignoble and unchristimidity would circumscribe it, with a wall of defense against the encroach-t of error.

Art. 16. [Note in the original.]

13. Because attempts to enforce by legal sanctions, acts obnoxious to so great a proportion of Citizens, tend to enervate the laws in general, and to slacken the bands of Society. If it be difficult to execute any law which is not generally deemed necessary or salutary, what must be the case where it is deemed invalid and dangerous? and what may be the effect of so striking an example if impotency in the Government, on its general authority.

14. Because a measure of such singular magnitude and delicacy ought not to be imposed, without the clearest evidence that it is called for by a majority of citizens: and no satisfactory method is yet proposed by which the voice of the majority in this case may be determined, or its influence secured. "The people of the respective counties are indeed requested to signify their opinion respecting the adoption of the Bill to the next Session of Assembly." But the representation must be made equal, before the voice either of the Representatives or of the Counties, will be that of the people. Our hope is that neither of the former will after due consideration, espouse the dangerous principle of the Bill. Should the event disappoint us, it will still leave us in full confidence, that a fair appeal to the latter will reverse the sentence against our liberties.

15. Because, finally, "the equal right of every citizen to the free exercise of his Religion according to the dictates of conscience" is held by the same tenure with all our other rights. If we recur to its origin, it is equally the gift of nature; if we weigh its importance, it cannot be less dear to us; if we consult the Declaration of those rights which pertain to the good people of Virginia, as the "basis and foundation of Government." [a] It is enumerated with equal solemnity, or rather studied emphasis. Either then, we must say, that the will of the Legislature is the only measure of their authority; and that in the plenitude of this authority, they may sweep away all our fundamental rights; or, that they are bound to leave this particular right untouched and sacred: Either we must say, that they may control the freedom of the press, may abolish the trial by jury, may swallow up the Executive and Judiciary Powers of the State; nay that they may despoil us of our very right of suffrage, and erect themselves into an independent and hereditary assembly: or we must say, that they have no authority to enact into law the Bill under consideration. We the subscribers say, that the General Assembly of this Commonwealth have no such authority: And that no effort may be omitted on our part against so dangerous an usurpation, we oppose to it, this remonstrance; earnestly praying, as we are in duty bound, that the Supreme Lawgiver of the Universe, by illuminating those to whom it is addressed, may on the one hand, turn their councils from every act which would affront his holy prerogative, or violate the trust committed to them: and on the other, guide them into every measure which may be worthy of his [blessing, may re]dound to their own praise, and may establish more firmly the liberties, the prosperity, and the Happiness of the Commonwealth.

II Madison, 183–191.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPENDIX

A bill establishing a provision for teachers of the Christian religion

Whereas the general diffusion of Christian knowledge hath a natural tendency to correct the morals of men, restrain their vices, and preserve the peace of society; which cannot be effected without a competent provision for learned teachers, who may be thereby enabled to devote their time and attention to the duty of instructing such citizens, as from their circumstances and want of education, cannot otherwise attain such knowledge; and it is judged that such provision may be made by the Legislature, without counteracting the liberal principle heretofore adopted and intended to be preserved by abolishing all distinctions of pre-eminence amongst the different societies or communities of Christians;

Be it therefore enacted by the General Assembly, That for the support of Christian teachers, — per centum on the amount, or — in the pound on the sum payable for tax on the property within this Commonwealth, is hereby assessed and shall be paid by every person chargeable with the said tax at the time the same shall become due; and the Sheriffs of the several Counties shall have power to levy and collect the same in the same manner and under the like restrictions and limitations, as are or may be prescribed by the laws for raising the Revenues of this State.

[a] Decl. Rights-title. [Note in the original.]

And be it enacted, That for every sum so paid, the Sheriff or Collector shall give receipt, expressing therein to what society of Christians the person from whom may receive the same shall direct the money to be paid, keeping a distinct count thereof in his books. The Sheriff of every County, shall, on or before the y of—in every year, return to the Court, upon oath, two alphabetical lists of the yments to him made, distinguishing in columns opposite to the names of the rsons who shall have paid the same, the society to which the money so paid s by them appropriated; and one column for the names where no appropriation all be made. One of which lists, after being recorded in a book to be kept for at purpose, shall be filed by the Clerk in his office; the other shall by the Sheriff fixed up in the Court-house, there to remain for the inspection of all concerned.
d the Sheriff, after deducting five per centum for the collection, shall forth-th pay to such person or persons as shall be appointed to receive the same the Vestry, Elders, or Directors, however denominated of each such society, e sum so stated to be due to that society; or in default thereof, upon the mon of such person or persons to the next or any succeeding Court, execution shall awarded for the same against the Sheriff and his security, his and their exe-ors or administrator: provided that ten days previous notice be given of such tion. And upon every such execution, the Officer serving the same shall proceed mmediate sale of the estate taken, and shall not accept of security for payment the end of three months, nor to have the goods forthcoming at the day of sale:
his better direction wherein, the Clerk shall endorse upon every such execution t no security of any kind shall be taken.

And be it further enacted, That the money to be raised by virtue of this Act, ll be by the Vestries, Elders, or Directors of each religious society, appro-ated to a provision for a Minister or Teacher of the Gospel of their denomina-n, or the providing places of divine worship, and to none other use whatsoever: ept in the denominations of Quakers and Menonists, who may receive what is ected from their members, and place it in their general fund, to be disposed n a manner which they shall think best calculated to promote their particular le of worship.

And be it enacted, That all sums which at the time of payment to the riff or Collector may not be appropriated by the person paying the e, shall be accounted for with the Court in manner as by this Act is directed:
l after deducting for his collection, the Sheriff shall pay the amount thereof on account certified by the Court to the Auditors of Public Accounts, and by n to the Treasurer) into the public Treasury, to be disposed of under the direcn of the General Assembly, for the encouragement of seminaries of learning hin the Counties whence such sums shall arise, and to no other use or purpose atsoever.

This Act shall commence, and be in force, from and after the -day of—— he year

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment of-ed by the distinguished Senators from North Carolina and Ala-na. This amendment broadens the present exemption of section 702 Title VII in two respects. Section 702 now exempts religious orgaations employing individuals of a particular religion for religious vities and provides an exemption for the educational activities of cational institutions.

This amendment would allow religious organizations and educaal institutions a complete exemption from Title VII coverage. A gious organization would be exempt whether or not it is engaged religious activities; and the present authority to hire employees of [6] This copy of the Assessment Bill is from one of the handbills which on December 24, , when the third reading of the bill was postponed, were ordered distributed to the nia counties by the House of Delegates. See Journal of the Virginia House of Delegates, mber 24, 1784 Eckenrode, 102-103. The bill is therefore in its final form, for it never reached the floor of the House. Eckenrode, 113.

a particular religion for religious activities would be expanded to include race, color, sex, or national origin for any activity. An educational institution would be made exempt from Title VII whether or not it is engaged in educational activities.

As to religious organizations, it is not clear to me that the religious integrity of these institutions would be compromised by equal employment opportunities for employees in positions unrelated to religious activities of such institutions.

It should be emphasized that religious corporations and associations often provide purely secular services to the general public without regard to religious affiliation, and that most of the many thousands of persons employed by these institutions perform totally secular functions. In this regard, employees in these "religious" institutions perform jobs that are identical to jobs in comparable secular institutions. It seems appropriate, therefore, that these persons employed by religious corporations and associations should be given the same equal employment opportunities as those persons employed in comparable positions by secular employers.

For example, religious organizations in this country own and operate a substantial number of hospitals open to the public. These hospitals employ a broad range of persons to staff them. Without expounding on all of the job classifications at a hospital, I will just note that the categories of employment range from nurses and hospital administrators to dieticians and housekeeping personnel. There is no justification, in my judgment, for such hospitals to be permitted to discriminate against a janitor, for example, on any grounds.

Further, in my judgment, it might be very well unconstitutional for Congress to permit such discrimination. I recognize that the first amendment protects the free exercise of religion. I believe it is reasonable for Congress to permit an institution such as Catholic University to require its employees to be Catholic. The major function of that university is the propagation of its faith and we should not interfere with that program. However, the major purpose of hospitals and other service agencies is to provide public service. In providing this service they should not be allowed to become instruments of invidious and unreasonable discrimination in employment.

I would note for the record that at this point a similar issue has been resolved in an almost identical manner by the administration. The Occupational Safety and Health Act, passed by this Congress in 1970, provided no exemptions for employers. In defining the term "employer engaged in the business affecting commerce," for purposes of this act, the Department of Labor of necessity faced the question of coverage of churches as employers. Let me read for the Record a portion of the interpretation made by that agency just 2 weeks ago. It appears in the Federal Register of Friday, January 21, 1972, at page 930:

> * * * Churches or religious organizations, like charitable and nonprofit organizations, are considered employers under the Act where they employ one or more persons in secular activities. As a matter of enforcement policy, the performance of, or participation in, religious services (as distinguished from secular or pecuniary activities whether for charitable or religion-related purposes) will be regarded as not constituting employment under the Act. Any person, while performing religious services or participating in them in any degree, is not regarded as an employer or employee under the Act, notwithstanding the fact that such person may be regarded as an employer or employee for other purposes— for example, giving or receiving remuneration in connection with the performance of religious services.

* * Some examples of coverage of religious organizations as employers ld be: A private hospital owned or operated by a religious organization; a ate school or orphanage owned or operated by a religious organization; com-cial establishments of religious organizations engaged in producing or selling lucts such as alcoholic beverages, bakery goods, religious goods, etc.; and inistrative, executive, and other office personnel employed by religious orizations. Some examples of noncoverage in the case of religious organizations ld be: clergymen while performing or participating in religious services; other participants in religious services; namely choir masters, organists, r musicians, choir members, ushers and the like.

have read that citation from another bit of legislation that is now to point out the analogous situation that we are dealing with here nother point of law in another department of government activity.
Ir. President, just a few days ago in a colloquy with the Senator n North Carolina, the following exchange occurred:

r. ERVIN. It also enables the political hands of Caesar to be laid upon the d things of God. And each one of these cases where any of these things r is subject to be reviewed in the Federal courts, is it not?
. WILLIAMS. I would say that the equality of rights has nothing to do with ar, and maybe had more to do with God.
. ERVIN. I would say you do not get equality of rights by robbing the may of their rights, and that is what this bill will do to the majority of the le of this country. But apart from that—

* * * * * * *

ERVIN. I do not think Congress has a right to authorize Caesar to lay his al hands upon the affairs of God, and that is exactly what the bill does.
. WILLIAMS. I interpret God's mandate to man differently than the Senator North Carolina.

reiterate my judgment expressed that day—of all the institutions is country who should be setting the example of equal employment rtunity, of equal opportunity for that matter in all aspects of life, America's religious institutions. I am confident that the Houses od in this country do not shirk that responsibility nor should we.
he impact of this amendment on educational institutions is also not eeping with our purpose to strengthen the EEOC. Broadening the ption instead of eliminating it will serve only to continue existing iminatory practices against the teachers and other staffs of this n's educational institutions.

is our aim, Mr. President, in considering the present legislation, engthen the provisions of Title VII and to eliminate the inconsist-s and insufficiencies which we allowed into that law in 1964. It is ur purpose to reaffirm existing loopholes.

present, there are approximately 2,865,000 teachers and full-time ty in 120,000 educational institutions in our Nation. There are approximately 1.5 million nonprofessional staff employed by these utions.

st of the teachers and staff are public employees, the remainder mployed by private institutions. And, yet, under the present law, of these employees are without an adequate and effective Federal dy. But I submit, Mr. President, that these 1 million are no differ-rom other employees in the Nation and deserve to be accorded the protections. To continue the existing exemption for these emes would not only continue to work an injustice against this vital nt of our Nation's work force, but would also establish a class ployers who could pursue employment policies which are other-prohibited by the law.

The existence of discrimination in the employment practices of our Nation's educational institutions is well known, and has been adequately demonstrated by overwhelming statistical evidence as well as numerous complaints from groups and individuals. Minorities and women continue to be subject to blatant discrimination in these institutions.

As regards minorities, statistical studies show that minorities are generally underrepresented in teaching positions in educational institutions and those that are employed are relegated to the lower paying and less prestigious positions. For example, elementary and secondary schools, Negroes hold only about 10 percent of all available positions, Spanish-speaking Americans about 0.8 percent and all other minorities about 0.6 percent. This under representation becomes more pronounced when we look at the institutions of higher learning where Negroes account for only 2.2 percent of all faculty, Orientals 1.3 percent, and all other minorities only 0.3 percent.

Perhaps the most extensive discrimination in educational institutions, however, is found in the treatment of women. While women are generally well represented statistically in terms of numbers employed, they are generally relegated to the lowest paying and least prestigious jobs. Women account for the majority of teachers in elementary and secondary schools but they are virtually totally excluded from positions as principals and other administrative or decisionmaking positions.

In institutions of higher education women are almost totally absent in the position of academic dean, and are grossly underrepresented in all other major faculty positions. Also, I would add, that this discrimination does not only exist as regards to the acquiring of jobs, but that it is similarly prevalent in the area of salaries and promotions where studies have shown a well-established pattern of unlawful wage differentials and discriminatory promotion policies.

And yet, Mr. President, despite the existence of this obvious discrimination, this entire segment of our working population has not been provided with adequate Federal relief.

Not only have educational institutions been excluded from the protections of Title VII, but teachers and other professionals have similarly been excluded from the protection of the Equal Pay Act, which has been used successfully by other employees to halt discriminatory wage differentials. What this means is that for most employees of educational institutions, the only available remedy has been an individual suit under the anti-discrimination provisions of the Constitution. However, as has been noted by the committee in reporting out S. 2515, this method of relief is very time consuming and costly, and does not guarantee complete relief in every case.

Mr. President, I cannot help but feel that we have been very remiss in allowing the employees of this Nation's educational institutions to continue without adequate Federal remedy against job discrimination for as long as we have.

The exclusion of educational institutions from the protections of Title VII is a major factor in the discrimination which exists in our educational institutions today. There does not appear to me to be any reason, therefore, why this legislative oversight should be continued. We must correct this unfortunate defect of Title VII immediately, and provide employees of educational institutions the same protections that we accord the rest of the Nation's work force.

Ir. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the ord at this point a list of organizations which support the bill ore the Senate without the amendment offered by the Senators from rth Carolina and Alabama. From A to Z, the list indicates the gious organizations that, by supporting the bill as it was reported he Senate, oppose the pending amendment.

rom the African Methodist Episcopal Church through the United agogue of America—as I rapidly refresh my recollection and scan list—all the organizations listed here are religious organizations. they cover the gambit of faith in this country.

here being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the ord, as follows:

. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

. WILLIAMS. I yield.

. JAVITS. Mr. President, the real question here is the size of the ption which is being sought. Senator Williams has very splendidgued the merits, and I believe that the remaining factor which is rtant to Senators, as they vote, is the size of this exemption. It is ated that some 4,300,000 employees are concerned in educational utions. That is an enormous exemption to drop from this act. That ppears at page 11 of the committee's report:

re are at present over 120,000 educational institutions, with approximately llion teachers and professional staff members and another 1.5 million ofessional staff members. Yet all of these employees are, in effect, without ctive Federal remedy in the area of employment discrimination.

Mr. President, that represents 4,300,000 workers. It points out, too, that this is not a fanciful matter on our part but that there are critically important evidences of discrimination in these institutions.

Senators are invited to read on, on the next page of the report, which indicates the tremendous disproportion—the courts have held that that is a perfectly proper item of evidence—between the percentages of positions held by blacks and other minorities and the percentage which they represent in population.

In addition to the discrimination on the ground of color, there are tremendous evidences of discrimination based upon the same criteria against women, bearing in mind that sex is also covered as an important item of discrimination in this bill.

For all those reasons, because we are dealing with enormous numbers of people—a worker for an educational institution or a religious institution is still a worker—while we understand the responsibility of dealing with respect for the establishment of religion as such—and we very amply safeguard them in the exemption to 702 contained in the bill at page 33—there is no reason for allowing those cover words to take out of the operation of common justice and equal opportunity for a job, which is the essence of this bill, some 4,300,000 workers. Yet, that would be the effect of this amendment.

So, for the reasons I have stated, plus those eloquently stated by the manager of the bill, Senator Williams, I hope very much that the Senate will reject this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of the time of the proponents of this amendment to the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, one of the most horrendous provisions of S. 2515 is section 3, which removes the existing exemption for employees of educational institutions, as presently contained in section 702 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This overzealous proposal attempts, first, to subvert academic freedom and, second, violate the prohibition contained in the first amendment which guarantees the free exercise of religion.

In addition, if this section of the bill is passed, it invites a further expansion and continuation of the practices of harassing local school officials and interfering with local school systems that have been running rampant since the adoption of Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Enactment of section 3 of S. 2515 could destroy academic freedom. Objective criticism, independent judgment, the search for truth unhampered by transient political interests—all of which are vital to academic freedom—could be altered and reshaped by the EEOC. Academic tenure—the very cornerstone of academic freedom—would be placed in serious jeopardy if Federal hiring and promotion practices are substituted for those of local school administrators.

t would be hard to imagine any Federal law more at odds with the rantee of religious freedom than EEOC supervision of employment rtices of church-supported educational institutions.

History tells us that it was largely because of religious persecution t many of our forefathers left England and Europe to settle in erican colonies.

eligious freedom in the New World lighted man's way to political dom. The revelation of spiritual freedom created a passionate re in the hearts of the colonists for freedom from political bondage, esiastical privilege, and royal favor. It was because they recog- d that secular and religious authority must be rigorously separated the founders of our Nation did not consider the Constitution of United States to be complete until there was adopted a Bill of hts in which they made a flat prohibition in the very first article :

ngress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or pro- ng the free exercise thereof . . .

was not a new idea for it was written long ago:

nder therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God ings that are God's.

nder our our system of religious freedom, which would be violated his EEOC bill, religious organizations have seen fit to use their resources to establish church schools at every level of education— entary, secondary, and institutions of higher education. They did cause they wanted youth taught in a religious atmosphere and by stian instructors. Indeed, the establishment of church-related edu- nal institutions in the embodiment of the free exercise of religion. form of religious activity has always been recognized to occupy ame high estate under the first amendment as worshipping in the ches and preaching from the pulpits.

ie argument has been made and pressed with vigor that section 3 e bill continues the exemption for church-supported schools, col- , and universities with respect to the employment of individuals particular religion to perform work or teach subjects connected religious activities.

e argument is lacking in both intellectual and constitutional gth. It rests solely upon the fallacy that the only "free exercise" ligion at a church-related school is restricted to schools of theology he teaching of religious subjects at lower levels. It concludes, fore, that all other activities and teachings at church-supported ls are secular rather than religious activities.

this argument, Mr. President, I submit that the reasoning of the nents of section 3 is not the constitutional standard, nor are preferences for that matter. The constitutional standard is sepa- n of church and state. And so far as interference with the "free ise" of religion, the separation must be full and complete. The amendment prohibition is absolute. The power and authority t in section 3 is just the type of Government invasion that the mendment was designed to prevent.

us, the question in connection with section 3 of S. 2515 with the dment offered by the Senator from North Carolina and myself to reach is not whether its language has entered too far into the l area of religious freedom, but whether it has entered it at all.

It is enough here to quote Mr. Justice Jackson in his famous opini in West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnett (319 U.S. 62 when he said:

> If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that > official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nation > ism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word > act their faith therein. If there are any circumstances which permit an exc > tion, they do not now occur to us.

It should be called to the attention of the Senate that none of t Presidents or heads of public, private, and church-supported schoo appeared before the committe in hearings on S. 2515. This is even mo strange when it is remembered that this is the Senate committee whi also handles the great bulk of legislation here in the Senate relating programs for our schools and, therefore, it already had available to a wealth of names of distinguished educators at every level of educ tion who could have been requested to appear at the hearings wit respect to section 3 and, undoubtedly, a number of them would hav been happy to do so.

Why were not spokesmen for the educational arms of our great rel gious denominations requested to verbally appraise the committee ho they felt about section 3 and how they viewed it as a possible encroach ment upon religious freedom, and what effect, if any, the proposa would have upon the charters of their respective institutions?

In connection with this latter point, many will recall that when leg islation similar to S. 2515 was before the Senate during the 91st Co gress, the distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina (Mr Ervin) pointed out that he once served on the board of trustees o Davidson College, a liberal arts school founded and supported by th Presbyterian Church. The Senator from North Carolina furthe pointed out that Davidson had, and presumably still does have a reg lation which stipulates that no professor would teach any course a that institution unless he is a member of an Evangelical Church. Th Senator from North Carolina went on to say:

> Mr. President, I think in any free society, if the members of the Presbyteria > Church, or the members of the Catholic Church, or the members of the Luther > Church, or the members of any other religious body see fit to establish, throug > their own resources, an institution of learning for the instruction of youth, a > they want the youth of that institution to be taught by persons they regard a > Christian professors, even in nonreligious subjects such as mathematics o > trigonometry or philosophy, they should have the unqualified right to do tha
>
> Yet the bill before the Senate will take away from institutions like Davidso > College the right to select professors who are members of evangelical church > because that would be discriminating against other professors on account of the > religion. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, under this bill, co > actually require the Board of Trustees of Davidson College to hire a Mohamme > dan, for example, to instruct the youth attending the college.
>
> That is the extent of the tyranny which this bill would inflict upon the peo > of America. We might as well recognize it. This is the most tyrannical propos > ever submitted to the Congress of the United States. It destroys the right of peo > to exercise their religion, because that is exactly what these denominational c > leges are doing when they make a requirement that professors shall be membe > of a particular church, even though they are teaching nonreligious subjects.

We all know that the distinguished senior Senator from North Car lina is acknowledged as one of the greatest living authorities on con stitutional matters. The Senator from Alabama considers him to b one of the greatest of all time. His brilliance on constitutional law ha n witnessed many times in this Chamber. I deem it a great privilege serve with him here in the Senate and to stand shoulder to shoulder h him in defense of the freedoms and rights which the framers of Constitution deemed indispensable to liberty. Like Thomas Jeffer-, the senior Senator from North Carolina knows that eternal vigil-e is the price of liberty. I commend him on the excellent speech he le in the Senate 2 years ago against the EEOC expansion bill from ich I have just quoted, and I commend his wise and trenchant words ach member of this body.

wish to read into the record at this point a letter I received from Leslie S. Wright, president of Samford University; a Baptist-sup-ted university in Birmingham, Ala., which bears on section 3. It ls:

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY,
Birmingham, Ala., December 20, 1971.

JAMES B. ALLEN,
Senate,

AR JIM: My absence from the office and from the country for a part of the has delayed unduly this opportunity to acknowledge and thank you for letter of November 9 regarding an amendment which you proposed to intro-to S2515.

of us at Samford University deeply appreciate your thoughtfulness in ng this information with us. We want you to know we wholeheartedly sup-your amendment to remove schools, colleges and other educational institu-from coverage under a bill recently approved by the Senate Labor and Pub-elfare Committee. If enacted without the amendment, the legislation would oy our educational institutions by giving an agency of the federal govern-complete power over such matters as the employment of faculty, the aca-program, etc.

are in full accord with your belief that the power sought under the EEOC nsion bill is clearly a spiritual and constitutional violation of the first amend-to the Constitution.

will appreciate very much receiving such information as you can give us rning the present status of this legislation. We certainly want to support mendment in every possible way.

deeply appreciate your close attention to this matter and your support of hristian institutions.

th warmest personal regards and best wishes for the holiday season, I am Sincerely your friend,

LESLIE S. WRIGHT,
President.

. President, our oath of office enjoins us from enacting into law a which would license the EEOC, under cover of the soft euphemism qual employment opportunity" to steal into the forbidden area ligious freedom. I submit that the constitutional language that is a government which allows no statute that prohibits the free ise of religion extends to the activities and teachings of a church-d school as a whole. The concern for separation of church and which inspired and prompted submission of the first amendment 89 continues to be as meaningful today when overzealous legisla-hreatens to destroy the freedoms which the first amendment en-es. If this is not true, the first amendment is but an empty pledge ssed in idle words.

. President, the total unconcern of the Equal Employment Op-nity Commission for individual freedoms, property rights, and tutional principles that would be trampled in the dust under its for power, is indeed shocking.

President, I hope the Senate will agree to the pending dment.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I shall briefly discuss amendment N 815. The present law exempts educational institutions from the p visions of the act. The bill as reported would cover those who sel and employ teachers, professors, faculty administrators, deans, colle presidents, and janitors. Some of the more liberal campuses of t country, which have been preoccupied with the ramifications academic freedom, might be a little surprised at what this bill could to them.

A broader area of concern, however, that has an effect in eve neighborhood, and every family is that of the faculties of elementa and secondary schools. Let me say that we in the South are well awa of what is involved here. The schools in Southern States are und court orders or HEW instructions to establish racial balance in scho faculties. These orders are being carried out. Sometimes the cons quences are difficult to accept but it is being done.

As the Members of this body know, I have for some time been adv cating that there be a single national policy to be applied uniform in all regions of the United States in dealing with conditions of segr gation by race, without regard to the origin or cause of such segreg tion. Twice the Senate has passed this amendment. The Senate educ tion bill contains it, and a modification of it that is in the educati bill passed by the House will be a matter of discussion soon, togeth with the busing amendments.

I believe that all parts of the country should be treated alike in a matters, including the requirements as to school faculties. If rac balance in faculties is required in one area, it should be in all area
The provisions of this bill could move in that direction, but I do n think this bill is the right vehicle. However, should these provisio become law, it will be interesting to see how they are received in t school districts of the North, where the first few busing decrees ha resulted in an aroused and incensed citizenry.

I repeat, however, this bill is not the proper vehicle for such action, it is to be taken. This bill can only add to the turmoil and confusio that already exists in the Nation's school systems, if the exemptio from the EEO Act now afforded educational institutions is remove

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now occurs on the amendme of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays if they ha not already been ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So Mr. Ervin's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. ERVIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Assistant Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Fannin). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 813

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Alabama (Mr. Allen) and myself, I call up amendment No. 813.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The Assistant Legislative Clerk read the amendment.

(A copy of Amendment 813 to S. 2515 may be found on p. 879.)

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield without losing his right to the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, it is really one amendment. I will ask unanimous consent to consider them en bloc, but they strike the figure "8" and restore the figure "25" as a measure of the number of employees a person must have to be subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be considered en bloc——

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, just a minute. We have not heard the unanimous consent request, and we have had no opportunity to object or not object.

Mr. ERVIN. The Senator can object and have four votes instead of one.

Mr. JAVITS. The Senator from New York does not wish to object, but Senators ought to know about it before the Chair passes on the matter.

Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object——

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. JAVITS. No. What we wish to do, if the Senator will allow us because we need unanimous consent for this, is move to reconsider previous vote.

Mr. ERVIN. I would have no objection to that.

Mr. JAVITS. Then I have no objection to this request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will considered en bloc.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which last amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands there is another endment before us. By unanimous consent, a motion to reconsider previous vote is in order.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in er to move to reconsider the vote on the previous amendment.

he PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

r. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which mendment was rejected.

r. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the e.

ne PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion y on the table.

ne motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator from h Carolina yield, without losing his right to the floor?

r. ERVIN. I yield.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. May I inquire, for the benefit of Sena- who may be waiting on the floor, if the Senator intends to reach e on the pending amendment tonight?

r. ERVIN. No. I have been going since 6 o'clock this morning, I feel I have put in a full day's work.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. A further inquiry, if the Senator will y me: Does the Senator intend to ask for the yeas and nays on ending amendment?

r. ERVIN. Yes.

r. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

ne yeas and nays were ordered.

r. BYRD of West Virginia. Then, for the information of the Sen- here will be no more rollcall votes today.

[From the Congressional Record—Senate, Feb. 2, 1972]

QUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1971

he Acting President pro tempore. Under the previous order the ir now lays before the Senate the unfinished business, S. 2515, ch the clerk will state.

he legislative clerk read as follows:

2515, a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American ers.

ne Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

r. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence quorum.

ne Acting President pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

r. Allen. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order he quorum call be rescinded.

ne Presiding Officer (Mr. Chiles). Without objection, it is so or- d.

r. Allen. Mr. President, the bill before us seeks to enlarge greatly power of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in its of operations. It does not change the law in any particular what- er with regard to unfair employment practices, practices which itute discrimination. It does not change the law with respect to asic, fundamental, and substantive rights of all our people to a fair and equal opportunity to obtain employment, where em- ment opportunities are available.

ese basic laws and rights remain the same, and I am sure that is no quarrel whatsoever by a single Member of this body as e right of every person in this country to have an equal and pportunity, without discrimination against him or against her, tain employment if employment opportunities are available. But, President, this bill does not create one single job in business or stry. All it would create would be the need for hundreds more of ucrats harassing business, industry, and employers throughout ountry. It does not open up jobs. For every job that is obtained person against whom discrimination has been alleged, it would in somebody else losing a job. So no jobs are going to be created. very person concedes the right of each person in this country ve the right to go in life just as far as his ability and his am- and his efforts will take him.

at is involved here, Mr. President, therefore, is not changing and fundamental rights. It changes the field of operation, the of the work of the EEOC, bringing under its jurisdiction tens llions of additional employees, bringing for the first time under cope of its operation employees of States, counties, cities, and ies of States, counties, and cities, bringing under its operation e first time every educational institution in the entire country.

That would include colleges, universities, private schools, publ schools, church-supported schools. Every type of educational instit tion would be covered.

It would also, Mr. President, for the first time give to the EEO enforcement powers for its orders, edicts or decrees. When the EEO was set up some 7 years ago, in 1964, it was contemplated that this b reau, would perform conciliation type services, advisory services, i vestigatory services, settlement of disputes between aggrieved e ployees and their employers. And I am sure that many constructive r sults have ensued from the operations of the EEOC. But this bi would extend to the EEOC not only the power to receive complaints, investigate complaints, to seek to settle those complaints as between th employer and employee, but it would give the Commission, through i General Counsel, the authority to file complaints or charges back wit the Commission itself, so that the Commission is not only the recipien of the complaint; it is a jury, it is a prosecutor; it is the judge. Wha sort of due process is that, Mr. President?

Here is a mammoth Federal agency reaching out to become bigger That is the type of ailment or condition that seems to be built into a Federal agencies and bureaus—the desire to be more important, th desire to have more employees, the desire to have more power. That what the EEOC wants to do. It is reaching out for greater power. I wants to become more important. The work it has been doing for th last 7 years is not important enough to satisfy the EEOC. Why, it ha built up a backlog of cases that they say will take 18 to 24 months t get to, and they say they anticipate that they are going to have 32,0 compaints filed this fiscal year ending June 30, and they anticipat 45,000 cases in the next fiscal year. That is even without amending th law and bringing in the tens of millions of additional employees. S they have plenty of work to do, Mr. President, without taking on mor work.

Mr. President, it is rare that individual Members of the Senate hav the opportunity that they have with respect to this bill—to strike a blow against mushrooming Federal bureaucracy, to strike a blow against the great increase in size of the Federal establishment, to strik a blow against the Federal Government's becoming an all-powerfu government, to strike a blow against harassment of our citizens, our businesses, our industries.

How often have you had the complaint, I ask my colleagues in th Senate, from your constituents, "Well, the Government is getting to big. It is spending too much money"? Here is an opportunity to requir the EEOC to stay within the bounds that Congress has given it an under which and within which it has operated for the last 7 years.

I assume, Mr. President, that the members of the EEOC, when the have gone to the Appropriations Committees of the House and th Senate to make their case for appropriations—I am not a member of th Senate Appropriations Committee, but I know without having be there that when the representatives of the EEOC have come in to r quest an appropriation—and I am sure the request gets bigger ea time—they have not told the members of that committee, "Gentlemen we are not performing a worthwhile work over there. We are not a complishing anything. We do not need any money to carry on th Department, because it is not doing any good."

They have over 1,000 employees, and it has been brought out on the r here that they have more than 300 volunteer employees, who are nterested in this crusade, if it can be called that, that they voluntheir services to work for this Commission. I dare say the EEOC is ming before the Appropriations Committee that it is doing a good and has done a good job during the 7 years of its existence.
Ir. President, I submit that the proponents of this legislation are hing out for more power. They are reaching out for more enlarge-t of their functions. They are reaching out for a greater increase ie Commission's role than can be justified. They are not content to in the bill before the Senate, that the powers of the EEOC be ex-led to States, counties and cities and agencies of the States, counties, cities, and to all educational institutions. They are not satisfied to that the required number of employees to put an employer under jurisdiction of the EEOC be reduced from 25 down to eight. They not satisfied with that. They are not satisfied to have transferred the Justice Department, as they seek to do in this bill, the pattern practice suits which the Justice Department now has the authority e against an employer who is not guilty of just isolated instances scrimination, but who has followed a pattern and practice of dis-ination. In those cases, the Attorney General or the Justice Dement can bring proceedings against employers and the court will ire that the employer change its pattern and practice with regard employment practices. They are not satisfied to have that power sferred to the EEOC.
ey are seeking the power after having received complaints, ingated complaints, and filed charges on complaints to judge those laints reach a decision with regard to the complaint and enforce decision. Therein, Mr. President I submit that the proponents of neasure have asked for more than they should have asked for and I believe than the U.S. Senate is willing to confer upon the y.
. President, without disturbing any of these provisions to which e alluded other than the decision and enforcement power, not disng the extension of power over educational institutions and over governments, and increasing the Commission's jurisdiction by ng the required number of employees from 25 to 8, but simply on sue of requiring the EEOC, after receiving complaints and in-gating complaints, to file charges, not with itself as having pre-mined the case, but with a Federal district court. Mr. President, say that if that amendment had failed by the narrow vote of 48
—this bill would have passed the Senate last week.
t we have a case here where a bureau or agency of the Federal rnment is seeking too much; and having sought too much, and no willingness to compromise on this basic and fundamental of not depriving a person of his rights without due process of law, well follow that there will be no bill at all.
. President, I could discuss this matter further at great length, see my distinguished colleague the Senator from Mississippi (Mr.
is) in the Chamber, and I know that he wants at this time to
on this amendment and on the bill.
that reason, Mr. President, I am going to yield the floor and conwith my remarks at a later date. I am delighted to yield the floor at this time so that the distinguished Senator from Mississippi m address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognize

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, what is the pending question befc the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amen ment (No. 813) of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. STENNIS. As I understand, there is no agreement as to the co trol of time; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I am not going to attack the agency of the Gover ment that will administer this bill if it passes, and that is administe ing the subject matter under the present law. I attribute to them th good intentions that I think go with almost all officials in their pos tion, or in any public position. Certainly they do not intend evil. Bu I am going to address myself to the proposition of just where we ar going now with reference to this matter of extending the power of th Government, of this agency or any other agency, and just how th process affects the so-called little fellow, the man who is out ther scrambling for a living.

I mean every word of this. I am thinking of people I personall know, and people that I find in other areas of the country.

I am looking at this bill from his viewpoint. I am talking about th little fellow who has a small plumbing shop, a small radio shop, a small used auto parts business that he has built up himself fro scratch, so to speak, or anyone else who has to work and scramble fo a living and plan from day to day and year to year, who tries to ac cumulate a little something beyond a mere living in order to be abl to take care of the growing needs of his growing family, who is look ing forward to the day when they will be in high educational levels, depending on them for support.

I am thinking of this little fellow, who has to scramble around an pay taxes and share with the Government, percentagewise, far to much of his earnings, as I see it - not only the Federal Governmen but also the State government, the town government, the city govern ment, and all the other levels of taxation under which he works, to which he is subjected. I am thinking of the little fellow who has t produce in order to meet his obligations, to meet his rent, if he does no own a little shop building, and meet all his other obligations.

I am ashamed to admit it, but I know that times have already created conditions in which a great many of the workers - I am not referrin to any particular group or class - now do not have a sense of pride o achievement that people had when I was a boy and a young man an in my early adulthood. That sense of pride is not there - the sense o pride in getting a job and holding a job and getting some promotion.

A man who was operating a very creditable small factory said t me 3 or 4 years ago:

People used to say to me, "I need a job. I'll be a good man for you. I want yo to give me a chance. I'll give you the very best I have, and I'll try to ear promotion."

But times have changed so that they come by now and say, "How much do I get?" They do not ask the details about what their duti are going to be; just, "How much do I get?"

am not demeaning the people, and I am not bemoaning the times.
ve not lost faith in humanity or in our system of government, or hing like that. But I think we ought to talk more about conditions e find them in the affairs of life.

think some of this indifference is caused by the affluent times—not the affluence of the times generally but also the affluence of jobs. ept in certain areas of the country, it is very easy to get a job. A on walks off one job and walks right into another.

hink part of the problem also is due to the fact that many people this attitude: "Well, the man who employed me is afraid to fire
He is afraid to punish me in any way. He is afraid to demand more.
s afraid I will leave, and he is afraid that I can retaliate or the nization I belong to can retaliate." But, even worse than that—is some truth in it—he thinks he can get an agency of the Govern-to pounce on his employer, who has given him a chance, and have igged up and brought up before a court or even, under this bill, e a commission, to give an accountability as to charges that may irious.

ave never had any business experience. I am not a businessman. I never been an employer. But I have done a great deal of work.
young man, I had positions of responsibility and operated every-from a service station to a drug store, if I may be that personal; know something about the responsibilities of meeting bills at the f the month, and I know something about the problems of people re working for you.

en I was a young man, people had great pride in their work. gave a real day's work for a day's pay. I would be totally lost in taking a job of that kind now. But I merely refer to that. I am ery opposite of an expert, but I know something about human e, because I have lived a good while and have come in contact with many people, and have been in public office a long time. If I do el responsibility to the people who elected me, I am not going a good officer; and if I am working for someone to whom I do el responsibility, I am not going to be a good employee.

putting together what we are doing and what we have done, the governments, the city governments, and now the Federal Gov-nt, are making too many people feel virtually independent of mployer, as I see it, and are killing within them the fine, individaracteristics of pride, responsibility, and obligation that used to d still are—in the minds of many people. But it used to be, the board, one of the great strengths of our truly great American concerned about this trend. I could enlarge on my feelings about ation that is eating into the very vitals of the little fellow I have lking about. I use the word "little" not to refer to his mind or nity or his sense of honor or anything like that. He is big in espects. But he is a small operator.

pite of the good faith of the present Congress and the present istration and everyone else, I think we are getting to a field of in our Government that is becoming unmanageable. That is t to the little businessman or the little shopkeeper with respect problems he is facing. I think we ought to be centering more ig things that are going to affect his future.

But, to return to the amendment: This amendment merely provid that—if adopted—it would leave the law, with reference to the exte of the coverage of the present law we have on the subject, at 25 em ployees; whereas, the bill would reduce it to eight or more.

I have no doubt that when this bill was originally passed, 25 was pr in as the bottom, and they were not going to reduce it beyond that. Th proposal now is to reduce it to eight or more, and there will be anoth proposal to reduce that. But whatever the level is now, the little ma I have been talking about has his neck in the halter.

It may not apply to him today, but it is creating an atmosphere, precedent, a bureaucracy, and a control of everything that these peo ple are trying to do. The business that they are trying to run will b controlled by laws of this kind. We know, too, that bills are passe here, with every one of them to be considered on its merits. That i theoretically possible, but as a practical matter it is observed mor in the breach than it is in the fact. I have always thought and sai that the people I represent could live with and perhaps put up wit any law that applied uniformly throughout the Nation, but here w are in a category where we can hardly apply it uniformly throughou the Nation. We cannot even put it into effect uniformly as to thes little businessmen and little shop keepers.

The big man with all his resources, the corporate enterprises, th large companies, with their capital, with adequate funds with whic to employ talent in the legal profession, for instance, and in manage ment, and so forth, have a much better chance to meet obligation which might be imposed on them by a law like this. It is so obviou that we do not even have to argue it but just mention it to be convin ing in that field. We have illustrations all over the country of litt businesses and little shops closing up and going out of business du to harassment, because of requirements and demands made on the which they cannot meet. They cannot put up with a running batt with the Federal Government all the time. What can a little fello employing eight persons do? How can he cope with the Departmen of Justice? How can he cope with the people in the community wh are, in effect, his own employees who are suing him? What resource does he have to carry on these battles? He does not have them, o course.

There is no public defender that will take care of him, no govern ment attorney going around over the counties or into the towns o through the countryside that will help him out that I know of or hav ever heard of, for that matter. It is just the "easy one" that has t carry the load, endure the threats and, the harassment, and be brough into court. I will have to correct that term, because they will not b brought into court because the bill, as presently written, will not le them be brought into court but to the Commission, as has been ful argued here already. The Commission will have the power to mak it own investigation and its own determination, in advance, as t whether charges should be filed, or this or that man should be broug to accountability. Then they have the power, after they have inves gated, to hear the evidence and to decide it, to reach a conclusion a to make a judgment—so to speak, to make a legal order. Think o that, to make a legal order.

That order and that enforcement represent a cease-and-desist order at we have argued about. That means, "If you do not do what we y to you, we will lock up your shop and we will put you out of siness."

People who have never been up against the hardships of life, and not know this problem from a practical standpoint, may just take is as a matter of course and think nothing about it. I hate to refer myself, but I have had some experience in that field. I was a dis-ct prosecuting attorney for 5 years in a district that kept me busy y and night in courts of unlimited jurisdiction, all the way from rders and rape and other associated grave crimes on down.

At that time, I would not have thought of holding that position if ad to be the one to pass on my own work, to decide the question of ilt or innocence of persons charged with crimes when I was prosecut-them, or that I was going to have to pass sentence on them if they re found guilty. That would have been unthinkable to me. It is conry to all the precepts of our common-law system. It is contrary to mmon sense and logic. It is contrary to almost every legal system, ch less the juris-prudence of our American system of justice.

suppose they would justify it under the law of necessity, but in an ustrial age there is no necessity to get down to the little shopkeeper o employs only eight or nine persons. It is ridiculous to talk about eing a necessity, and I say that with all deference to everyone. But idea has been adopted here that it is necessary to bring this little up of businessmen in under the Commission rules.

When I think back over a lot of cases, large and small, that I had handle and represent the State in, during those 5 years as a district secuting attorney, I realize how far that would have been from my of what was just and right—much less passing on my own work.
f I may make one more reference to that experience which is red. I later became a judge and had to pass on legal and punishment ters if they were criminal cases. I tell you right now, Mr. Presit, it is a serious matter, in a civil suit, to have to sign a decree that ld take a man's homestead away from him and turn him and his ily out in the cold; or for a judge to have to sign a decree when he heard testimony on the admissibility of evidence in that same case, there may have been some close questions, and he had to make ngs very quickly sometimes; every few minutes, and whether to it or reject certain testimony, when maybe the decision I made ermined the way the jury decided the case.

tell you, Mr. President, it is no fun to have to sign a decree that ld take away a man's property, much less his homestead and h less to pass on matters that would send a man to prison for ears or for life.

ut that is what this Commission will be doing. It will be passing hese cases. It will be the judge, the jury, and the executioner. It have virtual power of life and death over these little shopkeep-that is what it is.

he large companies, the big ones, they will have the money to em-the talent at least to defend them and meet the situation, but those less resources cannot afford it. They are going out of business ywhere because of frustration or discouragement or the necessity ay unwarranted expenses or through lack of efficient workmen.

The workmen seem to think they have the advantage. One does not have to imagine these things. He can go down here in these shops and stores and stand around awhile and see the kind of treatment the customers get compared to the treatment they received 15 or 20 years ago. I am not referring only to Washington. One can go almost everywhere in the country and observe this. Just my idea of human nature makes me believe that bills such as the pending bill and the other conditions I have alluded to create those conditions.

We hear talk about the times and the youth and the fact that the youth are no worse than any other youth group has been. We hear it said that they are the victims of what we adults in a large way let happen or caused to happen and thus create these conditions. We do not call for the discipline, for the responsibility, and for the pride that we had in years past. We can build that up, but we are going in the opposite direction when we just keep passing one bill on top of another and putting, as a Government remedy in the bill, the things that the Government cannot do.

The Government cannot furnish the answer for most of the things about life, much less the hard things. I believe the most harassed person in America today is the small businessman, the small shopkeeper, the small storekeeper, or the small garage owner or operator. We are calling on those great hordes of people to pay these enormous taxes. We even tax charwomen that make their living down on their knees scrubbing floors. We reach in and—the States do, too, most of them—and take out a part of their earnings and put it into the great Federal Treasury to pay off these enormous appropriations that we make here. It is all right for them to have some responsibilities of Government. However, when they have to dig into their pockets and get their money to pay for it when they are making a bare living, it is going a long ways to bear down on them in that way.

The small operator, as I have said, cannot afford to have enough staff people to keep him informed of everything that all the governments expect of him. There are not enough hours in a day for him to be able to figure out all of this for himself.

I am not just thinking up anything here. This comes to me through the mail. Anyone can walk down the streets of the city and stop and talk to people who want to tell him about these things. He will find out that these are the facts of life.

In recent years there has been a steady infringement by these regulations and Federal requirements on the affairs of these average people, the average businessmen, the men who are responsible in every way. They tell me that they are reaching the point where it is becoming impossible. They are reaching a stage where even the most well-informed individual cannot be conversant with every one of the Federal regulations that he is expected to obey.

I know people who are not under this law. However, they still get a lot of this literature and all the mail that comes in. They do not know what to think. Any Member of the Senate can judge from the volume and the nature of the mail he gets from his constituents just how many citizens are already bewildered by the maze of bureaucratic processes that enter their lives.

They are not sure what is expected of them. They are thwarted in their effort to accomplish legitimate objectives. They receive conflicting instructions from different agencies and sometimes from the same ency. They suffer inequities that sometimes take Members of the ngress weeks to get straightened out for them. And that is only ne after volumes and volumes of letters and exchanges of memo- nda have passed back and forth through our own busy staffs.

Mr. President, I know that from experience. After all, we do not gin to touch more than a fraction of 1 percent of the people, our stituents, that are the victims of these same errors and these same actices.

These agencies come before the Appropriations Committee, and I ve the privilege of being on that committee and of serving on sev- l of the subcommittees. I know how from time to time an effort is de to get into these matters and to get them worked out.

find that the men who come up to Capitol Hill—and they are mpetent people—do not know and do not realize all that is going in their own departments.

omewhere these matters are going to become really intolerable, it will be one of the weights that will help to break the back of system of government.

The loads they have to carry contribute to the frustration, the hope- ness, and the downright fear of so many of our people who, as I have to think every morning when they wake up and it is the thought in their minds—about making a living for their families. We will affect so many of those people that it will undermine part he main structures of our system of government.

This bill would not only vest cease-and-desist powers in the Com- sion, but, as I have said, it would make them applicable to a busi- with as few as eight employees. This is talking about a small iness which is without assets or capability to cope with the legal administrative tangle that can be thrust upon them arbitrarily the Commission and its employees.

With all respect to everyone, I cannot believe that the committee e the fullest consideration to these people that live out in the vil- s, the little towns, and the communities. How in the world are they g to cope with the rules and regulations of such an agency?

here are counties in this country now that do not even have a doc- much less a competent lawyer that would be available to repre- these people. And if they do have such a man, he would have to ge a fee that most of them could not pay.

he pending bill just closes its eyes to the facts of life. They may plenty of such men in Los Angeles or New York or elsewhere, in the great vast, open spaces of this country and the rural areas the rural States and the agricultural communities and I am talk- about towns on up far beyond what are purely rural areas—the ple are just not able to comply with all the requirements of this mean the little operators. To say that employers of down to a level ight would have to comply and be subjected to all these restric- s and could not even take the case to court, with all deference to yone, that is just downright ridiculous. It is a requirement that e people cannot live with.

wonder how the number eight got into the bill anyway. Who sug- ed eight? I am not dealing in personalities. Who suggested eight? that number come from the Commission? Where did it come from?

What kind of survey was made to see what were the capabilities a little firm in a little town, even though it employed only eight persons? What resource does such a firm have? What are its capabilities How can it cope with the Department of Justice? Of course, it cann cope with it. I just think that this is a lick in the back. A lick in th back is what it will be to those small business people.

Once such a law is on the books, it will never come off. It will nev be possible to get it changed. Those people do not have politic strength at the polls. They are not organized. They will never have th political strength to get a law like this repealed.

So let us meet the problem head on if we want to reach down an get all the little people. We will just be running a lot of them out business—that is, if the law is to be enforced—and will deny the a chance to have their case considered in court. It seems to me that w are depriving them on a tribunal for what is called American justic

When we get down to a firm that employs only eight, that is truly a very small business, one, as I have said, without the assets and capabilities to cope with the legal and administrative technicalities thrust upon them arbitrarily by a commission and its employees.

What Senator has had time to read and analyze all the terms of the bill, even only the ones that might be applicable to the small employers? I know I have not had the time. I doubt that many of us have had a chance to go through this bill, and not only this bill but other bills that we will have to consider. None of us has the time to go through all the bills that will pile up on us before the time when this legislative year will be over. There is just not a chance in the world for Senators as a whole to consider them. I am sure that the manager of the bill and some other Senators understand it; but many of us who will have to vote on it just do not know what it all means. I have had the privilege of bringing before the Senate bills that the average Senator just does not have a chance to study in the limited time we have in the course of a year to pass on such matters.

My main point is: What about the little businessman who does not have a legal talent, does not have a lawyer, does not have special training, does not understand legal terms or the administration of a commission, and does not know what "cease and desist" means. He may find out by experience, but he does not understand it in the beginning. He does not have a chance in the world to know about or understand the fine points. For that reason small businessmen ought to be exempt.

Take the case of a small businessman who wants to make a start in his business. He may have only a wrench and a few other tools to work on automobiles. He may be able to work himself up to where he can have a little garage and do a good job, so that people will come from miles around to get his services. Why does he have to be put under the provisions of a law that I think was originally designed to apply to situations and problems that are created in cities, where the activities are more impersonal, and employees perhaps have never seen the people they are working for. There is a lot of difference between such a business and the so called little shops at the lower level.

I simply say that the commonsense of this matter demands justice. Justice cries out. I am not a man given to emotion, but I believe it will be dangerous if we vote to jack the little fellows up and put them in a sack and put them in reach of any commission, not only this Commission, but any other commission of this kind.

The small businessman will not have much choice about what he can
He can go to court and seek justice, or he can submit. If he goes court, he is going to take with him his money and his personal attenn, both of which are more needed in his business. Logically, his in-nation will be toward prudence instead of valor, and he will submit l, in effect, surrender. He will be placed in a position where, in fact, will not have a choice. In other words, the proposed legislation uld put him in the hands of the Federal Government, where he will outweighed. The chances are that he is not going to answer to the rt.

That is not justice; it is not equity; it is simply a case of a Federal ial, in the name of the Commission, issuing arbitrary orders to a zen. That is what it amounts to.

go back to the small businessman in the small town. If he and his oloyees do not get along before there is intervention of this kind, y are not going to get along afterward. It is a personal thing. It is ersonal matter. No law that we can pass will give them compatity or happiness or satisfaction. There never has been any law that uld do that in any kind of system or in any kind of country. I simply k we are fooling ourselves when we try to make ourselves believe at that level, anyway, we are going to help anybody by trying to his business in this fashion.

The little men in these businesses are not getting rich. They are not ing blood out of a man and filling up their bank accounts with a of money. They are barely making a living. I know, because I move ong them and I have seen them, and I have seen a lot of life along se lines. He will be put out of business, in one way or another, if he so much of that to put up with. It will destroy what relationship e is between employers and employees and others who are involved, so disrupt that business that they will be getting out. That is not reference to race, color, creed, or anything else—it is just comnsense.

The present criterion of 25 or more employees is not suitable to me, taking that as a starting point—it is worse in view of the fact that is bill becomes law apparently the cease-and-desist orders will still ued—to reduce the criterion now to eight employees is to strike ctly at these very small fellows and bring EEOC activities into y village and hamlet across the Nation.

want to make clear that I am not trying to get them out of doing thing that they should be doing. I know enough about life at that l to know that what they are doing is best for themselves and their loyees, and is the best for all. I come from a State that has as large rcentage of black people as any in the United States. I state on my responsibility that I know, in the little place where I live, and r areas of my State, that the black man and the white man and the man, and the rest, who deliver the goods and work, can get a job.
e extent that the economy will carry. In almost every case, he gets l treatment. In almost every case he will have a chance to get a notion. There is no question about that. I know, because I have it happen since I was a boy and it is still happening that way.
re is a desire to get those kinds of people—as I say, to the extent the
omy operates in the area.

Passing a law here now is not going to create any jobs and make stronger economy than we already have. I know people in that area a begging people to do some day work, putting up pine ceilings, fi example. They cannot get the people to do that work. They are on we fare. I am not talking about just blacks. There are a lot of whites welfare. It is so ridiculous to say it is necessary to jump on some fello because he has as many as 8 employees, because the Commission think he is not treating all of them right, when they are begging people come in and take these jobs, to the extent that the economy as it operating in those areas permits.

So let us not fool ourselves. The law is not going to bring a lot relief to employees in those businesses where there are eight or mor What part of the country caused this number eight to be selected, an what benefits do they expect it to give? I ask that in the form of a honest question.

I can give names, dates, and places where people who are willing t work, and who have applied themselves, are mechanics, and good ones in little garages and firms of that kind, to my personal knowledge Some of them have been there for years. Some of them have branche out and have shops of their own. Some of them are white and some o them are black.

Somebody is trying to act as a doctor who has not been sent for, when nobody is sick, in these little places having eight or more employees. I question seriously the applicability of a provision carrying this number in the law. I do not agree to even the number of 25, but there may be some places in the country where there is some kind of need, or at least facts that would justify some people in believing that there was a need.

As I said the other day, the average little fellow, apart from this bill, is afraid of his own Government. There are so many demands and so many agencies that are advising him of what he has got to do and what he must do that he does not know where to turn. People are frustrated and they are harassed, and I think perhaps it will have to get worse before it can get better, but I have no doubt about what the trend is in large areas of the country.

I know how relieved I was at home at the time—and this was true in other areas of the country—when last August the President came out with the idea of putting a lid on things. I know there was rejoicing in the minds of little shopkeepers and garage keepers and small business men at the position the President was taking, because they felt things were running away with the big fringe benefits, guaranteed income, and all the other things going with the large operator and more affluent people. These people saw that they were left with less and less, and what little money they had would buy less and less food and less and less clothing at the clothing store and less gasoline for their cars, trucks, and pickups at the service station. You are going to destroy the little man you are trying to save, and you will turn all his employees out along with him.

I repeat, the average middleman in this country is downright afraid of the Federal Government and often the State government. He is afraid of what it can do to him in any given set of circumstances. He cannot, as an individual, cope with the size and power and complexity of the Government, and he is afraid of what it is going to do next without asking him anything about it.

f this bill should become law, then I think it will be a further nonstration that this little man's fears are well justified.
Mr. President, those are my remarks and my feelings on the points t are primarily involved in this amendment. I do not particularly e to hold the floor any longer at this time, if there is someone else o wishes to speak.
Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The Presiding Officer. The clerk will call the roll.
The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. Cotton. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order
the quorum call be rescinded.
The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. Cotton. Mr. President, I made a few remarks the other day on s bill, and what I have to say is in a sense repetitious, but will go somewhat more detail as to the reasons why, as a Senator from w Hampshire, I am so determinedly opposed to this particular asure.
Mr. President, I do not think it can be said that I am in any sense opponent of civil rights, an opponent of integration, or an op-ent of fair and equal opportunity. The State that I represent has racial problems whatsoever. It was not until I was out of college came to Washington, as a matter of fact, to work on the staff former Senator and go to law school here, that I had any per-al contact with some of the problems that then existed and that , of course, do exist in a measure. s a young man, when I was in Washington, I rode the streetcars n those of one color had to sit in a certain part of the car and se of another color in another part. I have very vivid recollections ow shocked I was, as a New Hampshire Yankee, at some of the tices. I was here in Washington, incidentally, when a certain gressman who felt that a black man had been disrespectful or ant to him on the streetcar drew his revolver and shot him. He not kill him, but he shot him. The matter was taken care of, I k, by some kind of compromise in police court, and the State from h that Representative came promptly elected him to the U.S.
ate, where he served for a good many years.
remember later—20 years later—when I came back to Washing-in 1947 as a Member of the House of Representatives, being in a e rebuked or sneered at by a colleague. We were staying in the e hotel, and when we got into the elevator to go to the ground , that was being operated by a black girl, I took my hat off. That the custom in those days; we do not take off our hats to anyone adays, I guess, in an elevator. But I remember the rather caustic ment that was made.
r. President, I also recall, as a Member of this body, the early ts over the successive civil rights bills. supported them. Indeed, I well remember one of the civil rights sures—Senators will remember that there were three or four in ession, covering different aspects of the problem—when it was ded by the leadership of both parties that the time had come to k the filibuster, and we were assigned to stay in the Capitol all
t. Cots were set up in the old Supreme Court room, and enough ators to make a quorum were kept on the floor so that the filibuster had to be continued around the clock, day after day, until it w broken. I was one of those who stood by and helped break that fil buster and pass the bill.

But, Mr. President, there is a reaction that takes place when a cause, no matter how just, is carried to an extreme. We have only read the pages of history to know what happens. It so happens tha my ancestors in New England were of Puritan stock. I read with i terest how the Puritans rose up and beheaded their king, Charles Then came the years of the iron hand of Cromwell during whic morals, behavior, and the way of life were absolutely dictated at t point of the sword. When he died, what happened? The reaction too place, Charles II came back and dissipation to a degree perhaps u equaled in English history took place.

The Puritans came to the New World and settled up in New Eng land. Then they began to make the same rigid enforcement of wha they happened to believe to be the proper moral and ethical code. The came the witch-burnings in Salem. Fortunately, the infant country here outgrew that sort of governmental dominion.

Mr. President, there were other reactions. The excesses that too place in the days of Reconstruction after the war between the State may well have sown the seed for much of the bigotry and prejudic that followed.

I remember, as a small school boy, when my grandfather, who was a veteran of the Union Army in his teens and later became a preacher, used to talk to me about those days in our history. I am sure it will no be offensive to anyone in the Senate if I repeat what he used to say to me. He said:

> The blame for the bloodiest war we ever had in our history can be laid o the shoulders of the southern fire-eaters. But, remember the shame and th stigma of Reconstruction must always be laid on the shoulders of the North

Those days, when the sword and force were used to take one race and place it over another, resulted in the same thing that happened in the Puritan era. It resulted in a reaction—a reaction in which the inevitable occurred. The white race in the South reasserted its dominion, and I am sure reasserted it in a much more affirmative manner than it would have if the measures that preceded had been less obnoxious.

Mr. President, I supported all the civil rights measures until the omnibus civil rights bill of 1964. The reason why I feel so strongly about the pending bill is that the point I could not accept in the so-called omnibus civil rights bill of 1964 was Title VII. I was perfectly willing that we should enforce equal opportunity in employment in all those industries and all those vocations and all the business and commercial activities of this Nation in which the employment was fairly large. Whether it be a corporation or a labor union or a hiring hall, I was perfectly willing to support a measure that would enforce equal opportunity, with enough teeth in the law so that it could be enforced in those situations. But it will be recalled that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 provided that this equal opportunity unemployment should first be administered and enforced against all employers employing 100 or more employees. Then, after a year, it would decrease to those who employed 75 or more; then, after another year, it would be decreased to those who employed 50 or more; and, finally, in the fourth year to those who employed 25.

he very fact that this particular provision was placed upon the ble of this country in installments—in homeopathic doses, one ht say—showed that the proponents of that measure must have ized that they were traveling on thin ice and that they were ap-aching a problem of enforcement that was bound in the future, or d in the future, be fraught with injustice and with violence and, ou please, with renewed prejudice, defeating the purpose of the because it would be bound to arouse antagonism. felt so strongly about it that I resolved that if Title VII could be remedied, I could not vote for the measure. I well remember g to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, who was a Senahen and now is a Senator again, our good friend Senator Hum-y, who was managing the bill. I asked him whether he could see way clear to leave that at 100, because if he could, I could support bill—both vote for cloture and for the bill—with a clear con-ce. He was very nice to me and said he could not go quite that far, asked what I had to say about 50. It showed that he had some see blood in him, too.
nally, I thought it over, and I said that if the minimum number l be held to 50 in Title VII, I would vote for the bill. Unfortunate-owever, I was not given that opportunity—not because the Senafrom Minnesota did not sincerely follow through on his agree-
; but we had already voted cloture, and my amendment at the desk to fix this measure of employment at 100. When I asked unaniconsent to amend it to 50, the majority leader—as he had to, I ose—objected. So the vote came on the 100, and I was voted , and the provisions going down to 25 remained in the bill.
voted against the bill—one of only five Senators north of the n-Dixon line to vote against that omnibus bill of 1964, which had any very meritorious provisions.
. President, I am not trying to be a martyr or to plead for credit, want to say that I suffered from that vote. Many of the people home State could not understand why I had been one—conspicuone—of five Northern Senators to vote against probably the far-reaching and most important civil rights measure perhaps in istory of the country. Fortunately, it did not cost me my seat, or s not yet. But that is why I feel so strongly about it.
that time, when I spoke for my amendment, I remember saying Senate that it was all right in an industrial plant to make sure black and white, foreign and native born, the Jew, the gentile, veryone else should receive equal opportunities for employment, ot when we get into a small firm that has 25 employees. Why, are many country banks with more than 25 employees. In fact, country banks in the smallest hamlets and villages of our land
, and in many insurance agencies, in that highly competitive busi-of selling insurance, have more than 25 employees. We have for wept crocodile tears and wrung our hands in sympathy about business, and Senators serve with pride on the Small Business nittee, and justly so, and they go home and tell their people how fought to keep the little businessmen going. In the firms employ-5 persons, or even 30, in a highly competitive business field and they select an employee, it is very much like selecting a partner.
e felt and I still feel that that measure is far too low.

What have we here now?

Mr. President, this measure puts it down to eight employees.

I am sure that some of the proponents of the bill at this point, if th were listening to me—and not many are—would probably respo that this measure will be enforced with reason. They likely would s that probably in a small family business with 10 or 11 participan it would be very unlikely—where the human relationship is so vital for the Commission to be drastic in its enforcement.

When we write a Federal statute on the books, knowing—and I ca not believe but what a majority of the Senate knows—that it cann completely, equally, and impartially enforce it, but when we wri that into law, we are doing a very dangerous thing. It is a dangero thing to enact laws that depend on the judgment, the restraint, a the wisdom of those who enforce it. It could be enforced by an a bitrary person to the detriment of some of the most precious righ an American has to make a living.

I do not care where the number is placed in the labor laws. I d not care where it is placed anywhere else, but in this particular meas ure I assert without fear of intelligent contradiction that it just can not be enforced impartially.

Mr. President, can you imagine an ambitious black man who ha worked, sweated, toiled, and built up for himself a business, a litt plant, a little agency, some little business, and because he has done s under the handicap—if it is a handicap, and it still is in some meas ure—I hope it will not so continue—but under the handicap of his race, do you not expect, Mr. President, that when he has grown pros perous enough to employ some more people, that he will give that chance to people of his own race?

Of course he is. Of course, he has a right to do so.

I cannot imagine that whoever enforces this statute, if we pass it going in and saying to that black man, "You have got to employ two white people." I just cannot imagine it.

Well, if we are in a situation where fair enforcement in the eyes of the Government only works one way, even though there may be an element of justice in that attitude, we are passing an act that cannot and would not be enforced impartially between black and white or between men and women. It could not be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. COTTON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hesitate to interrupt the Senator because the pres entation of his views is so forceful. Although it is not persuasive to me, it is respected by this Senator. But he did say that the small entrepreneur black man, starting a business and growing, might be ordered to hire two white employees. I cannot understand the point of his saying, "two." Is the Senator suggesting that there might be a quota system——

Mr. COTTON. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Built within this legislation?

Mr. COTTON. No, I am not suggesting any quota system. I do not say that it would be two. It could be two or even one. I am saying that it would rest in the discretion of the Commission whether the black man, who had grown to the point where he had a fair number of em-ress and turned away a white man, could have the law technically proceed against him. I do not suggest it would be. I know that it ld not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I agree, certainly that is the law. The law does con-plate that now for those who are covered. But when the Senator
"two," it suggested to me that he might be thinking in terms demand that there be a quota of people here. That, of course, t within the bill——

Mr. COTTON. I thank the Senator for his correction. It was not my pose to say that this law would provide for a quota, but under the

r. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not believe that is quite accurate
r. Really it has to be found that individuals have been kept from oyment, because they are of a race, religion, sex, or national ori-hat dictates to the employer that he not hire them. It is discrimin and is not evaluated on the basis of quotas.

r. COTTON. What the Senator is saying is perfectly correct. But oint does not reach the basis of the issue here. The Senator is ctly correct, however. It would not be until someone turned one else away. It would not be until someone elevated or gave a notion to a member of one sex or one with seniority. In other ls, we might have the seniority system involved, a system that any Senators protest so strongly against. It would apply in an stry.

m not suggesting that it is a matter of a quota. I am suggesting the latitude allowed this Commission over these very small prises is one that could easily be abused. I am not suggesting that President, we can and we have and we should and we shall, as is fair and practicable in this law, apply it in favor of every ican, and afford equal opportunity, equal social recognition and equal citizenship. However, when we go too far, the act becomes a help but an irritant. And for my part, unless this bill were amend to permit a proper appeal of the edicts of these decisions and unl it were amended to maintain the minimum of 25 which, as I ha stated in my opinion, is too few—I could not bring myself possib to vote for this particular bill.

It would either be meaningless and only be enforced in certain s tions of the country and certain places or where certain conditio exist, or it will become a precedent.

We have gotten to the point here that every governmental act th takes place is beginning to make the relations between the grou nationalities, and races in this country more hostile rather than ameliorate them.

I feel that this particular measure, going so far and creating almo vote for cloture on this motion.

Mr. President, that is the reason that I wanted to state my reason on the RECORD. I thank the Senators for their patience.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COTTON. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Gambrell). The Senator fro Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that s usual his remarks were filled with logic, commonsense, and a practica application to the problems of life.

I might say further that the Senator is from New England and am from the Deep South. We have taken the same position on th amendment for almost identical reasons even though the economy o our respective areas is vastly different.

I commend the Senator from New Hampshire very highly for h logic and the reasons he has given. They are down to earth. The Se ator from New Hampshire always has speeches of substance whe ever he speaks and is a highly valuable Member of this body.

I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. COTTON. I thank the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observa tion?

Mr. COTTON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly it is fully appreciated not only by me bu by the entire Senate that when the Senator from New Hampshi speaks—and it is not every day, although some of us wish he wou speak more frequently—he speaks with reason and with a depth o conviction that, for another Member of the Senate, it is great to be the presence of.

f course, I disagree with the Senator from New Hampshire on the ted issue to which he has addressed himself today; that is, the level mployment or of membership in unions at which the enforcement he law would take place. If the Senator does not mind standing for w moments, I should like to recall that notwithstanding a difference the Senator from Minnesota, back in 1964—the Senator from nesota sat in this place as the manager of the civil rights bill that —the Senator from New Hampshire did vote for an opportunity t the Senate as a whole come to its collective judgment and vote on matter, and he did vote for cloture. His whole appreciation of the ity of the individual, expressed in his legal rights, and civil rights, involved in the cloture votes in 1965 and 1968, and the Senator's ng on substantive measures is fully understood. But from where I d, we are dealing with the equality of life as it is reflected in the to-day opportunity for a man or a woman to make his or her living ke care of a family.

e have decided as a matter of national policy that a man should le to go to work for his family, notwithstanding the fact that he ck or white, or Protestant or Catholic; that that should not be the rmining factor; that his ability, his industry, his integrity, and all e other criteria should be the employer's judgment on the man e woman who is seeking the job. Therefore, I personally feel that enator from New Hampshire is making a differentiation in terms personal relationship between an employer and an employee, and sts more of an impersonal relationship in the larger establish-. There is a logic, as when you stand in the shoes of the man who s a job. It does not matter whether it is with General Motors e general store. He wants a job in order to take care of his family. n he comes in, if he is black, whether he goes to General Motors or to a smaller place, a job is all he wants. It is our feeling that it d not matter, really, how big or how small the establishment is. ould not be kept from his livelihood, because he happened to be black or was raised Catholic or Protestant.

ally, we have recognized the difference between big business and business in many ways. We understand the hardship of running all business in an increasingly complex society, where "big busi- is the chief business. That is why Congress has been sensitive all businessmen and has provided low interest loans and tax bene- It has provided other programs to help small businessmen and ote their economic destiny. We have included special provisions to small business.

rtainly I think we are not imposing too much at all to say that essmen should recognize that discrimination in the selection of employees is not in the spirit of the Constitution and is not ding to the law that we enact here. So I respectfully disagree with nclusion as to employment, although I will say that we recognize ractical application of the new law. That is why it was stepped from applying to 100 to 25, and that is why we feel, with time g passed, that we are now at the point where the Commission can n the responsibility of seeing that this kind of equality requires duction to eight members or eight employees.

ally, the Senator from New Hampshire said that if the proper l procedure were available to the employer and the number remained at 25, he might vote for the bill. I simply wondered whet the Senator could tell me what he would consider the appropriate peal from a judgment of the Commission should be. Should the app be to the circuit court of appeals? Is there any other specific metho appeal that the Senator has in mind?

Mr. Cotton. No. First, I may say to my friend from New Jersey t he is always very fair and is always very kind in his comments appreciate them. That is characteristic of him.

In answer to his last question, I have felt, in voting on some of amendments offered by the Senator from Colorado. (Mr. Dominic as well as amendments offered by other Senators, that it may ma resort to an appeal more expensive. But frankly, I will say to Senator that I am not—this individual Senator is not—nearly so mu disturbed about the alleged inadequacy of provisions for appeal a am in the number of operatives that would bring the employer und the act.

I should like also to say to the Senator from New Jersey that it always a wonder to me that in view of these last steps for enforci conduct and rights of individuals by law, no one seems to take a notice of the fact that they may be completely counterproductive.

Suppose I am employer of 10, 12, 14, or even 20 employees. Suppo that a man of the black race should appeal to me for a job. I am su that I would give it to him. I am sure that I would like, and ma other employers would be happy, to give to those who are not of the particular color or race an opportunity. But there is something I kno as an employer from the act we passed in 1964, which will be true this act if we pass it. I know if I employ a white man and he turns o to be lazy or inefficient or unsatisfactory, I can call him right into m office and fire him and, in all likelihood, nobody is going to questi my right to discharge him, because of his incompetency. But if, in earnest desire to help a member of a race that has had all these diffic ties through the years in getting a fair break—and members of th race have had their difficulties, and I am one who sympathizes wi them in it, and realizes that the unemployment among Negroes at t present time is much greater than among white people—I also kno that if I employ him and give him a chance and he turns out not to a good employee and not to be efficient—because inefficiency and la ness are not the monopoly of any particular race—and I fire him, t first thing I know I will be under the scrutiny of the agents of th Commission.

I will have to go through the long ordeal and expense of trying prove that I did not discharge that man, because of his color; I di charged him, because he was not an efficient employee. I may have go to the Court of Appeals. I do not know.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. Cotton. Just one moment.

I am not saying that the statute requires this; I am talking about th practical situation. So, in a sense, when one tries to go so far in th perfectly laudable attempt to enforce equal rights—and nobody ca gain say that what we want is equal opportunity—as a practical matte we may be making things more difficult, and I might say to someo seeking employment, "Sorry, I do not have an opening right now. I a not putting on employees. Business is not so good. Sorry, young man perhaps sometime later employ somebody of my own race. That d be one of the byproducts of this particular act.

ay I say, before I yield again to my friend, the reason I brought Holman Hunt and that famous utterance of his that the door to the an heart can only be opened from within, is that we have reached point now in this country when that is the only way we can achieve t I am sure every one of us hopes and prays for, and that is the l of society where no race, no creed, no nationality suffers dis-ination. We cannot go the whole way, we cannot go the last mile, statute. We cannot enforce it with a bayonet. It has to be by the mple of good and earnest people of both races seeking a society in h we can live together.
ow I yield to the Senator.
r. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I just wanted to say that, recognizing might be an economic hardship on a small business or a small n in defending a situation similar to the one described by the tor from New Hampshire, it might come to that, and if so, in all e there should be a ruling in favor of the small businessman who firing for justifiable reasons that had nothing to do with the race e employee. In those situations, we have now included in the bill a ision for mandatory legal fees to be assessed and to be paid to the iling party.
. COTTON. If he prevails.
. WILLIAMS. Yes.
. COTTON. I did not intend to take another minute, but let me say from practical experience. Long before I ever expected to come to gress, I was practicing law in my own city of Lebanon, N.H. At time the labor legislation became law. I guess it was the Wagner but, at any rate, it was the legislation that was to protect workers being discriminated against, because they were members of a n or seeking to form a union. That became a Federal law. People appointed in various sections of the country to enforce it or to try laints. In almost every instance, those who were appointed to try complaints were former union organizers or executives.
one day a young man was discharged from a small plant in my
I do not know how many Senators ever worked in a brickyard. once when I was in school. Senators know, if they ever worked in kyard, that the clay, as it is soaked and is being passed into the where it is imprinted into bricks, is extremely heavy and can be al weapon. This rather rough young man persisted in taking up dful of clay—I do not know whether playfully or spitefully—and ing it at fellow workers, until one day he struck a man on the side neck and that man was in bed, in a cast, for more than 6 months.
efore that happened of his unruliness, his employer fired him. He diately took his appeal to the National Labor Relations Board. In nocence as a country lawyer, I thought I had plenty of evidence ight on my side. We went down to Boston after the case was ruled st us by the State authorities. I want to tell Senators that that ion has changed. I think we now have enforcement of the labor n a much more impartial way.
d not have any more chance of convincing that tribunal in the f Boston that the employer who fired this man—the man who to be the secretary of the union—was justified than I have today of becoming Vice President of the United States, and I purpos choose a very extreme illustration.

Immediately the order was issued that he had to restore this m to his employment and he had to pay him wages for all the time th he was out of employment. Of course, we could have taken an appe to the courts, but it was not worthwhile. Later this same habit of th young man—who I think is more thoughtless, perhaps, than vicious caused the injury that I mentioned, and he was then discharged a nobody objected.

This is just an example of what happens when you have a stat administered by people who are fanatically in favor of the purpo of the statute. I am not reproaching those who are. I have every a miration for the Senator from New Jersey, the Senator from Ne York, and other Members of this body who are earnestly seeking t millenium, who are earnestly seeking a society in which every membe as the Senator from New Jersey has so eloquently stated, has a chan to earn a living for himself and his family. I am simply saying w have reached the point where we have to try to do it by other mea than with a club.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, equal employment opportunity h been enshrined in the Constitution for over 100 years as part of th concept of equal protection of the laws under the 14th amendmen

That great amendment gave Congress the power "to enforce, l appropriate legislation" equal protection of the laws. Yet it was n until the enactment of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 tha Congress acted forcefully to combat employment discrimination.

Now that we have had nearly 8 years of experience under the 19 act, it is appropriate to take stock of what has been done and wha has not. It is clear that despite much progress, we cannot expect EEO effectively to combat the subtle yet vicious forms of employment dis crimination we can expect to encounter in the 1970's. It would only b repetitive of me to belabor the unhappy statistics of the EEOC conciliation record over the last 7 years. My distinguished colleagu from New Jersey and other Senators have placed these statistics o the record, and they reveal the inadequacy all too clearly.

These same statistics, however, also reveal that discriminatio in employment continues to exist—perhaps in greater and in more in sidious ways than any of us had imagined—and that therefore the fig for improved legislation continues on discrimination against wome discrimination against blacks, discrimination against Spanish-speak ing people, discrimination against American Indians, discriminatio against Orientals—the list grows in size and diversity with each pas ing year.

That mere conciliation powers might be inadequate was recognize early, and so in each of the last four Congresses there has been legis lation to give EEOC something more. In the 89th Congress the Hous acted upon a measure to give the EEOC the power to issue cease and desist orders, but the Senate failed to act. In the 90th Congress, th Labor and Public Welfare Committee of the Senate reported out a similar bill, but the full Senate failed to act. The Senate did act in th 91st Congress, passing a cease-and-desist bill 47 to 24, but the Hous did not act.

n the meantime the evidence of employment discrimination nted. After three abortive efforts, there is simply no justification further delay—a bill giving the EEOC new and more meaningful ers must be passed this year to put the full force of Government ind the effort to end employment discrimination. As the U.S. Civil hts Commission concluded in its report of last December, "The eral Civil Rights Enforcement Effort: One Year Later"—

e problem which permeates all EEOC activities is its lack of enforcement rs. Until this crucial legislative deficiency is corrected, EEOC's ability to tively deal with the enormous issue of employment discrimination will in limited.

EEOC's workload mounts and its staff increases, all of these unresolved ems will loom even larger as factors affecting its potential effectiveness.
the continuing viability of the agency these impediments to EEOC success be addressed promptly and vigorously.

e Senate has been considering in these last weeks whether to give EOC the power to issue cease-and-desist orders or only the power

Last week the Senate had the opportunity to make this choice clearly and very directly on three separate occasions, and on each sion it opted for the former alternative, just as it did in the 91st gress.

this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the usion of my remarks there be printed a report of the Civil Rights mittee of the Chicago Bar Association relating to the proposed dments to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This report forwarded to me by Mr. Jacques G. Fuller, executive director e Chicago Bar Association. The report cogently and logically s the case for expanded powers for the EEOC, and concludes pervasiveness of discrimination in employment throughout the United s and the complexity of this problem requires the expertise of an admin-ive agency equipped with judicially enforceable cease-and-desist powers to a maximum of enforcement effectiveness under the provisions of Title VII.

ere are, of course, many other elements of this bill besides grant-ease-and-desist to the EEOC: The expansion of the jurisdiction EEOC to State and local governments and to employers with as s eight employees; the transfer of the antidiscrimination func-of other agencies—the OFCC, the Justice Department, the Civil ce; the removal of the exemption for educational institutions t for religious institutions in pursuit of their religious activities.
y every one of these various provisions has been the subject of a amendment, and each Senator has had a chance to study the s of those provisions and cast his vote according to his respective sions. And in some instances—the transfer of the functions of the of Federal Contract Compliance, for example—an individual sion of the bill has been found not to be in accord with the wishes ajority of the Senators voting.

now the will of the majority of the Senate has been made clear rtually all of the major provisions of the bill, and the time has to get on with the business of the Senate. I have already ex-d my belief that the Senate should get on with its business of eng the 14th amendment, the raison d'etre of this Government, by to invoke cloture.

So let us be about the business of our Government. Let us act, in t words of the Commission on Civil Rights, "promptly and vigorousl to give all women and all men something very simple: The opportun to be able to pursue the employment of their choice with the know edge that their color, their sex, their nationality, or their religion w not be held against them.

I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the Reco

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in t Record, as follows:

REPORT OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS COMMITTEE OF THE CHICAGO BAR ASSOCIATION PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO TITLE VII OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1964

On September 16, 1971, the House of Representatives rejected H.R. 1746, l islation that would give the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEO power to issue cease and desist orders comparable to those powers now exercis by most federal regulatory agencies. 117 Cong. Rec. H8542. In its place, t House passed a substitute bill, H.R. 9247, proposed by the Nixon Administrati giving the EEOC the right to sue in the federal courts to enforce the provisio of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. §§ 701–16, 42 U.S.C., §§ 2000e 2000e–15 (1964), prohibiting discriminatory employment practices.

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits employment discrimina by employers, labor organizations, employment agencies, and joint labor-manag ment training programs on the grounds of race, color, sex, religion or natio origin. Sec. 703(a), (b), (c), (d). Under Section 706(a) of Title VII, the EE was created to deal with the charges of employment discrimination under t title. Although the Commission is empowered to investigate charges of di criminatory employment practices, its function in the attempt to resolve su grievances, after making a finding of reasonable cause, is limited to "informa methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion." Sec. 706(a). If these me ods fail, Title VII provides that a civil action may be brought by the aggriev party in a federal district court. Sec. 706(e). If the court finds an unlawf employment practice, it may enjoin the practice and order any affirmative acti considered appropriate including particularly reinstatement or hiring with without backpay. Sec. 706(g).

Ever since Title VII was first enacted, dissatisfaction with the Commissio limited function of conference, conciliation, and persuasion has been reflecte in strong efforts to pass legislation giving the Commission cease and desist po ers. The Johnson Administration, for example, asked Congress repeatedly give the Commission such powers. H. Report, No. 82-238, p. 2. Finally, in 197 in the 91st Congress the Senate passed S. 2453 giving the EEOC cease an desist powers, although the Nixon Administration opposed the measure with own bill authorizing the EEOC to go to the federal courts for enforcement order Id., p. 2. H.R. 17555, a bill similar to S. 2453, was reported in the House but die in the Rules Committee. Id. Thus, neither S. 2453 nor H.R. 17555 reached th House floor.

In the present Congress, Mr. Byrd of West Virginia and others introduced the Senate on September 14, 1971, S. 2515, a bill which included the provisio approved by the Senate in 1970 providing cease and desist powers for the EEO
S. 2515 also consolidates federal equal employment programs under the EEO by transferring to the Commission the authority of the Office of Federal Co tract Compliance (OFCC) in the Department of Labor to require compani receiving government contracts to be equal opportunity employers and of th Civil Service Commission to require equal opportunity in federal employmen
Although the House Committee on Education and Labor voted to report H.
1746 a bill identical to S. 2515, on June 2, 1971, the House passed instead th Administration substitute, H.R. 9247. See H. Report, No. 92-238; 117 Cong. Re H8542. S. 2515 is, however, still pending in the Senate and awaiting both Committee Report and final action by the Senate. See Hearings on Equal E ployment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971, 92nd Cong. 1st Sess. (1971

Because of the prevasive nature of employment discrimination in our societ the strongest possible enforcement powers are needed to eliminate such dis crimination. It is the recommendation of this Report that by giving the EEO judicially enforceable cease and desist powers the EEOC would become mo ctive in overseeing the enforcement of equal job opportunities than it would had only the power to seek court enforcement on its own. Accordingly, we ress our support for the grant of cease and desist powers to the EEOC as d in S. 2515 and oppose the enactment of court enforcement powers as re- passed by the House in the substituted bill, H.R. 9247.

INEFFECTIVENESS OF CONFERENCE, CONCILIATION AND PERSUASION UNDER THE PRESENT STATUTE

itle VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits discrimination in employ- t by four major groups: (1) employers of 25 or more persons (Sec. 701(b)); labor organizations with 25 or more members, or which operate a hiring or hiring office (Sec. 701(e)); (3) employment agencies (Sec. 703(b)); and joint labor-management committees controlling apprenticeship or other ning or retraining programs (Sec. 703(d)). To enforce Title VII, the Act blished a five-member commission whose members are appointed by the ident and approved by the Senate, "as a national counterpart to State and fair employment practice commissions. . . ." See Federal Civil Rights rcement Effort, A Report of the United States Commission on Civil Rights p. 263. It is estimated that the coverage of Title VII includes approximately rcent of the Nation's labor force. Id., p. 264. Exemptions from coverage in- : employees of federal, state, or local governments (Sec. 701 (b) (1)), fide private membership clubs, (Sec. 701 (b) (2)), Indian tribes, (Sec. b) (1)), employees of religious organizations who perform work related to ious activities, (Sec. 702), and employees of educational institutions who ngaged in educational activities. Id.

spite the wide jurisdiction of the EEOC and the prevalance of discriminatory oyment practices, the function of the Commission is limited to seeking the nation of job discrimination through the "informal methods of conference, liation, and persuasion." Sec. 706 (a). The commission process begins when plainant files a sworn, written charge that he is aggrieved by one or more e unlawful employment practices listed in Sections 703 and 704 of the Act nen a Commission member charges that a violation of the Act has occurred. vestigation follows, and if probable cause is shown, the Commission must the offender's voluntary compliance with the Act. If such conciliation efforts unsuccessful, the EEOC, not later than sixty days after the filing of the laint, must notify the complainant who may then file suit in federal district Sec 706(e). If there is applicable state or local law prohibiting employment imination, the complainant must first seek redress under those applicable before filing with the EEOC. Sec. 706 (b). In addition to this conciliatory ion, the EEOC can refer cases to the Department of Justice for action e it is alleged that a "pattern of discrimination" exists and it can file s or supporting briefs when individuals file cases. Sec. 706, 707(a).

hough the conciliation process does have some theoretical merits to com- it, the failure of the EEOC's conciliatory function to even dent the abund- of discriminatory employment practices throughout the country is not seri- questioned by anyone. William H. Brown III, Chairman of the EEOC, in mony before the Subcommittee on Labor of the Committee on Labor and c Welfare of the Senate, stated that since its beginning in 1965, the Com- on has received 81,004 charges and that in less than half of this number he Commission able to achieve a totally or even partially satisfactory con- ion.[1] See Hearings on the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement 1971, 92d Cong. 1st Sess. (1971), p. 53. It is clear that significantly large ers of aggrieved individuals have not been able to achieve any settlement at rough the EEOC and, consequently, are forced either to give up their claims seek redress through the federal courts. Id., p. 53. The current estimate is during the present fiscal year, more than 32,000 charges will be filed with ommission. Id., p. 55. Because of this rapidly increasing work-load, charges ot resolved on a timely basis and, as of June 30, 1971, the EEOC had a g of almost 32,000 cases. Id.

Commission's inability to deal with the ever-increasing number of com- s with the limited authority currently available to it is especially disturb-successful agreement is one in which EEOC, the respondent and the charging party signatories. In a partially successful conciliation, the respondent does not sign an ent but does agree to eliminate the discrimination identified in the decision. ing in the light of the relevant statistics regarding the employment and inco of minority groups and women. Chairman Brown's testimony, mentioned above especially revealing:

"In a special report released this year by the Bureau of the Census, 'The Soc and Economic Status of Negroes in the United States,' it is clear from the stat tics presented that while Negroes have made strides toward bettering their po tion, the goal of social equality is not yet to be seen . . .

"For example, the reports show that the median family income for Negroes 1970 was $6,279 while the median income for whites for the same period w $10,236. This earnings gap between the races is obviously largely attributat to disparate employment policies. This conclusion is supported by statistics whi show that Negroes are concentrated in the lower-paying less prestigious positio in industry, and are largely precluded from the higher-paid more prestigio positions. . . .

"While the statistics on Spanish-speaking Americans are not nearly as curre or as complete, available data indicates that this, the second-largest ethn minority group in the Nation with approximately 7.5 million members, faces similar plight. In 1969, the median family income for Spanish-speaking Americ families was $5,641. About 17% of these families had incomes of less tha $3,000. . . .

"The other major group which is subject to blatant discrimination in emplo ment are the approximately 30 million employed women in the Nation. [Thes women constitute approximately 38% of the total work force. . . .

"[I]n 1968, 60% of women but only 20% of men earned less than $5,000 p year, while only 3% of women but 28 % of men earned $10,000 per year or more Id., pp. 50–53.

These figures show what critics of the EEOC's lack of enforcement authorit have been saying all along: the EEOC must be given the strongest possible e forcement powers to carry out its objective of eliminating discrimination in em ployment. When the weak conciliatory function of the Commission is considere together with the small proportion of cases resolved by private litigation an the total of only sixty-nine pattern and practice cases that the Department o Justice has brought, the inadequacy of the present means of enforcing our s leged goal of equal employment opportunity becomes glaring. Federal Civil Right Enforcement Effort (1970), pp. 336, 341. During fiscal year 1970, for example, th Commission itself participated in 167 private suits and recommended only 7 pattern cases to the Attorney General. See Fifth Annual Report, E.E.O.C., p. 1

THE NEED FOR CEASE-AND-DESIST POWERS

Contrasting the EEOC's settlement record with that of the NLRB and sta fair employment practices commissions (FEPC's) helps to expose the primar reason for the EEOC's comparative failure. The NLRB, for example, has settle 90% of the discriminatory employment charges it has retained through setth ment agreements, voluntary withdrawal of the charges or dismissal. See A. Cox & D. Bok, Labor Law: Cases and Materials at 138 (7th ed. 1969). FEPC's wit cease and desist powers have achieved a 95% successful conciliation rate wher probable cause is found. See Note, "Employment Discrimination: State FEP Law and the Impact of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964," 16 W. Res. L. Re 608, at 622 (1965).

Without effective enforcement power the EEOC will not be any more successfu in resolving its increasing volume of complaints than it has been in the past. Suc power, it is generally conceded, could take two forms: either the Commissio could have the power to bring suits in the federal courts on behalf of complai ants, or the Commission could have administrative cease and desist powers co parable to those powers presently exercised by most federal regulatory agencie The basic issue, then, is which of these alternatives will insure the most effectiv enforcement of Title VII.

One of the main arguments of the proponents of the judicial approach is th the court remedy will provide relief more quickly. Surely quick relief is essenti to effective enforcement. But the experiences which appear to be most relevan as possible indicators in respect to the relative comparison of delays do not su port the judicial approach. The delay experienced in the administrative proces ings before the NLRB, for example, from the filing of a charge in an unfair labo practice case until the trial examiner's decision is issued, averages only 7 months. House Report No. 92-238, p. 11. Moreover, approximately 95% of th unfair labor practice cases do not go beyond this stage! Id. The experience of th e fair employment practices commissions may be even more to the point. In 5 there were twenty-five states that had some form of prohibition against dis- nination in employment. See Note, 16 W. Res. L. Rev. at 614, supra. Only five hese states did not have statutes providing cease and desist power for their employment practices commissions or their counterparts. Id. In all of the nty-five states where probable cause was found, in about half of the cases filed ty-five percent of these cases were disposed of by conciliation without even need of a hearing. Id. See also a 1963 study of the Senate Labor Committee, Cong. Rec. 7207 (April 8, 1964). The more recent experience in New York as ted by Congressman Reid, the former chairman of the New York State Com- sion Against Discrimination (now the division of human rights), is especially ificant:

The figures in New York's experience clearly emphasize my point. Between 5 and 1967, 16,1[illegible] complaints were received by the New York commission; 98 ent of them—all but 326—were settled before they were ordered for hearing more than two-thirds of those ordered for hearing were settled before the ring was completed.

That means that in New York in 22 years only 110 cases out of 16,000 needed ner action, and that is largely because the State commission possessed e-and-desist powers." 117 Cong. Rec. H 8522 (Sept. 16, 1971).

ring the EEOC cease and desist powers, as the experience of state fair em- ment practice commissions amply demonstrates, would work to reduce both delays and the backlog by effective action and by encouraging settlement of plaints before enforcement becomes necessary. If the cease and desist ap- h did not work or if there were advantages to the court enforcement ap- h, then why has the administrative alternative, been chosen by, at latest t. 32 States? See remarks of Congressman Reid, 117 Cong. Rec. H 8522 (Sept. 971).

addition, the problems of court congestion should not be overlooked. The C has estimated that, should the court enforcement alternative be chosen, an tional 20,000 cases would be introduced into the federal system. Id., at H Chief Justice Burger has opposed any increased burdens for the federal s without first providing for the reorganization of the federal judicial system. ssing the American Bar Association last year, he stated:

ne difficulty lies in our tendency to meet new and legitimate demands with laws which are passed without adequate consideration of the consequences e terms of case load." Burger, "State of the Judiciary—1970," ABA Journal 970, p. 932.

en though delays vary considerably from district to district, the courts are congested than ever before. In the major population center of the Southern ict of New York, for example, the wait from the time a case was ready rial until the nonjury trial in fiscal 1970 was 38 months. See House Report, . p. 11. The delay in the Eastern District of Louisiana was 24 months. Id. econd argument advanced in favor of the judicial approach is that questions ployment discrimination arouse strong emotions and such matters, it is said, nore appropriately resolved in a court where federal judges command the t of the public. House Report, supra, p. 62, Minority Views. Public respect ie forum of resolution in such matters is unquestionably important, but the nistrative cease and desist machinery would not lack public esteem. To the ary, the administrative process appropriate to resolving the complex prob- n the employment discrimination area requires the expertise that an admin- ive tribunal is better suited to supply. Remedies fashioned by experts in the t matter will more likely command the public respect than not. Problems of t, moreover, have not arisen in regard to the state fair employment prac- mmissions and there is no apparent reason why such problems need occur in leral context.

connection with the above point on the greater prestige of federal judges, a argument for the judicial approach is that the courts are better able to needed evidence for an appropriate disposition of the cases because of their ery and subpoena powers. But there is little, if any, support for the proposi- hat the federal agencies, like the NLRB and the FTC, armed with the cus- y administrative investigatory powers, have been substantially handicapped development of adequate evidence for the proper disposition of cases. There genuine positive value in the circumstance that administrative tribunals ss subject to technical rules governing evidence, pleadings and motion prac- House Report, supra, p. 11.

The opponents of cease and desist power for the EEOC also argue that t administrative process would be inherently unjust if administered by the EEC and that principles of justice require employment discrimination cases be hea only in federal courts. In support of this position, two claims are made: first, th claim that the EEOC has "attained an image as an advocate of civil rights" and such "cannot be an impartial arbiter" of Title VII cases. House Report, supr p. 59, Minority Views; second, they also claim that by giving the EEOC cea and desist powers, a party would be presumed guilty before he would have be properly heard, or in short, the agency making the initial finding cannot al adjudicate the final order, Id.

As for the first claim, it is true that the EEOC has been an advocate of civ rights, but then this role has come about only because its lack of enforcemen powers. The filing of amicus and supporting briefs is certainly compatible wi the Commission's proper concerns, and considering that this has been its on participation in the enforcement process, this is hardly a basis for condemnatio Moreover, the EEOC experience thus far does not indicate a lack of objectives in the disposition of the charges filed with it.

The claim that the EEOC is too biased to objectively adjudicate Title VII issu merges with the claim that the Commission should not make both the initial find ings and the final orders. Both these claims ignore the procedural safeguard provided by the Adimnistrative Procedure Act. Hearing examiners, for exampl would be employed by the Civil Service Commission and not by the EEOC. If an party feels that bias has occurred during any proceedings, records are kept t insure adequate judicial review.

The sixth argument advanced for the judicial approach is that lack of sufficien funding causes more delay in the administrative process than in the courts and it is claimed, this has been the real reason for the two-year backlog of cases pres ently before the Commission. See Comment, "Developments in the Law—Employ ment Discrimination and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964," 84 Harv. L Rev. p. 1271. First, as mentioned earlier, the major cause for the current back log before the Commission is its lack of enforcement power. Without effectiv enforcement provisions, recalcitrant employers have little motivation to attemp the conciliation process, and they are well aware of the fact that the final burde for attaining compliance would involve a time-consuming and costly court suit that most employees can ill afford. As for the funding problem under Title VII the best question appears to be: Where would the small amount of funding th Commission would be likely to get do the most good? Would it be better spent i proccessing cases before the Commission or in bringing suits in courts? Experi ence seems to point towards administrative processing rather than court enforce ment as the better choice.

CONCLUSION

Besides granting the EEOC the authority to issue judicially enforceable cease and desist orders in the Courts of Appeals, there are other provisions of S. 2515 which would serve to augment its administrative effectiveness. This bill woul extend the coverage of Title VII to employers of eight or more workers and t unions with eight or more members, instead of the twenty-five figure limit now im posed. Also, federal, state, and local government employees as well as employee of educational institutions would be covered. We believe that the pervasiveness o discriminatory employment practices justifies such broadened coverage.

S. 2515 would retain the right of private suits under the existing law. It woul also transfer the right to bring "pattern of practices" suits in employment case from the Department of Justice to the EEOC, and it would transfer the func tions of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance to the EEOC. These admin istrative transfers are based on the eminently sensible concept of concentratin all related enforcement responsibilities in a single agency. Overlap would thereb be reduced and coordination of a concerted effort to eliminate discrimination i employment might be better achieved. All of these provisions perhaps should b justified at some length, but that would miss the central focus of S. 2515 and th major contention of this Report. This pervasiveness of discrimination in em ployment throughout the United States and the complexity of this problem re quires the expertise of an administrative agency equipped with judicially en forceable cease and desist powers to attain a maximum of enforcement effective ness under the provisions of Title VII.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) to rther promote equal employment opportunities for American rkers.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, I rise in support of amendment 813 to 2515.

First of all, I want to state that I am opposed to this bill without Dominick amendment, which was narrowly defeated in two earlier es. If we are to have this legislation, however, we must try to reduce detrimental effects and correct some of the other obvious short- nings of the bill.

The amendment before us is a very reasonable one, and I think goes ng way in helping in this direction.

t would maintain the present law which exempts employers with er than 25 workers from coverage. S. 2515 would reduce the num- of employees to eight.

n other words, the new, arbitrary power we are granting to the al Employment Opportunity Commission could be and would be l not only against small businesses and small factories, but against t are essentially family businesses.

ow I am not arguing that family businesses nor any businesses ld discriminate in employment. I fully believe that people should ired for jobs on the basis of their ability and their compatibility the tasks that are to be performed. Twenty-five is not any magic ber, nor is the number eight. We might make it 50, or 20, or three, erhaps total coverage of all businesses clear down to the number though I think this would be very inequitable. But to arrive at the e of eight is just as inequitable.

is estimated that the change in the coverage from businesses em- ing 25 down to businesses employing eight would bring another million persons under the equal employment opportunities isions.

his is, of course, very misleading because it makes it sound like 6½ on persons really are gaining some new benefit. Actually, in my nation, this legislation will cause more harm than good and will more employees, as well as employers, than it will help.

r. President, in Arizona we have many small businesses which are by families. They have several family members as employees, they other workers that are as much close friends of the owners as they mployees of the firm.

e have more Indians in our State than there are in any other. We vast reservations on which Indians are living. We are trying to g industry to those reservations. We have many towns adjoining reservations and we are attempting to bring industry into those s. Many of them would be operated by families and would have as as 8 or 10 employees. I am wondering whether this bill would ute to their detriment. I would say that if it were enforced the some Senators are discussing, it would be very detrimental to Indian citizens. On some of those Indian reservations we have ployment of 50 to 70 percent and as I stated previously, we are g to correct this situation.

We have many firms elsewhere that are, in essence, ethnicall oriented.

The National Economic Development Association office in Phoeni has been doing an excellent job of providing loans for minorit operated businesses. The NEDA is described as a catalyst in both th Federal and private sectors to develop and coordinate opportunitie for Spanish-surnamed individuals and corporations to engage in pro fitable business enterprizes.

This week I received in the mail a booklet from the National Eco nomic Development Association. This 22-page booklet is entitled, "D rectory of Mexican-American Businesses in the Greater Phoeni Metro Area."

The National Economic Development Association determine whether or not these businesses are operated by Mexican Americans b the identification of these individuals by their racial parentage.

Mr. President, approximately one out of every six Arizonans is o Spanish or Mexican-American descent. Phoenix and Tucson are filled with businesses—firms that have operated for many years even back into territorial times—that have been established by persons with Spanish surnames. We are proud of this heritage, and we are proud of the industry and progress of Mexican Americans. They are a proud people who work hard, who are honest and law abiding. They take just pride in their own heritage, and their language.

Spanish surnames are carried on many small businesses in the Phoenix area. In many cases, of course, these businesses employ people of not only Mexican American descent, but of other races—white, black, Chinese, Indian or whatever.

It also is true, that many of these small businesses employ Mexican Americans almost exclusively. These are small businesses, perhaps of 10 or 12 employees at the most, operating quite successfully in those areas of Arizona.

In some cases, the businesses are in effect an extension and an intensification of the heritage of these people. They have a common culture and heritage which they live 24 hours a day, on the job and off.

Mr. President, there are other cases in which small businesses are operated in a very like fashion.

I know this certainly is true all over the United States, but it is especially true in the southwestern United States, and in many cases the firm is in itself an element of the culture of a people—Mexican-American, Jewish, black, or whatever.

Are we to tell these small businesses that they can no longer operate in this manner, that—if they have an all-Mexican American, or all-Jewish, or all-whatever, staff of workers—they must integrate?

We talk about our welfare rolls, and the tremendous increase in them that has come about in the last few years. What would they do with these people who would be displaced if we insisted and the EEOC made it mandatory that they integrate such establishments?

Mr. President, it seems to me that we still have room in our country for these small businesses which do no harm, and indeed, fill a great need for certain people who like to work in a friendly, personal, culturally comfortable atmosphere.

I am concerned about what happens to part-time workers. It is possible that this legislation may cause some firms to eliminate the services of semi-retired employees?

Ve have many retirement areas in Arizona. These people need, ecially since we have had inflation in the past few years, some loyment to make it possible for them to support themselves. I that it is vital that they have a chance to work part time.
f a firm has, say, seven employees, would it add the eighth, the h, or the 10th, if this legislation goes into effect? In fact, even , would they add more than 24? Would reducing the number to t not be a disincentive from giving employment to additional kers? Is it not possible that a small company which simply does want to be under the provisions of this law might cut back its force and thus cost the jobs of people who are desperately in of the income? I believe this is entirely possible and even likely.
here are some businesses that are established in retirement areas, I think that we all realize that there are no doubt a great number rtain ethnic groups in those retirement areas. Consider the hard- that would be placed upon the employer if he had to bring people om miles away, and also the problems the employee would have, any instances, where he is just working part-time and certainly l not afford the cost of transportation to a distant place of business otain employment.
me may say that my concerns in the area are not realistic. But there is reason for concern. With the extremes that we are seeing ning is possible.
alots who have the best of intentions could bring about eradication ltures and heritages which we have built upon. I do not want e this happen; not to my own heritage, not to the Mexican- rican; not to any one of the many ethnic groups or races which helped build the foundations of America.
o not want to see one great mass of faceless Americans who speak, , dress, and act identically. Yet that seems to be the ultimate e direction our Federal bureaucracy is trying to take us.
. President, I also would like to make a few additional com- s about bureaucracy—and this is just another huge layer of ucracy we are adding here. I want to talk about what we are to the small businessman, the entrepreneur. Again I say we rowing up one roadblock after another to private enterprise. are building regulation-after-regulation that means only one —the little man does not have a chance.
nagazine I was reading this week carried a very good example hat I am saying.
is is what a would-be businessman was saying:

my life. I've wanted to be in business for myself. I wanted to be an reneur. I thought a small operation could be swifter, could run rings l the big outfits by accentuating personal service, and provide the boss— ith greater personal satisfaction.
e years ago, I left a pretty good job to start my own show. It was a n-and-a-girl establishment. We had a good product a service. We had larned good customers. Everything looked dandy.
n came the forms. There were forms to be filled and reports to be made federal government, to the state, to the city, like you wouldn't believe. ajority of my time was spent struggling with forms and there wasn't time or energy left to do the primary job.
gave it up and went back to work for a larger organization.

President, this is happening all over America, unfortunately. e the small entrepreneur going out of business. We see very rner groceries or other small business operations now, whereas just a few years ago, before we had all the redtape and the proble that they have to solve, they were doing quite well.

Mr. President, I have heard that lament time after time, that th have given up their places of business because they just could do the work that was involved as far as Government restrictions w concerned. Now we are going to add another Government restricti

Men and women who are very able and eager to run small busines find that they are overwhelmed by paperwork and regulations a redtape. I realize that it is not only the Federal Government, b they also have the same problems with cities, counties, States, a other jurisdictions.

Still, at every level of government we are encouraging people to into business, to try to do something for themselves.

Operating businesses should be relatively simple if everyone to enjoy fully the opportunities we like to believe we have in Americ Every day something seems to be done in Congress or in the ma of Federal agencies that works to defeat this part of the America dream. On one hand we are telling our people that we are going be of assistance to them, and on the other hand we are passing legisl tion that will be very detrimental to them in many areas.

The Mexican-American citizens are in various businesses—air-co ditioning service, appliances, architecture, automobile body repairi and painting, bakeries, ballrooms, a large number of barber sho beauty shops, bicycle shops—and array of talent that is being utiliz now by these people in small businesses. Some are in the contracti business and are producing, in most cases, low-cost homes. They a having great difficulty in construction work because of the regulatio with which they have to contend. I do not think we should give the further concern.

As I have said, operating businesses should be relatively simple everyone is to enjoy fully the opportunities we like to believe we ha in America. But we are putting up a barrier to these opportunities.

Mr. President, any type of small firm may find itself with eig employees. They start out small; they are successful; we want them be successful. In many instances, they desire to employ their neig bors, their friends, their relatives. Should we block that operation?
does not take a very large operation to utilize eight employees. It co be a family run restaurant that stays open, say, for 12 hours a day 14 hours a day and has two shifts. It could be a small department sto a garage, or even a lawn mowing service.

I know of one illustration in which a witness testified before one our committees about a tamale factory that employed quite a number people. They would like to branch out and have smaller factories some of the other communities. If they were employing as many eight people in these smaller factories, they probably would st where they are and just deliver out of the central factory. But I th it would be very beneficial to the communities if they could operate those communities; and they say that they could do so successfully they did not have too many restrictions.

It really does not take too much of a business to have 25 employe but there is quite a difference between eight and 25. It seems much m likely that a firm with 25 employees no longer can be considered a fa ily business per se. Many family businesses employ more than eight.

iness of 25 employees, if it stays in business very long, will have the power and experience to cope with the bureaucratic redtape that been growing in this country. The business with 25 employees also bably will be recruiting employees from the population in general, ier than relying on family and long-time acquaintances for a work e.

Ir. President, I do not believe that reducing the coverage of the l employment law from businesses with 25 employees to businesses eight employees -family businesses—will significantly help ority employment in America.

recall that when we were talking about passing this legislation, the arose as to whether or not small businesses would be brought er these regulations. Of course, at that time that was one of the ments in favor of passing it—that this would not affect small nesses which had fewer than 25 employees. Now we are bringing it n to eight employees.

s I have suggested, if carried to the ultimate, as bureaucratic zea-are prone to do, it could actually hurt minority employment. It l provide new impediments to the creation of small businesses, eslly by minority groups.

is time for us to start making life a little simpler for our people, our businessmen. We keep passing law after law here, and, more than not, we compound the problems we already have in America.
less we adopt this amendment, we will have added another com-tion and will have done nothing to help the people we seek to through this bill.

firmly support the amendment. I feel that the adoption of this dment will at least be of some benefit with respect to this lation.

. President, I yield the floor.

On page 38, line 11, after the word "court" insert a comma and the following: "and the Commission determines, after investigation, that there is reasonable cause to believe that the alleged unlawful employment practice was willful".

On page 39, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following:

"(2) In making a determinaiton under this subsection, the Commission is required to overcome a rebuttable presumption that evidence of equal treatment of individuals by an employer, union, or employment agency constitutes compliance with the requirements of this title."

On page 39, line 21, after the word "practice" insert the following: "and that the unlawful employment practice was willful.".

On page 40, line 14, insert after the period the following new sentence: "If the Commission finds that the respondent has engaged in an unlawful employment practice and that the unlawful employment practice was not willful, the Commission shall proceed under subsection (r) (2) of this section.".

On page 50, line 7, strike out the quotation marks.

On page 50, between lines 7 and 8, insert the following:

"(r) (1) In any case in which the Commission determines that there is not reasonable cause to believe that the alleged unlawful employment practice was willful, and if within sixty days after a charge is filed with the Commission or within sixty days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), the Commission has been unable to obtain voluntary compliance with this Act, the Commission shall so notify the General Counsel who may bring a civil action against the respondent named in the charge. If a charge filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) is dismissed by the Commission or if within one hundred and eighty days from the filing of such charge or the expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), whichever is later, the Commission has not filed a civil action under this section, or the Commission has not entered into a conciliation agreement to which the person aggrieved is a party, the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and within ninety days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge (A) by the person named in the charge as claiming to be aggrieved, or (B) if such charge was filed by an officer or employee of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene in such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending the termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (c) of this section or further efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance.

"(2) In any case in which the Commission finds by preponderance of the evidence taken by the Commission that the unlawful employment practice was not willful, and if within thirty days of such finding, the Commission shall so notify the General Counsel who may bring a civil action against the respondent named in the complaint. If the Commission does not file a civil action under this subsection, the Commission shall so notify the person aggrieved and within thirty days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the complaint by the person named in the complaint as claiming to be aggrieved. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene in such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance.

"(3) If the court finds that the respondent has engaged in or is engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include, but is not limited to, reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice), or any other equitable relief as the court deems appropriate. Back pay liability shall not exceed that which accrues from a date more than two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commission. Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable."

On page 50, line 8, strike out through line 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) (1) Subsection (f) of section 706 of such Act is redesignated as subsection (s).

"(2) Subsection (g) of section 706 of such Act is repealed.

"(3) Subsections (h) through (k) of section 706 of such Act and all references thereto are redesignated as subsections (s) through (w), respectively."

On page 50, line 11, strike out "Section 706(r)" and insert in lieu thereof "Section 706(s)".

On page 50, line 18, strike out "(q)" and insert in lieu thereof "(q) and (r)".

On page 50, line 19, strike out "(u)" and insert in lieu thereof "(r) and (u)".

At time, he desires to continue with the speech he embarked upon er this week.

ward the end of his remarks on that occasion, he was pointing out of the iniquitous provisions in this bill that gives the Commission power to act as prosecutor, jury, and judge, to decide the case having received the complaint, investigated it, and filed the ges. In addition, the Commission is given the right to go into the eral district court and obtain injunctive relief against an em- er—an employer of as few as eight persons.

In the course of my remarks, I pointed out that the use of injunctio in labor disputes was severely criticized by Samuel Gompers, head o the American Federation of Labor, and that under the Norris-LaGuar dia Act of 1932, the use of injunction in labor disputes was outlawed and the wise provisions of that bill are still the law of the land, as they should be.

Mr. President, the parallel was drawn by the junior Senator from Alabama that the use of injunction by employers against employees was outlawed under the Norris-LaGuardia Act. Yet, this bill provides for injunctive relief on behalf of employees against employers. It would be well for those representing labor who advocate S. 2515 to pause and ponder the wise words of Samuel Gompers which I quoted in my earlier remarks this week and which, of course, already appear in the Record, and to review thoroughly the cases involving labor disputes prior to 1932.

Mr. President, I am sure there are few among us who will not say that perhaps the most shameful chapters of our judiciary history were written by judges in labor relations cases prior to the enactment of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. Indeed, the susceptibility to abuse by judges of the injunctive process is clearly illustrated by the example of the years prior to 1932 when judges, acting without juries, in an almost unbroken line of cases, used the injunction to frustrate the efforts of labor to secure fair wages and safe working conditions.

That is one of the great milestones in labor relations law and procedure in this country—a great act. But if it be good, on the one hand, to bar injunction in labor disputes against employees, why would it not also be fair to bar injunction in disputes as to unfair employment practices by the Commission on behalf of aggrieved employees against the employer?

If this bill becomes law, many of the most cherished benefits which organized labor has attained in the last 40 years would no longer be matters of right, but would automatically become matters of administrative grace to be doled out by EEOC bureaucrats as rewards for good behavior or withheld as punishment when any union does not comply with their demands. So the EEOC is going to have control over the union as well as the companies themselves. I believe that if this bill is enacted, if it does become law, it is going to be such a monster, such a colossus, such a Frankenstein monster, that it could well destroy many of the rights of employers and many of the rights of labor unions and the employees they represent. The law which tells the employer who his workers shall be today can be reversed and the worker told who his employer shall be tomorrow—and at what wages.

Under the broad grant of power in the bill before us, the seniority system, a basic fabric of unionism, would be adversely affected, if not destroyed.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for a statement by me on that question, with the understanding that he will not lose his right to the floor by so doing?

Mr. ALLEN. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. ERVIN. A number of officials of one of the largest industries in the United States visited my office some time ago and informed me that they were having trouble with the Office of Federal Contract Compliance in the Department of Labor. They informed me that af ximately 35 percent of their employees were black and that, for t reason, there was no solid basis for any claim they were dis- ninating against blacks in employment. They stated that the per- tage of blacks was far in excess of the numerical percentage of ks in the population from which they drew their employees. They me, however, that they were having a great deal of trouble nego- ing with the Office of Federal Contract Compliance because that e was not even as enlightened a legislator or a regulator as the ient Roman Emperor Caligula.

aligula, as the Senator from Alabama knows, wrote his laws in ll letters and hung them high on the wall so that people could read or reach them, and therefore he could punish them for ations of laws of which they were ignorant.

rom what these gentlemen told me, Caligula was a far more ible regulator than the Office of Federal Contract Compliance in Department of Labor, because if a man could get a long enough er and a big enough magnifying glass, he could climb up the lad- nd read Caligula's laws.

ut these gentlemen told me that they could not read the regulations ne requirements of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance in Department of Labor because that office refu ed to commit its irements to writing. They said that they would hold oral con- ations with them and make suggestions about what they should in their employment practices so as not to discriminate in the of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance. They informed hat they would follow those suggestions and bring their product for consideration of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, the Office of Federal Contract Compliance would then demand they do other things that had not been mentioned to them before.

ese gentlemen informed me that their particular industry was ndent to a high degree on Government contracts. They said, ly, that the Office of Federal Contract Compliance told them would have to alter their entire seniority system in order to put blacks in positions of seniority, even over others who had been them a much longer time. They told me that they informed the e of Federal Contract Compliance that their seniority system was p and defined by collective bargaining agreements that they had with the unions representing their employers under the provi- of the National Labor Relations Act.

. Allen. This bill would throw collective bargaining agreements he window.

. Ervin. When they called this to the attention of the Office of ral Contract Compliance, they said that if they did what they demanding they would be sued by the union for breach of con- and might induce a strike.

. President, they said they were informed by the officials of the e of Federal Contract Compliance in the Department of Labor the performance of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance ar superior to the enactments of Congress in respect to collective ining, and that those officials demanded that they forthwith up- eir seniority system.

old these gentlemen, as chairman of the Subcommittee on the ration of Powers, that I thought the Office of Federal Contract

Compliance was guilty of a gross violation of the doctrine of the separation of powers, and that although it was an executive agency, it was usurping the power to make laws by not reducing them to writing so that people could know what they are.

I asked these gentlemen to come down and testify before my subcommittee. They said, "No, we cannot do that. If we get the Office of Federal Contract Compliance angry with us, we cannot get any Government contracts, and our industry will be bankrupt."

Now, I ask the Senator, Is that not in line with what he has been saying?

Mr. ALLEN. It certainly is.

Mr. ERVIN. The officials in the Office of Federal Contract Compliance are not elected to anything. They were not elected by anyone. They are not responsible to anyone. But they are riding roughshod in this tyrannical manner over thousands of American citizens, over thousands of American businessmen.

I think that Congress is the only legislative body I know of that is willing to sit supinely by and allow executive officials, who have no legislative power whatever, to make laws which they will not reduce to writing so that they can be understood by citizens, and be able to practice this terrible tyranny over American industry.

If American businessmen of great power are afraid of the Federal Government, what about the little fellow whose economic power is so small that he is only able to employ eight or nine persons to assist him in his business?

Mr. ALLEN. He will be covered by this and would be probably driven to the wall.

Mr. ERVIN. I thank the distinguished Senator from Alabama for yeilding. This points up exactly what the Senator from Alabama has been saying, that apparently those members of organized labor who support this bill need a prayer uttered on their behalf: "Forgive them, for they know not what they do." They are advocating the passage of a bill, as the Senator from Alabama says, which would put them under a cease-and-desist government which could designate who would be members of a union, or could deprive the union of the power to determine for themselves who their members would be.

Mr. ALLEN. That is certainly correct. I appreciate the remarks of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina and the contribution that he has made to this debate. I certainly agree with him that passage of the bill could have an extremely adverse effect upon labor unions, that it could completely destroy or vitiate the seniority system of unions, that it could provide that unions must take into membership individuals that they do not want to take into the union, and that it could require employers to employ people contrary to the express provisions of the collective bargaining contract that has been reached between the employer and the union in arm's-length dealings. Not only could it destroy the seniority system of unions, it could also destroy the apprenticeship program of unions.

Union apprenticeship programs would be drastically altered. Failure to comply with EEOC edicts would make it possible for unions to be denied representation status under the National Labor Relations Act, thus removing protections against raiding or displacement by a rival ion. Moreover, an employer would no longer have any legal obliga ion to bargain with a union whose representation status has been nceled by the National Labor Relations Board.

. . . would be a fine union. I have not had a single union man tell that he favors this bill, not a single one. Yet is has been stated on floor that organized labor is in favor of the bill. I have not had a gle member of organized labor ask me to vote for the bill.
n short, under S. 2515, the EEOC would be empowered to tell a rker and an employer which labor organizations were officially ap-ved for membership and which were deemed unsuitable by the leral authorities. In other words, the EEOC would be empowered tell one that it is all right for him to join some unions, but not
ers. This, to my way of thinking, Mr. President, seriously jeopizes the freedom of expression and the freedom of association ranteed by the first amendment to our Constitution. One real effect S. 2515, therefore, would not be to promote equal employment op-tunities for American workers, but to expose and punish persons organizations who give countenance to views regarding freedom xpression and association which are inimical to the Equal Em yment Opportunity Commission.
fere again is the ever-present and coercive threat of punitive ac-against those who do not give strict adherence to the social and tical philosophies of those who wield power. Here, in the name of ual employment opportunity," it is demanded that we pass a law ch would permit a Federal bureau to arrogate unto itself the er to examine, pass judgment, and extinguish the essential frees of expression and association. The Senate of the United States not afford to let the EEOC be a law unto itself regarding the most ed and fundamental rights of the American people.
r. President, if S. 2515 is enacted into law, we can add industrial tions directors and union business agents to the list of endangered ies.
What do we need industrial relations directors and union business nts for if the EEOC is going to tell us whom to employ. So they well be classified with others of the endangered species that we of in the new environment, which so many people, including the or Senator from Alabama, are so much interested in preserving.
to that list we might as well add academic freedom and States ts. Not even Jimmy the Greek would cite odds on the chances of r survival.
ne of the prime tenets of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence is that a is presumed to be innocent until proven guilty. While the bill re us does not presume to go so far as to repeal this concept, it inly subverts it. It arrogantly undermines and brushes aside the anteed and fundamental principles of due process and invokes noply of repressive procedures as alien to justice as the rack and thumbscrew.
nder the bill, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ld be given a "judicial" function, permitting it to order respond-to "cease and desist" from alleged unlawful employment prac-with such orders subject to limited review in a U.S. court of als.

What is government by cease and desist? Government by cease and desist is government according to the personal convictions, inclinations, predilections, and precipitant notions of government bureaucrats rather than government by certain and uniform laws applying alike to all men and institutions in like situations.

This being true, it is no wonder that Justice Jackson, in the well-known Flag Salute case eloquently declared:

> The very purpose for a bill of rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of public controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and to officially establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life, liberty, and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights, may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections.

Subsequently, Mr. President, Justice Jackson declared:

> If there is any fixed star in our national constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion, or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein.

One of the real difficulties in connection with the type of authority being sought here is the attitude of the Commission and its staff. The Commissioners and the staff of the Equal Employment Commission are appointed because of a particular philosophical bent—it is expected, however, that they are to be objective and impartial advocates of equal employment opportunity and to conciliate charges found to be supported by the facts adduced in their investigations.

The Commission, however, has not been and is not now the impartial agency it was supposed to be and as charged to be by law. Instead, the Commission has been a rabid advocate of its own preconceived ideas of fair employment opportunity and has been spending much of its time assembling arguments in behalf of its obsession with obtaining from Congress the power to issue coercive orders. The Commission has degenerated into performing a private pressure job for cease-and-desist authority.

The mingling of the functions of conciliation and compulsion in this agency would be tragic. The EEOC conciliator, in such instances, cannot, in any light, be viewed as a friendly counselor, but only as an incipient prosecutor. In other words, when he also possesses the power not only of prosecuting, but also of rendering an enforceable judgment, his persuasion takes on the immediate character of coercion.

Yet, this ambitious bill would lodge in an unelected Federal agency the unfettered authority to act as investigator, prosecutor, judge, and jury—all racked up in one power-laden package. S. 2515 does this by granting the Commission the power to receive complaints; granting to the Commission the power to investigate complaints; granting the Commission the power to prosecute complaints; and granting the Commission the power to pass judgment on complaints and to fashion a remedy enforceable by a cease-and-desist order.

As if this were not bad enough, the bill also grants the Commission the power to be the complainant. It is proposed that a member of the Commission may file a complaint, and, although the Commissioner filing the complaint may not participate in the hearing, he is not forbidden to sit in judgment on his own complaint.

r. President, I am sure all will agree that the other members of Commission would be less than human if they did not give special tion to complaints filed by one of their own members. It is diffi-to see how this Commission, in rendering decisions on a com-t filed by one of its own members, could act objectively and in nbiased manner. Remember, the member filing the complaint l be privy to all of the discussions leading up to the final deci-of the Commission, and I say that it would be asking too much uman nature to expect his colleagues to embarrass him by disng a complaint which he had filed. One would have to be blind d not to see that this particular aspect of the bill overbalances cales of justice against defendants in ways that do absolute vioto the best of Anglo-American judicial traditions.
s true that appellate review of orders by the Commission is pro-
. But the fact that an employer or a labor union may be entitled to a U.S. court of appeals carries no assurance that he will get On the other hand, if a respondent is able to defray the expense ng, drawn-out litigation, the restrictions and the limitations l on the courts by the bill will make it almost impossible for the to rectify a prejudicial order by the Commission. me point out, Mr. President, that the court entertaining the would be limited by the record of the hearing examiner as ved by the Commission and would be required to affirm the Com-n upon a finding of some evidence supporting the Commission's on.
l what would the record of the Commission consist of? Let us rget that many of these charges of discriminatory employment ces will be made by persons who are motivated by revenue, y, persecution, and perfidy. This is especially true inasmuch as 5 removes the requirement that charges must be made under In addition, the bill permits the Commission to deprive the d of the customary and time-honored rules of evidence and pro-. Hearsay evidence with its inflammatory effect can easily be tire basis of a finding by the Commission. What all of this boils to is that this bill seeks the enormous power of "cease and
" and yet provides no safeguards against a possible arbitrary nination by the Commission. The Commission can, therefore, d to issue a complaint and institute a proceeding which could o the exercise of enforcement powers based on a tenuous claim crimination and the courts would be powerless to touch it. In words, the bill makes an out and out mockery of our dedication process of law. s is not government by law. It is government by the Equal Ement Opportunity Commission, for better or worse.
President, I turn to the most preposterous and repugnant fea-
S. 2515. The bill seeks to vest in the Equal Employment Oppor-Commission autocratic and despotic power over the internal istration of State and local governments. As a consequence, 5 is completely incompatible with the constitutional doctrines sovereignty and indestructibility of the several States. Even from this consideration, S. 2515 is inimical to Federal-State ns inasmuch as it would place in the hands of the Commission l club by which it can browbeat State and local officials into submission and thus assume outright control of the functions an power of State and local government in vital areas of our life.

The proposal to substitute federally controlled employment pra tices for State and local personnel is in direct violation of the 10 amendment to the Constitution which states:

> The powers not delegated to the United States, nor prohibited to it by t States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

The proposal is also in direct violation of the ninth amendment our Constitution which states:

> The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights, shall not be constru to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

I, of course, realize that many of the proponents of S. 2515 regar the ninth and 10th amendments to our Constitution as obsolete, or a best, treat them as mere truisms. I also realize that the rights guar anteed to the States and their people under the Constitution hav been severely abused and invaded in recent years. But there is n provision in our Constitution which, by the widest stretch of th imagination, can provide a legal cover for the extraordinary author ity sought in this bill.

If enacted, this bill would permit an agency of the Federal Gov ernment to enter the political field in the appointment of State an local government employees. It is true that many State and local jo requirements are, in part, unrelated to the job. But it is wholly i keeping with our political traditions to give our State and loca leaders, and our national leaders for that matter, the discretion t give reasonable weight to factors other than job fitness in filling jobs

Frankly, it is difficult to imagine a more intolerable interferenc by the Federal Government with the rights of the States than t dictate their employment practices. The States' power over employ ment practices is basic and essential to the very existence of Stat sovereignty and, consequently, to our federal system which was de vised by our forefathers and which they intended to be held foreve sacrosanct by the Bill of Rights. If we deprive the States of thei basic functions, it is pointless to maintain that we have a dual form of government

History makes it crystal clear that the Constitution of the Unite States would never have been ratified by the requisite number o States if they had not been assured that it would subsequently be amended as to embrace the principles and guarantees enunciated by the ninth and 10th amendments.

Let us recall that in 1787 when the Constitution was written, th States were absolute sovereign. They had joined in the Declaratio of Independence. They had fought through eight long, terrible an bloody years to wrest themselves from the British Crown. In essenc they stood independent and free from any other sovereignty on earth

This amendment, by the way, provides that powers not delegate to the United States nor prohibited by it to the States are reserve respectively to the States or to the people, people being synonymou with the States.

The proposal is also a direct violation of the ninth amendmen which reads:

> The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights, shall not be construe to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

here is no provision in our Constitution which, by the wildest ch of the imagination, could provide a legal cover for the extraor-ry authority sought in this bill.

herefore, when the representatives of the free, independent States in Philadelphia to determine what form of government would ed the tyranny of the British Crown, they had deep feelings t their State sovereignty and jealously guarded it and were deter-d to protect against any undue invasion. The delegates were not t to surrender any more than absolutely necessary of their sov-nty in their endeavor to form a national government and they resolute in holding this to a minimum. The deliberations and lebates at the Convention and, of course, in the very drafting e Constitution and its ratification by the several States make it dantly clear that the Constitution would have never come into nce if the sovereignty of the States and the rights of the people ot been positively recognized in the Constitution itself.

s, Mr. President, of all the liberties which the founders of our Nation enshrined in the first 10 amendments they specifically ned the ninth and 10th amendments as the impregnable guardians e sovereign rights of the States and of the people. They deleto the Federal Government the powers necessary to enable it scharge its limited functions as a central government and left States and to the people all other powers.

vas the strong belief in the concept of government by the people nspired Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Indence, to declare:

laws which must effect the happiness of the people must flow from their abits, their own feelings and the resources of their own minds.

hose few words, Mr. President, Thomas Jefferson expressed the hts and beliefs of the framers of our great Constitution, who that the States, with their State governments, their county gov-nts, and their city governments, would ever be citadels of liberty. knew that their concept of a government by the people ded full recognition of the rights of the States.

vhere is the doctrine of the separation of powers more eloquently bed than by Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase in his opinion in against White (7 Wall. 700) when he said:

nly, therefore, can there be no loss of separate and independent autonomy States through their union under the Constitution, but it may be not un-ably said that the preservation of the States, and the maintenance of their ments, are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the ation of the Union and the maintenance of the National Government. nstitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed structible States.

re these rights become any less meaningful to us today? Are the rs of the exercise of arbitrary power by a centralized government ess? I say no. Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, a giant g men, once wisely warned:

n the people lose control of their Constitution, they have already lost con-their government.

holeheartedly agree with Senator Borah when he added:

an old story that when the people lose power, they lose liberty.

The exercise of the powers sought under this bill would so tip t balance toward the Federal Government, particularly the executi branch, that the division of authority as envisioned by our Foundi Fathers and as yet contained in our written Constitution would b come passé. The Constitution would no longer serve as a safeguard f the right of the people to govern themselves. Consent would no long flow from them. Even Alexander Hamilton, who advocated and b lieved in a strong central government, would have been scandalized b the interposition of the Federal Government into State and loc affairs as envisioned by the provisions of S. 2515.

I submit that if one of the delegates to the Constitutional Conve tion in 1787 had proposed that the Federal Government be empowere to interfere with the domestic policies and domestic institutions State and local governments, he would have been laughed out Independence Hall.

Surely such a departure from a written Constitution that expressl assures the rights of the States is reason enough to sound the deat knell for legislation which conceives such a recommendation. If w deprive the States of their basic functions, it is pointless to maintai that we have a constitutional Federal Government.

When the Constitution of the United States was written in that ho tiresome summer 185 years ago, provision was made for amending i If our Constitution is to be amended in the drastic manner propose by S. 2515, it should be done so in the orderly process provided for i the Constitution itself, by the people themselves, who hold title to tha great document.

The Senate has no right to amend the Constitution by legislativ fiat. We not only have no authority to do so, but we are betraying trust to the people and an oath to ourselves when we attempt to d so. Any proposed changes in our Constitution should be submitted t the people in the form of constitutional amendments, and, as I hav said, this magnificent document should not be changed except by th popular mandate of the people themselves.

Giving to a Federal bureau the power to control and form the pra tices of State and local governments would, in the judgment of th junior Senator from Alabama, be, in effect, an amendment of th Constitution, because the Constitution does not envision any suc power to be placed in the Federal Government or any bureau or agenc thereof.

George Washington stated the proposition eloquently in his Far well Address when he said:

> If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the co stitutional powers be, in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amend ment, in the way in which the Constitution designates. But let there be n change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrume of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed.

Mr. President, there may be those who think that the system of gov ernment that was devised in this country nearly two centuries ago obsolescent. In answer to any such thinking, I should like to point out that one of the most baffling problems that faces contempora democracies arises from the deadening effect of sprawling, impersona overcentralized governments.

he bill would centralize in a bureau or any agency the control over employment practices of every employer in the country who em- s as many as eight persons. It would give to such bureau or agency er over the employment practices of every State, county, and city ne country, over every agency of ever State, county, and agency, over every educational institution in the country, be it a college, a ersity, a private school, a church-supported school, or, for that er, a secondary or an elementary school which would be included e term "educational institution."

have the answer, Mr. President. We have always had it. The al system which was devised by our forefathers in the 18th cen- provides the brightest hope for the survival of real democracy he rights of free men in the 20th century. If we tamper with the tenets of the system bequeathed us by our forefathers, if we le upon this precious heritage, we will deserve the fate that will ubtedly befall us.

. President, this Nation has become history's finest illustration w people can enrich their lives, can raise their level of well-being, ulfill the goals of their pursuit of happiness when they are given y, freedom, and the encouragement for initiative and incentive a democratic system made possible by a blueprint of democ- -a written Constitution.

n find nothing in S. 2515 to merit the approbation of a free peo- say again that its far-reaching and drastic provisions will de- and negate much more individual rights and liberties than they possible protect. Far from securing the rights of our people, they ularly constitute a grave threat to the precious rights sought to d forever sacrosanct in the Bill of Rights. They are, to be sure, an nt to the authors of the American Constitution and the idea of d governmental authority they sought to safeguard.

his legislation ever becomes the law of the land, we will have l our people and our free institutions on the threshold of a tragic om which they may never recover. We will have moved one step to complete control and regimentation of all aspects of our lives entralized and all-powerful Government in Washington.

us not turn our backs on the magnificent heritage and the system vernment of and by free men, the indestructible union of inde- ible States that have come down to us at such great sacrifice.

President, I urge the adoption of this amendment and the de- S. 2515.

eld the floor.

WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, before yielding or, for a question or two?

ALLEN. Yes.

WILLIAMS. Did I understand the Senator correctly to say that nator will address himself to the amendment in the time he con- uring the time prior to when the cloture vote time begins to run?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. I would feel that any Senator would have the rig to address himself to any portion of it——

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. I want to get a little appreciation of the inte tentions of the Senator. Of course, he can say, "Wait and see."

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I intend to discuss the amendment further, and al the bill.

As I understand the procedure on cloture, 30 minutes are allocat to those who want to impose gag rule and 30 minutes are assigned t those who oppose gag rule. Since the junior Senator from Alaban opposes gag rule, he will have an opportunity to speak on the amen ment, on the bill, on the propriety of imposing gag rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I respectfully suggest to the Senator that it is stron language to use the term "gag rule" to describe rule XXII, one of th rules of the U.S. Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. To choke off debate. That would be called a gag rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Under the rules, rules that were developed unde law and the Constitution.

Mr. ALLEN. A rule which provides for gagging debate, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I say it is strong language to apply to the rule of the United States Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator understands what the Senator from Al bama has in mind; does he not? He is not in doubt as to what the Se ator meant?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Under the rules of the Senate, the Senate will vote o closing debate. Of course, to review the rule, even after that there abundant time for Senators to address themselves to the issue.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. Sometimes it is referred to as choking off debat I believe the Senator has heard that expression also.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As the Senator knows, we have been a long time o this particular measure.

Mr. ALLEN. I am hopeful it will end today.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And it is the second time on the bill, basically as it before us, a bill that was favorably voted on by the Senate 2 years ag

Mr. ALLEN. I am hopeful that the debate will end today as we tur back for the second time that cloture motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This has all developed out of one question the a swer to which I wanted to know, because Senators have asked me whe I expect there will be a vote on amendment 813, the amendment that the pending business, and I have no answer. When the last Senato asked me that, I said, "I do not know when that will be called up fo a vote." The Senator said, "Well, if you do not know, nobody knows My reply was, "No; I believe those who offered the amendment prob ably know when they would want a vote on their amendment."

Mr. ALLEN. After debate is ended voluntarily or after it has bee checked off. That is when the vote will come on the pending amend ment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That answers in part at least another question. Doe the Senator have any idea when, as far as he is concerned, he will vo untarily end discussion of his amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; I think that on tomorrow, if the bill has not bee laid aside as a result of the defeat of the second cloture motion, would feel that there would be a vote on this amendment.

r. WILLIAMS. Would it be fair to ask the Senator then, if when friends, the Members of the Senate, ask me when a vote on amend- t No. 813 is expected, I can say that if it is still the business of the ate, the vote will be on tomorrow?

r. ALLEN. Speaking for the junior Senator from Alabama, that ld be my estimate of it. The distinguished senior Senator from th Carolina (Mr. Ervin) is also to be consulted, but I would feel if the pending bill and the pending amendment are still the busi- of the Senate on tomorrow, we will have a vote on the pending ndment, which by the way, the Senator realizes, is an amendment would prevent the sponsors of this legislation including the dis- uished senior Senator from New Jersey, from reducing from 25 n to eight the number of employees that an employer must have in r to be covered by the provisions of the EEOC bill. The purpose e amendment, in short, is to leave the requirement at 25 for cover- under the act, rather than to reduce it to eight, as the distinguished r Senator from New Jersey seems desirous of doing.

r. WILLIAMS. The senior Senator from New Jersey, I believe, has sition on this matter similar to that of the junior Senator from Jersey, but I am the junior Senator from New Jersey.

r. ALLEN. I beg the Senator's pardon for not calling him the r Senator.

r. WILLIAMS. Is that matter of such degree of significance that, prevails on this amendment, the Senator thinks the measure will eatly improved from his standpoint?

r. ALLEN. Yes, I think it would be a great improvement. It would nt small employers, employers of some 6 million people, from ng under the provisions of the act. It would improve it greatly, would not improve the bill to the point where the junior Senator Alabama would be willing to support it.

elieve there is great sentiment in this body for the court procedure provided in the House bill. I believe that would remove the objec- of many Senators.

eel that the sponsors of the legislation have reached out for too when they seek to extend the coverage of this bill to all State, y, and city employees, to all educational institutions, and to all oyers of as many as eight people, and then seek to lodge in the nission the powers of judge, prosecutor, and jury.

elieve this bill would have already passed the Senate if the spon- of the legislation had followed the House bill, which does pro- for court enforcement of the charges and complaints of people feel they been aggreived by the employment practices of some oyers.

m hoping that at some stage of the proceedings the distinguished r Senator from New Jersey will be agreeable to handling these rs through the courts rather than setting up this Frankenstein er that has the power to receive complaints, investigate com- s, prosecute complaints, decide those complaints, and then e them.

. WILLIAMS. In partial reply, I would like to say that the Senator New Jersey has deeply ingrained respect for the Federal Judi- and, of course, under certain of the provisions of the bill cement would be, even in the first hearing aspects, before the Federal District Court. I would say that it is out of no disrespect f the judiciary or no feeling other than a concern for effective enforc ment, mainly because of the time factors involved and the load of n decisions that the district courts must make.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the Senator feel that he might get quick action through the 398 district courts throughout the land than throu one commission lodged here in Washington? Would that not divi the work up approximately into 398 parts?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, from the Chief Justice, the head of a coequ branch of the Government, comes the observation that Congress h already heaped upon the judiciary a great new burden of work wi other laws that we have passed within the last few years which ha created a crushing burden, and we have not relieved that burden b creating the additional judgeships to take care of it.

I would say that my respect for the Federal judiciary was n dimmed at all the other day when debate following the debate on th measure was directed at district court decisions in another area life, and even some suggestion made that perhaps it was unwise th the Federal district judges have life tenure, and that perhaps it wou be better if they had terms of office.

The Constitution provides that Federal judges shall hold office du ing the period of their good behavior, that being the only limitatio It is a life appointment, and I gather that the reason for that was th the framers of our Constitution wanted the judiciary to be in a Olympian setting, above the passions of the time. I was quite distress to hear the debate directed personally at the Federal district judicia the other day. I certainly did not join in that debate, and, as I say, have the greatest respect for it. But I also have respect for the Chi Justice of the United States when he tells the lawyers gathered at t American Bar Association Convention that the burden right now too much, a crushing burden without a vast number of addition judges.

So one of the reasons is the effectiveness of full court enforcement compared to the cease-and-desist procedure, which is honored an tried and working in many other agencies.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, the EEOC is behind some 24 months now wit its docket, according to statistics that have been presented here, an I do not know of any Federal court, certainly not the average Feder court, that is that far behind.

If we open up the jurisdiction of the EEOC to cover these tens millions of additional people, plus allowing each respondent, I assum a day in court, that would slow down the procedure rather than hur it up. It would build up the backlog instead of cutting it back.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am glad the Senator has raised the question of t present backlog. The EEOC, as a matter of observation, if it we given the enforcement procedure, the cease-and-desist authority, h suggested that its backlog would be even greater.

The whole point is that the Commission, without any enforcem authority, really is only in the position of a debater, a negotiator, persuader. It has no muscle, no force, no effectiveness. It is not back by authority to have its conclusions made effective with any enfor ment procedure.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator. I must yield t floor, because my time will expire within 1 minute.

Ir. President, I yield the floor.
The Presiding Officer (Mr. Spong). The hour of 12:45 p.m. hav- arrived, pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement, the remain- time from now until the hour of 1:45 p.m. will be equally divided ween and controlled by the manager of the bill, the Senator from v Jersey (Mr. Williams), and the Senator from North Carolina r. Ervin).
Who yields time?
Ir. Williams. I wonder if I could inquire of the Senator from rth Carolina, if the absence of a quorum were suggested now, ether the time could be equally divided.
Ir. Ervin. That would be all right.
Ir. Williams. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, a the time for the quorum call to be equally divided.
he second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.
r. Ervin. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order he quorum call be rescinded.
he Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.
r. Ervin. I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from issippi (Mr. Stennis).
r. Stennis. Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that the Senator yielded some time to me, because I am vitally concerned about this and its practical operation and application to the small industries, small shops, the little plumber shops, and the very small business le, craftsmen who have worked things out and started a little ness of their own that grew and prospered.
believe that this bill not only violates rights that belong to all ricans, but, as a practical matter, it goes far too far in investing er in the Commission, which will have absolute power to regulate, ntrol, and to destroy thousands and thousands of these so-called l businesses that just cannot carry the load. They do not have esources to employ the necessary talent to follow up on what may eir rights under the bill and the facts of the case; and, as so ably ed out here yesterday by the Senator from New Hampshire, the ical effect of it will be that these employers are going to have eld to the demands of this Commission; and when they do, then ext question is, will they be able to survive in business?
ere is no doubt in my mind about that, if this measure is ever en- d. Maybe it will start out with slow enforcement at first, but they get around. They will get down to the village level, the township and, still talking about these little businessmen, they will control igh fear, implied intimidation, and uncertainty in the minds of little people.
m not an expert in anything, but I do feel that I know that that e the situation, because I know those people. I know their moti- ns. I have practiced law in a small town where they would come with their troubles, a long time ago, before we had as many ations as now—people who were not able to pay a fee and said en they came in, and I knew they were telling the truth. We have d a long, long way from there.
aised this point yesterday: Why set the number down to eight? not set it at seven? If a principle is involved here, if it is a right hese employees have, why exempt those who employ less than eight? Why not make it six, five, four, three? There is as much log in that as in eight. If someone has only two employees, if a princip is involved, this bill ought to cover it. I was about to say that if had only one employee, if a principle is involved, it ought to apply the applicant for that position when it becomes vacant. But I will n go that far, because he has to have one employee to keep all the records, to keep the records required by this bill. So I do not sugge that it is logical to apply it to a man with one employee, but I thi it is logical in the case of a man with two employees. The same princip is involved. Just exempt the man who is going to keep all these record

I have always lived near or in a small town, and I know about th people. They elect their town board and their county officers, the coun boards of government. They elect the other county officers. That very serious business and is so considered by the voters and by th office holders. If we mean it when we say that we are a government the people, for the people, and so forth, why not let the responsibility operating stay with those officials after they are elected? We co along, it seems to me, and contradict everything we have said abo the responsibilities of the officers and the voters by putting all th power not in a court but in a board which has the power, and therefo the influence, to intimidate the little people. That is the way it w work. I am not imagining things; I am not picturing things. Th is the practical way it will work.

So I think we march up the hill one day, talking about our syste of government and the people having the right to choose their officers and so forth, and that the officers have the responsibilities; and th we march in the opposite direction and invest these boards and the staff with this power.

I am not attacking them personally, but they do not know the peop with whom they are dealing, and the people do not know them. Th is the way arbitrary rulings and uncertain rulings and unknown ru ings come in. I could enlarge on that.

Do not think you are giving a man a remedy, either, if you say, "I you don't like the ruling, you can appeal to the court." To what cou will he go? As I read it, it is the Circuit Court of Appeals. What that? It is a very fine court, but where I live, it includes everythi from West Texas to Puerto Rico. That is the area these judges cove and that is a long way on the globe, and it is a long way through ma States. That is literally true—from West Texas to Puerto Rico is th jurisdiction, up through Georgia, including Georgia, Alabama, a Mississippi. I think they now have all that area. There are about judges, because they have so much volume.

I know a man who started as a plumber with just a wrench and no has a little shop. He bids on and gets contracts, and he goes arou through several counties. But what about the man smaller than he What kind of court of appeals, what kind of judicial right do y give him when you tell him a lawyer has to charge a thousand dolla to go into a court such as that, even though they sit in panels? T way things have gone up, a lawyer has to charge a thousand dolla to take a case such as that and prepare it and go to New Orleans Houston, Tex., or Atlanta, Ga. This is not imagination. From t little town, they have to go to Atlanta and go before a three jud panel of this court to get matters decided.

So we are not giving him a practical remedy, a judicial remedy. He ound, in practical effect, by whatever this Commission says or does; I imagine that 99 times out of 100, the Commission does about at the investigators report to it and whatever these investigators clude.

o I hope, Mr. President, that there will be a second thought here that we will not go all the way.

remarked briefly yesterday about these quotas, and I say flatly that his bill is passed, it will lead very rapidly into adjudication on a ta basis with reference to the little employers; and I speak from erience, as I have observed. Not a word in the Supreme Court de- ons talks about a quota with reference to the integration of the ols. But if you analyze these decrees, you will find that virtually y one of them is written on that basis. It is not spelled out, but is the pattern that is applicable. It is just natural that there would trend toward a quota. So let us keep our eyes open to that fact, too.

ow much time do I have remaining, Mr. President?

e PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes.

r. STENNIS. I have already mentioned the records and everything that this bill will require these so-called little people to keep. ne, it is pitiful to place these requirements on a little business like About the only record he keeps now is enough to be able to are his income tax report. I am talking about people who pay s, and it hurts them. It takes away from them money that they y need to live on, in many cases.

ith respect to the idea of a judgment against him for back pay n man he considers—as the Senator from New Hampshire said erday—worthless and trifling and indifferent and lazy, this little loyer has to take a chance on having to go through this trial, not re a court, and have a judgment rendered against him, anyway, be assessed with the back pay. That is a chance he cannot afford ke. He will not run that risk. He will knuckle under.

course, he cannot violate the law or he will go out of business. does not go out of business voluntarily, they will bankrupt him. will break him one way or another. To someone not familiar the facts, that may sound an exaggeration, but it is not.

e PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Spong). Who yields times?

. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

e PRESIDING OFFICER. On whose time?

. WILLIAMS. Equal division?

. ERVIN. I cannot agree to that.

e PRESIDING OFFICER. Will it be on the Senator's time?

. WILLIAMS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

e PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

e second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the for the quorum call be rescinded.

e PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Mondale). Without objection, it is so ed.

. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I shall not take up a great deal of the of the Senate in these closing minutes before we vote on cloture. ave been all over this ground before and quite recently at that. nen I last spoke in favor of the cloture motion, we were in the day of debate.

Now we are in the 12th day of debate and we have not proceeded very far with this bill.

When the cloture motion was voted on last Tuesday, there had already been 18 rollcalls on this bill. Since the cloture vote, there has only been one rollcall vote, and that was last Tuesday.

We have had 2 more days of time-filling debate on this bill. I do not say that the debate has not been instructive, it has; but it appears clear to me that there is a desire on the part of some Members of the Senate to keep this bill from coming to a vote and third reading.

There is no reason or basis for delay in passing this bill. As I stated 2 days ago, our goal is to increase the employment opportunities of our minorities and women by providing the necessary machinery to bring an end to job discrimination once and for all in our country.

Mr. President, the committee reported a bill that accomplishes this goal in a fair and reasonable manner. The Senate, in its wisdom, has provided a number of improvements to this bill. I do not fear the possibility of the Senate providing still more improvements to this bill.

But, Mr. President, we cannot improve the bill if we do not come to a decision on the remaining nonobstructive amendments and move on to the final decision and a vote on the bill itself.

I believe that we are still under the threat of an attempt to revise the debates of 1963 and 1964. I think we are too far along the road to continue debating whether minorities and women need protection against job discrimination. I will repeat again, Mr. President, the issue is settled. The only issue before this body is for the Congress to define the scope and kind of enforcement powers that the Government of the United States should have, which will help our disadvantaged Americans to attain equal employment.

I will again remind the Senate that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare was unanimous in its views that an enforcement mechanism is needed and that the President of the United States agrees that an enforcement mechanism is needed.

Mr. President, I realize, and many of those who are advocating the passage of this bill realize, that legislating civil rights requires a long and hard effort. It is not easy to undo the evils of the past. However, the fact that it is a hard task should not deter us and will not deter me from this effort.

The time has come to provide the EEOC with the tools necessary to end job discrimination. The bill to provide these tools is now on the Senate floor. It may take a great deal more effort to pass this bill. I believe that it is the will of the Senate that this bill pass. I am confident that the Senate will persevere until this job is completed.

I urge the Senate to bring to a close this extended debate and vote for the cloture motion now pending before the Senate on S. 2515.

And, Mr. President, if this cloture motion does not pass, we shall continue to press for speedy consideration and early passage of this bill. It is important to all of the people of the United States. We owe it to our minorities and women and to ourselves to provide this measure of protection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

r. JAVITS. Mr. President, one has but to look around the Chamber see the unbroken array of empty desks except for the managers oth sides, and the presence in the Senate for the time being of some e what has come about. This is strictly a test of voting strength. o one needs to be convinced, because everyone is convinced or not inced, as the case may be, or has his own particular idea as to t is going to convince him.

ever I saw a naked and clear example of a classic case of a civil ts issue which is traditional for filibustering and how the Senate notwithstanding the Constitution, this is it.

ie Senate runs by two-thirds and no less, and no measure can pass except by two-thirds, notwithstanding the Constitution and notstanding all of the protestations about the fact that if a majority y wants something, it can get it.

. President, it is tremendously instructive to me also that not those running for President, or many of them, will be here today. , too, feel that this is not the final showdown, that it is a naked nd no more, for the votes to be counted. They will come around they feel the issue is really to be decided. That is the crunch.

hink that is a mistake. I think it is wrong. I think the only way ich these issues are ultimately decided is if there is enough appren on the part of enough Senators because of a surge of opinion in untry that causes two-thirds of the Members to vote in favor of e.

vertheless, this is a display, with no adornment, in its most prisorm of how the Senate operates and how the country operates, se although we cannot do anything without the other body and resident, we can certainly stop anything without the other body President. That is the negative power.

e Senator from New Jersey has made it very clear that there is a mental policy in the country that there should be no discriminan the ground of color, sex, or race.

h relation to such deeply held opinions as those concerning jobs—ncidentally in my opinion jobs are the most fundamental issue of he fact is that we passed a bill not too unlike this a couple of ago and we passed a landmark bill 7 years ago. The President of nited States and a great proportion of the people in the country hat this is one area in which legislation is deserved. Indeed, the oldest of the civil rights remedial statutes of modern times se the first State statute was passed in 1945 in my State of New And it has been a remarkable success ever since.

ddition, time and experience in all of these 26 years has demonl that the hobgoblins raised about the inquisition of companies ndividuals that would be imposed upon and bled white by the ion in the agencies and by the operation or application of a law is, are simply Halloween concoctions. And the cases that go to cuit court of appeals, or in my own State of New York, the appelurts, are relatively few.

President, we all know, and know very well, the frustration and n of minorities in this country. We know that the feelings of ce, in being discriminated against, have erupted in what was nount to revolution, and that the United States had a hard time g with it, and may again. By no means is it an ended question, especially if we are going to run into, circa 1971, the same kind o attitude as to civil rights legislation that we faced for as many years which has brought on emotions that erupted in violence and riots and brought our country to the brink of anarchy.

So this is a moment in which to take counsel. We are a very experienced people. We shall overcome; I have no doubt about that whatever. But it will be difficult. In the meantime, much human weakness is exposed, and it is our duty to remedy it.

One final thought. It is very clear—and the reason I speak of this is the naked display of what the power of the filibuster means—it is very clear, again notwithstanding the many obfuscations which come in speeches and declarations that it is a filibuster, that this action is expressly designed to make a majority of the Senate accept the position which it has rejected not once, but in five votes, and that when that position is adopted, the bill may be permitted to pass. I think it is going to pass anyhow, because, as I say, the country can be marshaled behind it if those who are the major opinion makers now will indicate that they are deeply pledged to the success of the bill. The candidates for the Presidency—and they are very influential and important in such a crisis as this, in respect to a very important measure—can make an appeal for it. This is the most important kind of campaigning they can do. I have campaigned a lot myself, and I have always found that there is no substitute for doing the job. The majority leader was very eloquent on that score many days ago. I cannot hope to equal his eloquence, but I am hoping to underline and emphasize the substantive fact that faces us today, when we are about to have a second cloture vote on the bill.

One further observation: We have about gone through the whole gamut of things which could be objected to in the bill on the grounds of policy differences. In each case there has been a resolution of the issue. We started with whether or not the Office of Federal Contract Compliance should be transferred. We decided that it should not.

A number of Senators had disquiets about voluntary services to be used by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. We decided very sharply to limit the nature of that service. So we were willing to accept specifically what we had in mind.

We had questions about alleged deficiencies in handling by the Government of affirmative action plans. We worked out an agreement as to that.

We had questions raised about the ambit of the exemption for religious institutions and educational institutions in respect of their right to discriminate. We voted on that.

In addition, we took care of the small business problem. We compensated small business concerns which might be oppressed by lawyers' fees, et cetera, by making provision for them.

The remaining two issues are the transfer of pattern and practice suits, which is the amendment we are expecting from the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Hruska), and the pending amendment, which seeks to strike out the new applicability of the statute to employers of eight or more employees contrasted with the present number of 25 or more.

Both of those amendments could be disposed of very easily and very definitely in an afternoon. They certainly could be disposed of within the 1-hour rule which will obtain once we have cloture. I think it is fair to say that there is no substantive reason whatever why this matter uld not now be brought to a final conclusion, except the fact that the ority has determined that the majority shall have not had its way. t is all it comes to. I say that for this reason. I know the leadership blems are very great. But unfortunately, as happens in so many n and other negotiations around the country, the pressure is always upon the "good guys." I use that term not invidiously. We should and will not cave in, because otherwise there will be no bill. Why? is a government of the people, for the people, and by the people? s it a government by a minority which says, "Give me my way, or I not let you have anything?"

ometimes we may decide it is better not to have anything and let e who have responsibility bear the responsibility.

I think we have reached a critical point. We are on a two-track ission. It is unthinkable that there should be a question now of takhe bill down. Those in authority had better know what they are g and whom they are penalizing. We have argued many less imnt bills than this and for much longer times. There were no con- then about how busy we were or about taking the bills down.

hink it my duty to state the facts and act accordingly and to reny effort to take this bill down. It is too early in the session. We months ahead of us now. The bill is one of the most crucially imnt for the rights of American people who need this kind of ance. A majority agrees on that throughout the country.

e PRESIDING OFFICER. All time of the Senator from New York has ed.

. JAVITS. I thank the Chair.

. ERVIN. Mr. President, the bill is an insult to the people of all the s and all the people of the political subdivisions of the States. about government of the people, by the people, and for the peo- This would be a government by the EEOC and for the EEOC. It ll that seeks to take away from 200 million Americans their right ct their own officials and their own employees.

hink the people of my home town of Morganton, N.C., have h intelligence to determine for themselves without interference a Federal agency whom they want to be their officers and emes. I think the people of my county have sufficient intelligence and cter to perform that function for themselves. I think the people State have enough intelligence and character to decide for elves whom they wish to have as their officials and State yees.

e is a proposal to give a commission more power, actually, than resident of the United States has. But we are charged with atng to frustrate the will of the majority of the Senate. I think hen the Senate of the United States is asked to destroy the fedstem of government, and if the majority of the Senate wants ose that tyranny on the American people, it is time for the ty—if it is a minority—to try to point out to the majority the f their ways.

we ask on this cloture vote is that we not be gagged and denied ortunity to tell the truth about this bill.

of the most perplexing things to me about the Washington scene men are elected to the Senate and to the House of Representay the people of their States and the people of their districts and, inately for the cause of liberty, for the cause of self-government, so many Senators and Representatives, shortly after their arrival on the banks of the Potomac, succumb to Potomac fever.

What is Potomac fever? Potomac fever is a disease which causes some kind of psychological or psychiatric condition or obsession in the minds of Senators and Representatives that the people who elected them and sent them to Washington to protect their freedoms and their right of self-rule have not got sense enough and character enough to manage their own affairs or govern themselves.

It has gone so far in this case that this is the most virulent attack of Potomac fever that I have witnessed during the 17 years I have been in the Senate. This disease has got Senators obsessed with the idea that the people in the 50 States, in the thousands upon thousands of political subdivisions in those States, have not got enough character, have not got enough intelligence, to determine for themselves whom they wish to have as officers and as employees to exercise the legislative, the executive, and the judicial powers of the States. And so they ask the passage of a bill like this that would give a commission of five men or women, elected by nobody to do anything, the power to place under bondage to themselves, the power to control who is going to hold office in this country on the State or local level, who is going to be permitted to earn a livelihood.

The Declaration of Independence states, in substance, that all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed; and here is a bill which is actually an insult to the intelligence and the character of the people, which says that, instead of these people being allowed to rule themselves and select their own officers and select their own employees, we will have five men sitting here in the midst of the Potomac fever who are going to control all of those things.

This is not a bill to prohibit discrimination. It is a bill to give absolute power to practice discrimination to five men. These men are given power over everybody who belongs to a race—any race—over everybody who has any religion or no religion, over everybody who has any national origin, and over every person of either sex. It gives them jurisdiction over the right of livelihood of everybody in the United States, because if there is only one applicant for a job, there is not going to be any controversy, but where there are two or more applicants for a job——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ERVIN. I yield myself 1 more minute.

The Commission is given the power to say which man of which race is going to have the job, to the exclusion of all men of other races, which man of which religion is going to have the job, to the exclusion of men of all other religions, which man of which nationality is going to have the job, to the exclusion of persons of all other nationalities, and the same thing with respect to sex.

It is another way of saying these States or industries shall not have the power to determine these things, but that this Commission shall have the power to discriminate, because discrimination is nothing more or less than preferring one person to another person.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ERVIN. I yield myself just 1 more minute.

I want to say that everybody who believes that Senators ought not to be gagged to prevent them from expressing the truth, and every

y who believes in the federal system of government, and every-y who believes in freedom, and everybody who believes in self-rule ht to vote to give us a greater opportunity to persuade two more ators that they erred in voting against the Dominick amendment. yield the floor and yield the remaining time to the distinguished ator from Alabama (Mr. Allen).

he PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

r. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator from North Carolina yielding to me.

r. President, everyone favors the right of every person in this try to have a fair and equal opportunity, without discrimination ny sort, to obtain employment where employment opportunities ent themselves.

his is not a case of the proponents of the bill being opposed to imination, and the opponents of the bill being in favor of dis-ination. Not one single amendment has been directed against any e basic substantive rights of our people.

here are two issues involved in the bill before the Senate at this One, shall the power of the EEOC be extended over State, ty, and city governments, and agencies of State, county, and city rnments? Shall it be extended over every educational institution he country, including church-supported schools, every college, university, every private school, every high school, every eleary school? Shall it apply to every employer of as many as 8, r than the current limit or minimum for coverage of 25?

e second issue is, how shall the rights of the people to be protected ist discrimination be enforced?

t one single thing is being sought to be taken away from the r of the EEOC by the opponents of this bill. The distinguished or from New Jersey has said that the enforcement mechanism ded. He wants the enforcement mechanism by the same agency receives the charges, which investigates the charges, which cutes the charges, and which decides the charges, which issues a se-and-desist decree against the respondent, whereas the opponents e measure would like to follow the procedure that the House of esentatives follows, to have court enforcement of the rights of eople to be protected against unfair labor practices.

. President, debate should not be brought to a close on this issue.
e is no pressure whatsoever on the Senate. The majority leader is g doubleheader sessions of the Senate. We are operating two r procedures; we are having a discussion of this bill (S. 2515) he part of the day, and then going on with the rest of the calendar.
epeat, debate on this issue should not be brought to a close. If oture motion is defeated, I would hope that the majority leader l lay this measure aside, but that would not be the end of the r, because the very next bill on the calendar is the House bill . 1746). That could come up later, and in all likelihood be ed into law.

; if cloture does prevail today, all bars would be down and the ity could write the bill to suit themselves, and we would be sure t in EEOC full power as judge, jury, and prosecutor; whereas, debate is allowed to continue, there might be some possibility, f we stay on the bill, that an agreement might be reached.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said about the "good guys" which the opposition Senators characterize themselves as being. I assume that makes the opponents of this measure the "bad guys."

No one favors discrimination. As I say, the only issue is how the rights shall be enforced. Shall it be before a supposedly impartial judge, or before the Commission, which has received the complaint, investigated the complaint, brought the charges, and then reaches the decision?

The distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) has called on the Members of the Senate to rise above their views and their opinions with regard to this measure, and vote to end debate. So apparently, according to the distinguished Senator from New York, any time a majority of the Senate votes one way, there is to be no field of operation for rule XXII.

Mr. President, the Senate decides every 2 years that rule XXII is to remain in full force and effect just as it is. That issue has been brought up every 2 years here for more than the last decade. So apparently the Senate wants the protection of requiring a two-thirds vote to cut off debate. But apparently the distinguished Senator from New York feels that every time a bare majority is arrived at with respect to a bill, all public debate should end, and that there should be no field of operation for rule XXII.

Now he says that the issue of whether we shall have court enforcement or commission enforcement has been decided five times. According to the recollection of the junior Senator from Alabama, one of those decisions was adverse to the view of the distinguished Senator from New York, and the proponents of the bill carried on extended debate or filibuster for a day or two to prevent the Senate from exercising its will at that time, which was in favor of court enforcement instead of commission enforcement.

So, Mr. President, I submit that debate should not end on this measure, and I am hopeful that Senators will stand firm.

Where is the great demand for this bill? The Senators who seem to favor it are not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Mondale). All time has expired.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1:45 p.m. having arrived, pursuant to the unanimous consent agreement, and under rule XXII, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will state.

ere being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed Record, as follows:

HARTKE. Mr. President, I deeply regret that I was unable to be present to vote for the petition to limit debate on S. 2515, the Equal Employment unities Enforcement Act. Had I been present I would have voted to invoke . I feel that a major flaw in the American democractic system has been lure to secure equal employment opportunity for all American citizens. It is nion that S. 2515 of which I am proud to be a co-sponsor will provide the ry enforcement powers to permit the Equal Employment Opportunity ssion to act affirmatively to eliminate discrimination in employment.

The Senate resumed with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the manager of the bill, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) and I, as the ranking minority member of the committee, are currently engaged at this moment in a special meeting of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare to deal at the issue of the dock strikes. This is an immediate emergency. We have had to give it preference to our duties on the floor with respect to the bill on Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The leadership is thoroughly acquainted with the situation and desires to give this measure the priority it deserves.

Mr. President, I make this explanation to the Senate with respect to our failure to actually be here currently debating the pending measure. We will, once we finish the matter we are working on, be free again to return to the floor. However, I felt that the Senate should have an explanation as to the situation this afternoon.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Boggs). The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

AMENDMENT NO. 871

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. Hollings and myself I send to the desk, for printing and future consideration, an amendment to S. 2515, the Equal Employment Opportunities Enforcement Act of 1971.

This amendment offers probably the best opportunity to resolve a deadlock existing since January 25 when my court enforcement amendment was first voted on. Since that time the deadlock has solidified through three reconsideration votes and two cloture votes. During this period I have exhausted all reasonable sources and suggestions in seeking a fair compromise. In the course of such a search, I have carefully considered numerous compromises informally and formally. I introduced amendment No. 856 in an effort to resolve the deadlock. Unfortunately, all efforts have gone for naught and the Nation's employees and potential employees remain largely devoid of enforceable employment rights.

This amendment contains essentially the same court enforcement procedures as my earlier amendment. I remain firm in my resolve not to desert 45 of my colleagues who faithfully supported the court enforcement procedure and not to comprise my principles concerning the superiority of court enforcement.

espite voluminous rhetoric to the contrary, my convictions that District Court enforcement provides employees and potential oyees with the fairest, most effective redress of their grievances ain unshaken.

ne most rational argument against court enforcement is the po- al delay threatened by backlogged Federal courts. I acknowledge problem and remedy it by incorporating in this amendment rity language from the same Civil Rights Act of 1964 that created Commission. Pursuant to language contained in Title I—voting s, Title II—public accommodations, and section 707—"Pattern ractice," and included in this amendment, unfair employment ice suits will be accorded priorities in hearing and determination re Federal court judges. Upon certification that the case is of eral public interest," the case would be assigned for hearing and quent determination "at the earliest practicable date" before a -judge panel with appeal to the Supreme Court. In the event etitioner does not certify the case as being of general public inter- would be assigned to a district court judge for an expedited ng.

is newly incorporated language cures any alleged defects in the enforcement procedures. The final result would be machinery ich the respondent's due process rights will be protected by an ienced, impartial judge relying on stare decisis while the alleged eved is guaranteed an expedited hearing before a Federal forum has in the past exhibited great compassion for minority rights. e amendment contains several cosmetic differences from the al amendment as well as one substantial change which reduces me period within which the Commission may file a civil action st the respondent from 180 to 150 days from the time the Com- n first issues its informal charge.

importance of this amendment should not be underestimated. represents my last best offer it signals, insofar as I am concerned, al effort to resolve the court enforcement cease-and-desist issue presenting a strong step toward salvaging the entire bill. Pre- pponents of court enforcement would be well advised to consider asonableness of this amendment versus the very real prospect equal employment opportunity enforcement law at all—a most unate and unnecessary consequence.

sistent with my previous efforts on behalf of employment dis- ation enforcement, I shall continue to keep an open mind con- g suggested compromises embodying substantial court enforce- nachinery but I have exhausted my own resources, so the future bill now lies in the hands of the those who adamantly insist se-and-desist powers.

PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and d, and will lie on the table.

Intended to be proposed by Mr. DOMINICK (for himself and Mr. HOLLINGS) to S. 2515, a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers, viz:

On page 38, beginning with line 7, strike all through line 7, page 50, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(f) (1) If within thirty days after a charge is filed with the Commission or within thirty days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), the Commission has been unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission, the Commission shall so notify the General Counsel who may bring a civil action against any respondent not a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision named in the charge. In the case of a respondent which is a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, the Commission shall take no further action and shall refer the case to the Attorney General who may bring a civil action against such repondent in the appropriate United States district court. If a charge filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) is dismissed by the Commission, or if within one hundred and fifty days from the filing of such charge or the expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), whichever is later, the General Counsel has not filed a civil action under this section or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, or the Commission has not entered into a conciliation agreement to which the person aggrieved is a party, the Commission or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision shall so notify the person aggrieved and within ninety days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person named in the charge as claiming to be aggrieved or (2) if such charge was filed by an officer or employee of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene in such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending the termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (c) of this section or further efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance.

"(2) In any such proceeding the General Counsel or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision may file with the clerk of such court a request that a court of three judges be convened to hear and determine the case. Such request by the General Counsel or the Attorney General shall be accompanied by a certificate that, in his opinion, the case is of general public importance. A copy of the certificate and request for a three-judge court shall be immediately furnished by such clerk to the chief judge of the circuit (or in his absence, the presiding circuit judge of the circuit) in which the case is pending. Upon receipt of the copy of such request it shall be the duty of the chief judge of the circuit or the presiding circuit judge, as the case may be, to designate immediately three judges in such circuit, of whom at least one shall be a circuit judge and another of whom shall be a district judge of the court in which the proceeding was instituted, to hear and determine such case, and it shall be the duty of the judges so designated to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited. An appeal from the final judgment of such court will lie to the Supreme Court.

"In the event the General Counsel or the Attorney General fails to file such a request in any such proceeding, it shall be the duty of the chief judge of the district (or in his absence, the acting chief judge) in which the case in pending immediately to designate a judge in such district to hear and determine the case. In the event that no judge in the district is available to hear and determine the case, the chief judge of the district, or the acting chief judge, as the case may be, shall certify this fact to the chief judge of the circuit (or in his absence, the acting chief judge) who shall then designate a district or circuit judge of the circuit to hear and determine the case.

"It shall be the duty of the judge designated pursuant to this section to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.".

On page 50, beginning with line 8, strike all through line 19, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) (1) Subsection (f) of section 706 of such Act and all references thereto are redesignated as subsection (h).

"(2) Subsection (h) of section 706 of such Act, as redesignated, is amended by adding at the end the following sentence: 'Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such temporary or preliminary relief as it deems just and proper.'

"(c) Subsection (g) of such section 706 is redesignated as subsection (i), and a new subsection (g) is inserted as follows:

"'(g) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending final disposition of such charge. It shall be the duty of a court having jurisdiction over proceedings under this section to assign cases for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause such cases to be in every way expedited.'

"(d) Subsection (i) of section 706 of such Act, as redesignated by paragraph (2) of section 4(d) of this Act, is amended to read as follows:

"'(i) If the court finds that the respondent has engaged in or is engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include, but is not limited to, reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice), or any other equitable relief as the court deems appropriate. Backpay liability shall not exceed that which accrues from a date more than two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commission. Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable.'

"(e) Subsections (h), (i), (j), and (k) of section 706 of such Act, and all references thereto, are redesignated as subsections (j), (k), (l), and (m), respectively."

On page 60, beginning with line 7, strike all through line 9, page 61, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(h) Section 705(i) as redesignated by section 8(c) of this Act is amended to read as follows:

"'(i) The General Counsel appointed under this section shall appear for and represent the Commission in any case in court, except that the Attorney General shall conduct all litigations to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court.'."

On page 65, line 21, strike out "(q)".

On page 65, line 23, strike out "section 706 (q) through (w)" and insert in lieu thereof: "section 706 (f) through (m)".

AMENDMENT NO. 878

Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Ir. WILLIAMS (for himself and Mr. Javits) submitted an amend- nt intended to be proposed by them jointly to the bill (S. 2515) to ther promote equal employment opportunities for American kers.

* * * * * * *

he ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the ir lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which the clerk state.

he assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

bill (S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportunities for Ameri- workers.

he Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Ir. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

he ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

he assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

r. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order he quorum call be rescinded.

he PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Gambrell). Without objection, it is so red.

r. ALLEN. Mr. President, yesterday on the floor of the Senate I essed the hope that Congress would not recess before action had taken to bring to an end the crippling and devasting west coast strike, and I was much encouraged to learn from reading the spaper this morning that last evening at 6 o'clock the Senate Com- e on Labor and Public Welfare had voted to report out to the ite floor legislation which would accomplish that end.

r. President, I would much prefer that the Senate at this time be idering that most important legislation, rather than to be con- ing S. 2515, which would extend the powers of the Equal Employ- Opportunities Commission to grant to that Commission powers it has not had during the 7 years of its existence, powers that are eeded at this time, jurisdiction that it does not need, and juris- on that it has not had for the last 7 years of its existence.

. Mr. President, it would seem to the junior Senator from Ala- that we are in the attitude of fiddling while the economic struc- of this country is burning down.

is hoped that soon today this measure, S. 2515, will be set aside, t permanently—which would be preferable—then certainly tem- rily, in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration, I assume, of Senate Joint Resolution 187, which was introduced by th distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits). Even though th committee voted to report the resolution, or a resolution, it is th understanding of the junior Senator from Alabama that the resolu tion has not yet been presented to the clerk, to become the property o the entire Senate.

So, whether a new resolution drafted by the committee itself o Senate Joint Resolution 187 is to be before the Senate, the junior Sena tor from Alabama does not know; but that will become known late in the morning.

To compare the need for S. 2515 with the need for the passage o legislation to bring to an end the dock strike is certainly to make a unequal comparison, because there is no comparison between the nee for Senate Joint Resolution 187 and the need for S. 2515. It is the hop of the junior Senator from Alabama that the measure before th Senate will soon be set aside in order that we can proceed to legislatio which is in the national interest, to bring to an end the work stoppag on the west coast, which is having an adverse effect on all the people o this country. This is a work stoppage involving the entire nationa interest. We are losing our markets abroad. If customers abroad are no able to depend upon supplies and goods from the United States, the of necessity, they will have to turn to the products of other countries

For the first time in 80-odd years, last year was the only year i which the United States has bought more goods from abroad than w have sold abroad. So this unfortunate trade deficit is being compl cated by the continuation of the dock strike on the west coast.

Mr. President, I have previously discussed in great detail many o the inherent dangers and evils of S. 2515, the bill before the Senate.

The pending business is an amendment offered by the distinguishe senior Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin) and myself, whic would seek to nullify the effort of the sponsors, of the bill to redu from 25 to 8 the minimum number of employees that an employer mu have in order to come under the provisions of the EEOC bill.

The sponsors of the bill and the committee seek to reduce that num ber from 25 to 8, so that, under the committee bill, every employer i this country who employs as many as 8 people would be covered by th provisions of EEOC. The pending amendment would nullify th effort and, if adopted, would leave the present law intact—that a employer must have as many as 25 employees to be covered by th EEOC.

Mr. President, let me hasten to say that I strongly favor the rig of every person in this country to have a fair and equal opportunity t obtain employment, without discrimination of any sort against him. employment is available. It has been made to appear that this bi would confer certain basic and fundamental and substantive rights o employees throughout the country. The bill does not change the bas right of anyone that he not be discriminated against. The bill does n change that right. Under the law, everyone has the right not to be di criminated against as he seeks employment.

This bill does not create a single job in the private sector. It does n make any jobs available that are not already available. It does n require that business or industry or small business or small employe create additional jobs for people; and, of necessity, if any jobs a ed that are now held by someone else, someone is going to lose his , because not a single job is created in the private sector by this bill. e bill will create an army of additional bureaucrats, additional Fed- l employees.

Mr. President, there is no denying that the line is so well drawn as it n this bill. We hear from people throughout the country—our con- uents—the citizens of our respective States, that the Government is ting too big, that the Government is spending too much money. Yes, Government is spending too much money. The accumulated deficits this administration at the end of the fiscal year for which we are considering appropriations will run in the neighborhood of $83 ion. So, yes, the Government is getting too big and it is spending much money. It is taking too great control over the everyday lives ll our people.

Mr. President, while I was home for the Christmas recess, I received lephone call from a small businessman, whom I did not know but was and is a resident of my State. He called me not to protest inst any specific piece of legislation—not to protest against S. 2515. did not know anything about the pendency of this bill. That is one he reasons this extended discussion is going on, Mr. President, so the people of this country will find out and be informed as to the nitous provisions of the bill and so that they can protest against nactment.

his man who is a small businessman was pointing out the heavy tax lens under which he was operating, the government red tape he was ired to submit to, and to the impositions of the Federal Govern- t in putting him on the carpet and checking his records. He said ie, "Senator Allen, the small people of this country are getting to oint where they are afraid of their Government."

r. President, that is a pretty sad state of affairs for our people to that the Government of this great country is not on their side, that have a fear against the actions of their Government, or that they the actions of their Government.

r. President, I did not have the heart to tell him what he is going et hit with when S. 2515 is enacted into law—if ever it is.

it is left up to the junior Senator from Alabama, it will not be ted into law. I am hopeful that before very long it will be sug- d that the junior Senator from Alabama conclude his remarks, in r that this piece of legislation can be laid aside, in order that we ake up legislation designed to end the disastrous west coast dock e. I do not know whether this bill that has been supposedly re- d out of the committee—I guess a more accurate statement would at it has been voted out of the committee but has not yet been ed in to the clerk.

. JAVITS. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

. ALLEN. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from New York.

. JAVITS. Mr. President, I should like to make a comment, that I l the Senator say, with great interest, that he felt we should deal the dock strike, that it represents an infinitely greater priority for ountry, and that we should not be debating the pending EEOC

ise only for the purpose of expressing my own disagreement with I believe that under the two-track system which the leadership has inaugurated, we can deal with the immediate emergency—to wi the dock strike, and we can also deal with the EEOC bill.

My own deeply held view is that though it is less sensational i terms of its not being a burning fire day, right this morning, it coul be a burning fire tomorrow, and has been before, so deep is the feelin of millions of Americans about the denial of opportunity in the mos basic of all opportunities to any American—to wit, a job.

That is a commitment to housing. That is a commitment to educatio and to dignity, which we now learn is more important than anythin else to the poor and to the minorities who feel themselves oppresse

Thus, I know that the Senator and I have had our disagreements It does not change in any way our regard for each other. But I think that the record should clearly show that we who are contending fo the EEOC bill give extremely high priority to that bill for deep social, and economic reasons in the country. We see nothing whatever mutually exclusive between the consideration of an emergenc measure or a major strike which is a serious disadvantage to th national interest and a particular part of the country, and are pursuing a basic reform so critical to the future health, in a social an economic sense, of the United States.

I thank my colleague from Alabama for yielding to me.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr Javits) for his comments with respect to the pending measure an the other measure.

Might I inquire of the distinguished Senator from New York whe it may be anticipated that the report of the committee with respec to the dock legislation will be reported to the Senate?

Mr. JAVITS. I believe within the next couple of hours. We have go it in galley and we are just looking over the galley proof.

Mr. ALLEN. I see.

Mr. JAVITS. We are looking it over now and I expect that the dis tinguished Senator from Iowa (Mr. Hughes) will be reporting th bill unanimously on the part of the committee, by the way, within th next hour or so.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would say to the distinguished Senato that when the bill is ready to be reported, the junior Senator fro Alabama will be glad to yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, in my discussions of the bill, I hav strongly denounced and criticized the fact that the legislation woul violate the Constitution by empowering the Federal Government t interfere with the basic and fundamental functions of State and loca governments by dictating their employment practices.

Mr. President, I might say parenthetically that this bill will, i enacted, extend coverage by the EEOC to some 10 million employee of State, county, and city governments and agencies of State, county and city governments.

I say again that the States power over their employment functio is not only basic, but essential, to the very existence of State sove eignty. If we deprive the States of their basic functions, it is pointle for anyone to maintain that we have a dual form of government.

Mr. President, we comment from time to time to the effect that th Federal Government is taking over the roles of the States, that th ht to think is being invaded by the Federal Government. And, tainly here is a classic illustration of that charge.

The EEOC is going to take over the employment practices of the al governments. The EEOC is going to determine who is going to employed, not the elected officers of States, counties, and cities. If t is not a classic example of expanding the Federal power and anding the Federal bureaucracy, I do not know what it is.

Ir. President, we have an opportunity to defeat this iniquitous slation. On two occasions efforts have been made to bring this ate to a close by resorting to a cloture motion and by resorting to it has been referred to by many as gag rule.

Ir. President, we hear that the U.S. Senate is the only deliberative y in the world that has unlimited debate by its Members. The ate does have the right to unlimited debate on a debatable ques- . And amendments are certainly a debatable question, subject only ne right to try to invoke cloture. Cloture, according to the rules ne Senate, requires a two-thirds favorable vote of a quorum of the ators present.

, on two occasions since this bill was pushed out before us in the ite, an effort has been made to invoke cloture. Both of those efforts voted down in the Senate. And, Mr. President, I would antici- that if another cloture motion is presented, it too, will be voted n. And I would hope that if the bill has not been set aside perma- ly by the majority leader before that time, that after the vote on ird cloture motion, if it be unsuccessful, the majority leader will set this bill aside as not having come up to the requirement of Senate rules as being such a bill as two-thirds of the Members of Senate feel that it is so important that debate on the issue should rought to a close. Thus far, I am pleased to say that two-thirds of Senate has not seen fit to end the debate on this question and vote ie bill.

r. President, as I sense the feeling in the Senate, the Senate prob- is willing to see the powers of the EEOC extended over State, , and city employees, as the committee bill does and as the bill, troduced, does.

e Senate is probably willing to extend, as the committee bill does, rovisions of the EEOC over every educational institution in the ed States, including every university, every college, every high ol, every elementary school, every private school, and every h-supported school.

e Senate is probably willing to swallow all of these provisions. what the Senate has been unwilling to do, in the judgment of unior Senator from Alabama, is to accept the provisions which nforcement power to the EEOC, along with the powers it already of receiving complaints, investigating complaints, filing charges, n general, reaching a decision.

under the bill the function of the EEOC would be greatly ex- d with respect to its jurisdiction over the millions of people that uld cover, not only with respect to the extension of its jurisdic- ut also with respect to the extension of its powers: the power a judge, a jury, and a prosecutor.

. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would be delighted to yield to the dis- ished Senator from Florida.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I was listening with interest to t remarks of the Senator from Alabama and particularly those he ju made concerning the power and authority which this bill would gi insofar as the employment of people by the colleges, universities, an educational institutions is concerned.

Mr. ALLEN. That is one of the provisions.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, suppose we had a number of educ tional institutions in the country that were concerned about the polit cal philosophy and whether their faculties should be liberal or con servative—and there are some on both sides of that question.

We also have colleges and universities founded by religious sec that still are very concerned about the fact that their curriculum an thrust should be oriented in a religious direction.

We have others that perhaps are concerned about political ideolog or economic ideology; that is, they would prefer not to employ a a faculty member to teach economics someone who believe in th Socialist concept of government.

Now, my question is: As far as all of these colleges and universiti that might have rather strong feelings on those various matters, wou this bill mean that if they refused to hire a professor, for exampl in a college that had a strong religious philosophy, an atheist, perhap who did not believe in any kind of religion, who applied to teac in the college, that this Commission could come in and say, "You ha to hire or employ that person, otherwise you would be discriminatin against him."

Is that what this bill means?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, it certainly does. As to educational institutio that are not church supported or that are not religious education institutions, there is no exemption whatsoever; but as to religio institutions, if they were church-supported schools, then the exem tion would apply only to the teaching of religion or religious activitie but they could be forced to employ an atheist to teach economics i a church-supported school along with religious subjects. So the answe is, "Yes," the employer of such a person could be forced under th provisions of this bill.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alaban yield without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. ALLEN. I would be delighted to yield, if it is satisfactory wi the distinguished Senator from Florida who was engaged in a co loquy with me.

Mr. GURNEY. Yes, indeed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the Senator.

First, I suggest the absence of a quorum, which will be brief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that th order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

* * * * * * *

he Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515), ill to further promote equal employment opportunities for Ameri- workers.

Ir. ALLEN. Now if the distinguished Senator from Florida desires ngage in further colloquy with respect to this bill, the junior ator from Alabama will be delighted to yield to him.

Ir. GURNEY. I thank the junior Senator from Alabama.

Ir. President, I must say I agree with the sentiments the Senator n Alabama just expressed about the importance of the dock strike slation as opposed to the bill that is now on the floor and which are discussing.

might go further and say that I would think any piece of legisla- coming before the Senate at this time ought to have priority this particular bill, which is such poor legislation. But if we continue now to probe some of the provisions within the bill, ould like to pinpoint once more the religious aspects of the bill. am sure that the Senator from Alabama has had the same ex- nce I have had over the years, and that is chats with parents have expressed concern about the selection of a higher educa- l institution for their son or daughter. I know some of them ery concerned about putting their sons and daughters in a school still does consider that religion is a powerful force in this country. r example, there is a little preparatory school near my home in ida whose main emphasis is on religion, and when boys and girls uate from that school, they try to go to colleges which emphasize ion, too, usually smaller colleges.

received a fund-raising letter in the mail last week from such stitution, seeking to raise funds for its expenses and its endow- . It underscores that fact that one of the things it still places aasis on in this college is the teaching of religion.

t us suppose that this college made known to the academic com- ty that it wanted to hire a new instructor in economics, and it we will say, two applications for that opening, one from a very nguished economics professor, who had a brilliant academic r, second to none in the country, and one from another, who aps had a good record, but not that distinguished, except that econd person believed also very strongly in religion and that basic precept in this individual's life.

: us say the college wants to decide which one it wants to hire, t actually hires the second person, on the basis that the second n does have a strong belief in religion and the school emphasizes particular quality in all faculty matters. So it hires the second cant and turns down the first.

w suppose the first applicant goes to the Equal Employment rtunity Commission. If this bill goes into effect, what happens, question?

. ALLEN. Well, it would be up to the EEOC to investigate the laint after having received it. Then, if it felt that this person een discriminated against because of his religion, or lack of on, the EEOC could have its General Counsel prepare and file es, not with an independent agency, not with the court, but arges back with the Commission; and the Commission, having ed the charges, investigated the charges, prejudged them to the that it turned them over to counsel for the filing of the charges, would then reach the decision as to whether this person had been discriminated against. Then, when it reached that decision, it could with respect to this person, order the institution to cease and desist from discriminating against that man and require that the institution employ the person who had been rejected by the university or the school.

Then the university, if it saw fit to appeal that matter, would have to appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and the matter would not be tried de novo, but would be tried on the basis of the record which had been certified to the court by the Commission. So the EEOC, then would receive the complaint, prosecute the complaint, judge the complaint, and enforce the authority.

Mr. GURNEY. In other words, the judge, jury, and prosecutor, all tied into one.

Mr. ALLEN. Exactly. That is what the bill would provide, and that is one of the iniquitous provisions which the junior Senator from Alabama objects to so strenuously.

Mr. GURNEY. What would happen in the meantime, while the school or college is without a faculty member? What would the bill provide as to that? Would they have to stop hiring this man they had proceeded to hire, and wait until the Commission had decided?

Mr. ALLEN. The bill makes no provision as to that, but if the employee who is alleged to have been discriminated against does win out before the Commission, the Commission could order that he receive back pay from the time he was not employed.

This provision would relate, for example, to a church school that would like to have its professors religiously inclined. It could require it to accept someone with another religion, or someone who had no religion whatsoever. That is just exactly the opposite from what the Senator from Florida suggests many parents want for their children and what the children want for themselves.

Mr. GURNEY. And it could, I suppose, impose very serious financial burdens on a small school with a limited budget.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. GURNEY. Most colleges these days operate at a deficit, anyway.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. GURNEY. And I suppose colleges that have to watch their budgets very closely would hesitate before they would take on a professor if they anticipated the possibility that a big charge could be run up against them that they would have to pay eventually.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes: of course, the college would have to pay for its defense.

Mr. GURNEY. But let us take an extreme case. I posed the question of someone who did not believe very strongly in religion, or was an atheist, as opposed to a faculty member who would believe strongly in religion.

Let us suppose the professor who was turned down had a well known track record on this subject of atheism in all the other colleges and universities of which he had been a member of the faculty and in which he had taught, that he had not only made very plain that he was an atheist, but had spent a lot of time practicing and preaching, if we can use that word in this colloquy, that anyone who believed in religion and any faculty member who taught it ought to have his head examined, and that any college or university should fire any faculty member who believed in religion. Suppose you had an extreme example like that the college or university turned that man down; what would pen then?

r. ALLEN. Well, the Commission would be empowered, in its wis—or lack of wisdom—to say that that person had been discrimid against, and that the school would have to employ him because rimination on account of religion would not be permitted. So it ld be up to the Commission, and it is a judge unto itself. It is not verable to anyone except to the court of appeals, based on the record it sends up to the court of appeals for consideration.

r. GURNEY. Then, if I gather the meaning of this colloquy corly, this motto that we have on our money in the United States, "In We Trust," would sort of go out the window like the baby with bath water, would it not?

r. ALLEN. Well, there are reasons for feeling that way about it, I d say to the distinguished Senator.

r. GURNEY. Let me pose another question. We claim to be a nation rivate free enterprise in this country of ours, as opposed to the listic kind of government which exists in a great many nations e world—chiefly, of course, in our principal adversary, Russia—ll of us know that on colleges and university faculties these days is an ever-increasing tendency—at least I think I am correct in ng that—of professors and instructors, especially in the liberal arts ges, to believe in socialism as opposed to free and private enter-. At least that is what students tell me with whom I talk, and other le as well, that there is a growing number of people with that kind nomic belief.

ppose a college or university believes very strongly in private prise. When they selected their professors to teach in the economic they would be particularly careful to try to get a professor who elieves in free private enterprise. Now, we have a vacancy on the mics faculty at this X college, and we have a couple of applica-. One man, Professor A, believes very strongly in free private prise, but it happens that the other, Professor B, does not believe at all; as a matter of fact, he thinks it is a total failure, and that nly way to run any kind of a government, whether in Russia, the ed States, or any other country, would be a socialist kind of eoc system, where the government owns all the facilities of produc-nd distribution, and everyone works for the government as they Russia.

e college makes a decision; they decide they would rather have ssor A, the free private enterprise professor, as opposed to Pro-B, the socialist believer. So they hire Professor A, and then Pro-B brings a complaint against the college before the Commis-What would be the result of a case like that?

. ALLEN. Of course, it would be up to the Commission to whether there had been any discrimination. But I doubt if it l use a person's employment because of his economic philosophy. bt if that, even by the Commission, would be held to be discrimi-n. I feel that even the Commission would say that was not dis-nation of the type forbidden by law. If it were discrimination be-of sex or religion or race, then that would be discrimination that mmission could make a case against, but possibly not as regards mic philosophy.

I wonder if the distinguished Senator has considered the damage th this Commission and its operations could do to the academic freedo of various institutions. I wonder if he would comment on his view wi regard to that.

Mr. GURNEY. Well, let me pursue this other question one more ste which is what I really intended to do in the beginning, because I unde stand the bill forbids discrimination on those three grounds the di tinguished Senator has outlined.

But now we get into the shadow area, and this is what I am co cerned with. Let us take that same area of economic beliefs again, an let us inject into it one or two things: Sex—which, of course, is a mo or less delightful subject to inject into anything—or we could inje race, but one or the other. Actually, so far as the institution is co cerned, it is not opposing the hiring of the professor who believes socialism, who might be a woman or might be a member of a minori group. Then the professor who is rejected brings the complaint befo the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, but he or she mak the complaint on the ground of sex or of race.

Would this not pose a pretty difficult and serious problem so far the hiring institution is concerned, even though they were oppo ing it purely upon the belief of this person in a socialistic kind government?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, definitely. That would allow the EEOC to s that the institution had discriminated in these areas where protecti is granted under the law. Even though they objected to that applica on other grounds, the Commission could find that it was in one of t protected areas and force the employment of that person.

Mr. GURNEY. Is not that danger particularly true the way this b is worded?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. GURNEY. We go right back to the point that the distinguish Senator from Alabama made a short time ago—that the Commissi is the indicter, the prosecutor, the judge, the jury, and the fact finde

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. GURNEY. In other words, it handles all these things. So that you have people on a commission—heaven knows, all of us ha prejudices one way or another; we cannot help it; it is ground into in our upbringing and our teaching and where we have lived, all alo life's path. We cannot completely disassociate ourselves from beli we have picked up earlier. So if you had a commission that was "go ho" to prevent any possible violation of this act, they could easily ma a finding of fact, I suppose, that the institution turned down this app cant on the ground of sex or of race rather than of economic beli in socialism. Is that not true?

Mr. ALLEN. Very definitely. They would be empowered to do th

Mr. GURNEY. So, then, the institution finally could be saddled w somebody who had an economic belief that was violently opposed what this institution was trying to teach its young men and you women. Is that not a fact?

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. GURNEY. And that is the real danger of this bill.

Mr. ALLEN. This procedure is somewhat reminiscent of the S Chamber procedure back in England of some two centuries ago.
almost rises to the Inquisition back in the medieval days in Euro s a pernicious business, setting up a system of harassment of every eational institution in the country, and every employer of as many ight people would be covered.

Ir. GURNEY. As a matter of fact, have we not had a previous ex-ple of this kind of procedure? I am talking now about the proure, not the substance of the bill. It seems to me that under the ional Labor Relations Act, which set up the National Labor Relas Board, we had a similar example.

Ir. ALLEN. Somewhat, yes.

Ir. GURNEY. Where there was a judge, jury, and prosecutor all pped into one. In times past, it has been pretty difficult, under that edure, to get more than a one-sided opinion, and the cards really been sort of stacked in favor of one party as opposed to the
r. Is that not true in some of the past history of that particular rd?

r. ALLEN. Certainly, there is an analogy between the two edures.

r. GURNEY. I would think that we would hesitate before we ped into some other kind of trap.
y understanding of the position of the junior Senator from Ala-a—at least on the procedural aspect we are talking about—is that e really are going to follow the kind of legal proceedings that we always thought we had in this country, we ought to have a check balance there, too, and not have everything all tied up in one edure. That is why the junior Senator from Alabama—if I cory understand his argument—feels that the court process ought to iected in the decisionmaking of this Commission rather than the e thing being wrapped up in the decisionmaking in the early part Is that not correct?

r. ALLEN. That is correct.

r. GURNEY. Would the junior Senator from Alabama explain that se difference a little more for me, so that I can precisely under-l it?

r. ALLEN. The Senator has reference to the procedure under the
Of course, at the present time the Commission has powers of con-ion, advisory capacity, and it has a backlog of about 18 months years of cases before it now. It is anticipated that this year oximately 32,000 more cases are going to be filed and that next approximately 45,000 more will be filed.
e Commission receives these complaints and investigates them gh its employees. By the way, I might suggest that it was pointed n answer to a question I propounded to the distinguished Senator New Jersey (Mr. Williams), that it is anticipated that in the year or two, the employees of the EEOC are going to double in er, to increase from approximately 1,000 to 2,000 employees. would use some of these Federal bureaucrats to investigate these
es. Then, if they feel, at that stage in the proceedings, that there een discrimination—they prejudge the matter, or they would not n the General Counsel to prefer charges—they refer the matter to eneral Counsel. He prefers the charges against the respondent, ier the respondent be an educational institution or a religious l or a private school or a small employer who employs as few as people. Then the matter is tried before the Commission itself, the very Commission that had turned the matter over to the counsel fo prosecution.

So it seems to the junior Senator from Alabama that that provide no due process. The junior Senator from Alabama recalls that th Constitution says that nobody shall be deprived of life or propert without due process of law.

Mr. GURNEY. It is at this point, as I understand it, that the junio Senator from Alabama would bring in a Federal judge.

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct.

Mr. GURNEY. To hear this matter and try it and decide it.

Mr. ALLEN. That is correct. They would be the jury and the prose cutor, but they would not be the judge.

I do not think that asking the Federal judiciary to take over thi problem is in any way showing a lack of sympathy for those who fee that they have been discriminated against, because the record of th district judges over the country certainly is one of compassion and e sympathy with civil rights, with the desegregation of schools in ou area of our country. I am not going to try to get into that situation. I will comment on that another day. But the district judges have bee especially compassionate in matters of civil rights.

Also, in the judgment of the junior Senator from Alabama, the ma ter could be determined more readily, more quickly by the court rout for this reason: There are 398 Federal district judges in the country There is only one Equal Employment Opportunity Commission lodge here in Washington so that with this tremendous backlog of cases tha the Commission already has, seeking to decide all the discriminatio cases that would arise in the 50 States, and all of that to be decided b a five-man Commission, it would certainly seem to the junior Senato from Alabama to be the sure way to prevent a man getting a decisio any time soon, whereas if the workload is divided out as the occurren of the acts of discrimination might dictate, or if it is divided ou among the 398 Federal district judges, it would be quite apparent tha a final determination could be arrived at much quicker by going th court enforcement route rather than having the complaints aired be fore the Commission itself. So that they would get speedier action, in the judgment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GURNEY. It would seem to me it would also obtain a muc broader kind of decisionmaking if we had the Federal judges in the 5 States of the Union deciding these matters instead of one Commissio located in Washington, D.C. It would seem to me we would get a muc broader viewpoint and perhaps even a fairer viewpoint.

Mr. ALLEN. That is true. Also on the matter of witnesses, should a matter come up in the district where the discrimination took place, it would obviously be easier for the witnesses to appear in their distric Justice could be better done by handling it at the local level. Also Fe eral district judges that are, I assume, but have not always been i ivory towers, at one time they were practicing attorneys, have a fami iarity with local conditions and local problems and they would obv ously carry that knowledge with them to the bench.

Mr. GURNEY. On that very point, I was interested in the Senator' observation about the progress made in the field of civil rights, esp cially school desegregation and integration. While I realize it is not subject matter under this bill, it certainly is a closely relate subject——

Ir. ALLEN. Yes, indeed.

Ir. GURNEY (continuing). To the whole area we are discussing . For the life of me, I cannot understand, and perhaps the junior ator from Alabama can explain to me, the opposition of the man-rs of the bill to the Federal district courts, because we all know the civil rights revolution—and I do not think there is any other to term it but as a revolution which we have had in the past decade a half, which has occurred mainly in the South where many people he North think that people in the South do not understand the blem—in school desegregation and integration, and the further-of the cause of civil rights, came right out of the South, right off benches of Federal district court judges. While it is true they were ner practicing attorneys in the South, it is fair to say, so far as ol desegregation is concerned, that probably 99 percent of case law chool desegregation has been made in the South and all of it by eral judges. If we have that kind of track record of getting along, fairly rapid pace, and certainly in the past few years in the area vil rights, why would it not work so far as equal employment op-unity is concerned?

would almost seem to me as though the managers and the authors e bill, seeing that the record would place a greater degree of sure-in their cause, would like to put it in the jurisdiction of the Fed-district courts and the Federal judges. What answer would the tor have for that?

r. ALLEN. They have not answered it to my satisfaction. I do not l that they have given any plausible answer, not one that seems sible to me, at least. Apparently they want the Commission to le the whole package and not bother to take it before a judge, who d probably try the matter under the rules of evidence, who would iat the respondent had his day in court, that the matter was tried out any bias or prejudice; whereas possibly the Commission t be more inclined to go into a matter it had already investigated nad preferred charges on, so that they might already have their s made up that discrimination did exist.

gree with the Senator from Florida that they should have no fear ke a matter to the Federal district court with the track record, as listinguished Senator from Florida refers to it, of the Federal iary in the Federal district court on civil rights matters. So the nents of the bill come in and say, "We want some enforcement anism." Well, there is no opposition, so far as the junior Senator Alabama knows, to giving an enforcement mechanism. The chief of difference at that point—and I disagree with covering State ocal government and I disagree with covering educational instins—as to the matter of an enforcement procedure, I am willing nfer on the Commission an enforcement mechanism for their de-
, and remove them from the lack of an enforcement procedure—s, supply that need. They have been operating for 7 years. I as-they claim they have done a good job because they come back year to state their case for appropriations, and they have never to be disbanded, so I assume that they say they are doing a job under present law.

it seems to me that the court decision enforcement right should be table to all parties. By and large, that is what this whole discussion is about, because it is apparent from the temper of the Senate as the junior Senator from Alabama assesses it, that the Senate is willing to cover State, county, and city employees, that it is even willing, based on the amendment which we offered but which was turned down, to cover educational institutions. I disagree with the wisdom of that, but apparently the Senate is willing to do that. But what it has been unwilling to do is to make of this Commission prosecutor, jury and judge. Apparently it is willing to give it the mechanism of allowing it to prosecute these complaints and these charges in the Federal district courts throughout the country. So it is hard for the junior Senator from Alabama to see what the objection is all about. The court procedure route confers on the Commission a power it does not now have. So why they are not willing to accept that is something I find hard to understand.

Mr. GURNEY. One thing about this procedure is that under the Federal court system, and speaking now of the criminal side, or the cases where U.S. attorneys are involved as prosecutors, even in the case of a person who is beyond the Federal Government, the judiciary's part has suffered from the office of the U.S. attorney.

I mean by that that if the U.S. attorney has a matter before him or if he has a civil matter before him, he is the one who makes the decision as to whether to go ahead and prosecute it. The judge does not tell him what to do. He decides what he is going to do. Yet it seems to me that under the procedure that is set up in the bill, we do not even state anything beyond that, because the Commission, the General Counsel's office, the whole kit and caboodle are wrapped up in one package and going in one direction.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GURNEY. And seemingly his guidance over these things does not accomplish much, even in the Federal court; does it?

Mr. ALLEN. No, it certainly does not. Consequently, a better opportunity for the due process of law would be exercised under the court procedure route rather than having it wrapped all in one package which would be the effect of the bill pending before the Senate.

Mr. GURNEY. Another thing bothers me about the way the bill is drafted, both as to its substance and as to what it includes and does not include at the present time and its procedures. We could go back again to the example of a religious school that wanted to hire a religious person, a person that is more religiously oriented than another person.

It seems to me that we have had examples in the past of zealots in some fields who have pinpointed certain areas that they want to zero in on, not only in the civil rights field, but also in the educational areas and institutions.

I can remember, for example, some years ago when the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare sent down to Florida during the summer time a group of college students that were still in college but were on summer vacation. The mission of these students was to come down to Florida and harass the boards of education in the State of Florida concerning their hiring practices.

This, of course, was in the civil rights field. But it actually happened. These young college students, who had not even had their first job in life as yet, came down to Florida like a swarm of locusts and proceeded to tell these people exactly what they had to do to get their institution hape or how to shape up, if we want to put it in that way, on a job some of them had spent most of their lifetimes in doing. We have an example like that.

t seems to me that if we are going to create a commission such as this give it the judicial powers that this bill calls for, as well as the adonal coverage, we can go back to the example of a college that nted to keep itself as a religious institution and hire faculty mems who believe in the religion of their own faith—whether it be Bap-, Congregationalist, which is my own faith, or whatever it be. bunch of people who were zealots and who wanted to change the ept of that particular college would zero on their target and apply et on the faculty and keep that institution embroiled constantly re the EEOC. Also, if we had a commission that wanted to be overous on the kinds of suits they entertain and the kind of prosecus they preferred, such an institution could be harassed almost out xistence. Does the Senator from Alabama see that danger in the

r. ALLEN. I very definitely do. There is also the danger of the loss cademic freedom by educational institutions. With the constant ssment that is possibly under the bill, I see a possible loss of acitation by some of our institutions.

s the Senator knows, there is always a constant battle by institus of higher learning to have adequate libraries, adequate facilities equipment, and adequate teaching staffs to maintain their accredon so that the young people of the State can go to those schools ng that they are going to an accredited institution from which they nt transfer their credits to other institutions.

ne of the causes that results in loss of accreditation by an institution igher learning is that when politics creeps into the institution, it is that the institution is run, not by educators, but by politicians or government agency.

is then the feeling that the institution is not there for education poses, but for political reasons. And that sometimes results in the f accreditation by students. So, if the EEOC is constantly harassnstitutions of higher learning, or a secondary school for that matthere would be considerable alarm that the institution might lose ccreditation.

r. GURNEY. Mr. President, that brings to mind another interesting t on which I would like to ask a question of the distinguished tor from Alabama. It is a well-known fact that the contributions stitutions of higher learning have dropped very considerably, with ence to alumni funds, for example, and also with reference to of the large gifts that have been made in the past outside of ni funds every year to colleges and universities in the Nation. It vell-known fact that no college or university today of any size or h or merit could get along financially with either the tuition that id by its students or from the income they receive from their enments. Every single one of them, needs a substantial income other from the alumni and special gifts.

know that this drop off is [illegible] because of two reasons. One has the turmoil on the campuses which has discouraged some of the who had contributed before. Another concerns the policies of unions. That is the thing we talked about a little but before. Many of the donors are unhappy and upset because of the policies of the institutions or the kind of instruction they give in political science or economics or special studies or because of the permissiveness they permit on the campus.

I am not making a general indictment of colleges or universities. I am simply saying that these are some of the causes why alumni are not giving any more or are giving less and why other special grants are not being brought in.

As we know, we have institutions that are strongly religious in their orientation and teaching. Suppose, for example, when this bill is passed, if it is passed in its present form, there were faculty members on the faculties of these particular colleges that did not believe in religion, so the whole thrust of that college or university as far as religious doctrine went out the window. Might that not affect giving by alumni as well as others who wish to support that kind of institution?

Mr. ALLEN. I think definitely it would because if the institution has ceased to carry out the mission or the function approved by the alumni, obviously they are going to withdraw their financial support and transfer it somewhere else if they find an institution they feel worthy of their support.

So any institution that is constantly being harassed and that has a bad image and gets the reputation of having on its faculty—and I am speaking of religious institutions at this time—people who are not in favor of carrying out the mission which has been conceived for the institution, obviously people are going to be dissatisfied and it is going to cause a lessening of their contributions. I think definitely it would be to the disadvantage of such institutions.

Mr. GURNEY. So one of the inherent dangers in this bill, in addition to the other dangers that the Senator from Alabama and others have discussed in debate on this bill, is the inherent danger that we may be shooting down the cause of higher education, at least to some extent, in some schools that want to run their particular institutions in certain fashions that have been time honored, and as near as I can see, it has little to do with discrimination in employment of people; they want conditions as they have always been and it just has to do with how they want their curriculum and studies handled and what kind of instructions they want to have in their institutions as opposed to some other kind.

I thank the distinguished junior Senator from Alabama for the colloquy and for answering some of these questions that have troubled me and I know they are going to trouble a great many of my constituents in Florida, as they are now troubling them, as I know from the mail I receive from day to day. I think constituents of other Senators would be greatly troubled if they had any idea of what is in this bill and what might happen if the bill were passed in its present form.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Alabama for the real light, a sort of glare of the searchlight, he is bringing to this bill so we can be informed what it is all about.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator for his generous comments and for the contributions he made to the colloquy, as well as the background and provisions of the bill. He has made a definite contribution in pointing out some of the inherent dangers in this bill. I appreciate very much the contribution he has made.

Mr. GURNEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, in my discussions of the bill I have strongly denounced d criticized the fact that the legislation would violate the very first m of the first article of the Bill of Rights by empowering the Fed-al Government to interfere with the free exercise of religion by dic-ing almost all of the employment practices of church-supported ucational institutions.

That is in line with the colloquy I have been having with the dis-guished Senator from Florida. I say again that it would be difficult imagine any practice more at odds with the idea of religious liberty an to say that the first amendment left it open to the Federal Gov-ment to compel church-supported schools at every level of educa-n to capitulate the Federal Government's secular concept of "equal ployment opportunity." If this is not true, the first amendment is an empty pledge expressed in idle words.

n my discussions of the bill, I have strongly denounced and criti-ed the fact that the proposed legislation is a direct assault upon the e enterprise system. The bill brings within its orbit every employer ing eight or more employees and every labor union having eight or re members. I assume that that would take in every labor organizan in the country. It would be a mighty small one if it did not have many as eight members. Thus, the small businessman, already rburdened, would encounter new regulations, investigations, hears, and appeals far beyond his time, his energy, or his finances. If the becomes law—and I certainly hope that the Senate will reject the —many of the most cherished benefits which organized labor has ined in the last four decades would no longer become matters of ht, but would automatically become matters of administrative grace e doled out by EEOC bureaucrats as rewards for good behavior vithheld as punishment when any union does not comply with their hands.

have had the privilege of discussing the bill on several occasions he Senate has been considering it. The only purpose of extending ate on the bill is to allow the people affected—the people of the ntry—to be alerted to the dangers of the pending proposed legis-on. The Senate can act very slowly at times; it can act with great d at other times. The purpose of this discussion is not to seek to suade any Senator to the position of the junior Senator from Ala-a, because if he persuaded every Senator to support the position he junior Senator from Alabama, he would not be able to defeat bill outright. But he does believe that by an extended discussion he bill, its dangers will become apparent to enough of the constitu-of Senators who have voted against cloture and of Senators who e not voted against cloture that the bill should not be allowed to s.

n the two instances when the Senate has voted on the question of ther debate on the measure should be choked off, the votes have decided in the negative. So apparently a sufficient number of Sens feel that the principle of providing due process of law for persons ered by the bill is so important that we who oppose the bill will llowed to have our day on this subject.

gain, I commend the distinguished majority leader for not allow-the Calendar of the Senate to become clogged by other measures.

He has set up a two-track system by which on one track we will have this item of legislation subject to extended debate, and are going to have the other track for important legislation that needs to be attended to by the servants of the people in the Senate.

Mr. President, looking at the Calendar of the Senate, this Congress has been in session now for 13 months, and there are only 21 items of business on the calendar. That is a great record, Mr. President—only 21 pieces of legislation on the Calendar of the U.S. Senate. And one of those measures is the companion measure to S. 2515—H.R. 1746. So actually there are, in effect, only 20 measures on the Calendar of the U.S. Senate.

I point that out, Mr. President, to show that our discussion of this matter has not held up the consideration of any important business pending before the Senate. Mr. President, the strike legislation, the legislation that would bring to an end, and I hope provide a permanent solution to this problem, the west coast dock strike, is, at 2 o'clock, by unanimous consent of the Senate, being placed on track 2, if you might call it that, for consideration by the Senate. At 2 o'clock we go over to the second track and take up the so-called west coast dock legislation. So, Mr. President, the Nation's business is not being held up by this discussion.

One collateral benefit I might suggest—perhaps it is not a benefit; but I choose to call it a benefit—that we obtain from extended discussion of this bill and the amendments that are pending is that it enables some of our Members who are seeking higher office, if there be such, to come and go as they see fit. When they have been alerted that there is a cloture vote coming up, we will see them coming in, every single one of them, to vote for cloture. Every single one of the Members of this body seeking another office manages to drift in when the cloture vote comes up.

So, Mr. President—and I say it possibly is not of benefit; possibly it is of detriment—these Members are enabled to go their way and miss the votes. But the bad part of it, Mr. President, is that we are deprived of their presence and the contribution they could make on this legislation. We know how they are going to vote, because we see it time after time. But if we did have a series of votes, possibly some of them would come in and favor this body with their presence.

Mr. President, this bill should not be allowed to pass. It should not be allowed to come to a vote until it has been fully explained, not only to this body but to others, and I am assuming that the absent Senators will read my remarks in the Congressional Record. Not having been here to receive the benefits of my remarks, I feel sure they are going to peruse the Congressional Record and benefit thereby.

Mr. President, with only 20 pieces of legislation pending before the Senate, I say that this bill might be discussed for a considerable additional length of time—long enough, I hope, that the majority leader in his wisdom will lay it aside so that we can get back to the one-track system.

Mr. President, I like the two-track system. It allows those of us who want to [illegible] to do so without impeding any business in the Senate or delaying the enactment of any bill that [illegible] to become law.

It is to be hoped that the people of the country will become alerted to dangers of this bill. It is to be hoped that they would not like to see provisions of the EEOC bill made applicable to any person who ploys as many as eight. It is to be hoped that they would not like to the provisions of the act made applicable to every one of the 8,000,- employees of States, counties, and cities, and agencies of those local vernments.

It is to be hoped that they would not like to see the EEOC provisions de applicable to every educational institution in the country, every iversity, every college, every private school, every church-sup- rted school. It is to be hoped they would not like to see the pattern- l-practice suits, whose enforcement or prosecution now rests with Justice Department, transferred to the EEOC.

But above all, Mr. President, it is to be hoped that the people of s Nation would not like to see this tremendous power lodged in an ncy that receives complaints, prosecutes complaints, decides com- ints, and then enforces orders that it makes.

Mr. President, here is our opportunity to take a stand against mush- ming or expanding Federal bureaucracy. Here is an opportunity us to stop further encroachment by the Federal Government on local institutions and on the everyday lives of our people. Here is an ortunity for us to prevent a Federal bureau from doubling in size reaching out for more and more power.

t has been my observation, as a citizen and a Member of this body, every Federal agency or bureau that is created seems to have an erent quality or condition that makes it want to enlarge its size, ive greater compensation, obtain more power, and reach out for ater jurisdiction; and I guess Federal bureaucrats are not to be ored too much for that. I guess everyone wants a little bit more portance, and I guess the EEOC would rather have 2,000 employ- than just a thousand. They would rather have jurisdiction over y person who is gainfully employed in this country, rather than a er number. So these things are understandable.

ut, Mr. President, just because this agency or Commission wants to ble its size, wants to reach out for more power, does not mean that United States Senate has to yield to the demand. So, Mr. President, pe that Senators will stand firm against efforts to stop this debate, that Senators will reach the conclusion that this matter should be aside so that the undivided attention of the Senate could be de- d to the 20 other items now appearing on the Senate Calendar, gh I say that is a very small number. We read in the newspapers t several thousand bills being introduced in Congress; but we have only 20 subject to consideration by the Senate on being called

r. President, I was pleased when the majority leader stated that at lock today he was going to set this matter aside temporarily in r that we could take up the legislation to end the west coast dock e. I have a number of other matters that I would like to call to ttention of the Senate, but I see other Senators on the floor who o doubt anxious to speak on this bill, and it is the intention of the r Senator from Alabama, in a moment, to suggest the absence of orum in order that another Senator might be able to speak.

So, Mr. President, with the assurance of the junior Senator from Alabama that he will return to the Senate floor to add to his remarks with respect to this measure, at this time I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Stevenson). The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the pending business.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2515) to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to amendment No. 813 of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, on my amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read the amendment.

(A copy of 813, an amendment to S. 2515, may be found on p. 879.)

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think the amendments that have been offered speak for themselves. The bill would reduce the coverage of employers to those with eight employees and of unions to those with eight members. This would advance it to 15.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, would the Senator from New Jersey yield me 1 minute?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, this amendment is obviously our effort to meet deeply held views of Senators who are for this legislation who have concern about individual details. So, in order to endeavor to meet their views and after consultation with a considerable number of nators and others interested in the legislation, the Senator from New rsey (Mr. Williams) and I concluded that the way to contribute to ying to get a law instead of a debate is to make this demonstration of iat the committee has done. We have done it. We hope very much at the Secretary will approve of it.

Mr. Ervin. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will reject the substitute r the Allen-Ervin amendment and support the Allen-Ervin amend-ent.

If we reduce the coverage of the number of employees essential to erage below 25, we are going to interfere with the success of virtually ery small businessman in the United States, because when we get ow the coverage of 25, we run into the situation where most of the ployment is done on the basis of friends of the employers. The busi-ssman wants members of his own church. He wants members of his n race. He wants people of the same national origin.

We are fast becoming the most law-ridden nation on earth. When we uce the number below 25, we are taking away some of the most rished liberties of Americans.

There are the most intimate relations between the small businessmen l various of his employees. We are entitled to let the man invest capital, his skills, and his talents in a business instead of having Government tell him whom he shall hire, whom he shall promote, whom he shall discharge in order to make his business a success. have been informed that the most discriminatory organization in erica is the EEOC. They employ people of the minority races, the st powerful of the minority races. They will not employ people of majority race or of the other minority races.

f we want to put an end to the worst discrimination in America, let go into the offices of the EEOC and look and see how they practice rimination.

et us leave some freedom for the American people. Let us let the ple put their talents and their resources in small business and de-mine for themselves whom they shall hire to make their business a ess instead of a failure.

say that if we reduce the coverage below 25, the result is going to ne of two things. Either we are not going to have enforcement of law because of the inadequacy of employees on the part of this dis-inatory agency or they will have to increase their employees to an extent that we will have a multitude of people going abroad his land like oak locusts to eat up the sustenance of our people.

therefore, ask that the Senate reject the substitute and then pro-to agree to the amendment which would leave the coverage where w is, at 25.

r. Williams. I yield back the remainder of my time.

r. Ervin. I yield back the remainder of my time.

he Presiding Officer. All time is yielded back.

r. Ervin. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

he Presiding Officer. The clerk will call the roll.

he assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the Williams' amendment to the Ervin amendment (No. 813). The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Anderson), the Senator from Indiana (Mr. Hartke), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Jackson), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Kennedy), the Senator from Washington (Mr. Magnuson), the Senator from Montana (Mr. Metcalf), the Senator from Maine (Mr. Muskie), and the Senator from California (Mr. Tunney) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGee), and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Cannon) are absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Humphrey), and the Senators from Washington (Mr. Jackson and Mr. Magnuson) would each vote "yea."

Mr. SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Allott), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Bellmon), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. Griffin), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Saxbe), and the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Stevens) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Texas (Mr. Tower) is absent on official business.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Mundt) is absent because of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from Texas (Mr. Tower) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays, 26, as follows:

So Mr. Ervin's amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

ir. Hruska. Mr. President, one of the more glaring defects of S. is that it permits a multiplicity of actions to be instituted against pondent before a number of separate and distinct forums for the alleged offense. A little later in my remarks I shall give a specific nple of the unfairness and the burdens and harassment involved is regard.
addition to the unfairness, burden, and expense visited upon a ndent, there is the factor that such a multiplicity will have the table and unfortunate effect of tending to inhibit respondent entering into any voluntary settlement or conciliation agree-. This is so because any such voluntary agreement or conciliation not eliminate the potential liability in actions brought in any of ther available forums.
correct the defect described, the amendment which I have intro-d on this subject would provide that with certain named excep-, a charge filed with the Commission shall be the exclusive remedy ny person claiming to be aggrieved by an unlawful employment ice.
e amendment would have the tendency also to remove the possi- that an individual can utilize the potential for litigating two ore of the multiple actions as to a single alleged offense now avail-under the bill as written, but based upon nonmeritorious claims, a view of "blackmailing" the respondent into settlements.

MULTIPLICITY OF SEPARATE ACTIONS INVOLVING THE SAME ALLEGED OFFENSE

. President, the best way to illustrate the severe inequity perpetu-by S. 2515 in this regard is to provide a typical example of a incident of alleged employment discrimination which could re-n the virtual bankruptcy of a small employer or labor organiza-required to defend itself before a multiplicity of forums.
sume a situation where, for example, a black female employee is d a pay raise and/or a promotion to a better position which she es has resulted from her employer's bias against blacks and/or es. Let us also suppose that her job is covered by a collective bar-ng agreement. After going to her union and presenting her evi-, the union files a grievance on her behalf, but after investigating her claim, the union refuses to insist on arbitration under the uni contract because of its belief that the company's action was justifi and not based upon unlawful considerations. Under S. 2515 as pre ently written, the employee could institute the following proceeding against the employer and her union:

First, she could file a charge against her employer and union wi the State fair employment practices agency where her employer a union do business. Since most of these agencies possess subpoena pow ers, the respondent's books and records will probably be subpoena and they will be called upon to produce evidence concerning the e ployment actions taken with respect to the allegations of her charge. I the meantime, she could also file an identical charge with the Co mission which, under S. 2515, would only be required to withho investigation of her charge for a period of 60 days from the date t charge was filed with the State agency. Once this 60-day perio elapsed, the Commission would be authorized to commence its ow investigation and, like the State agency, could also demand the pr duction of records and evidence from the company and union to d termine whether or not the charge had merit. Moreover, even if t State subsequently dismissed the charge or even settled it, this wou not preclude the Commission from accepting the State's findings conclusions; but the Commission could, instead, issue its own co plaint against either or both of the respondents.

Second. In the event the Commission dismisses her charge, she cou still institute a suit under Title VII alleging that her rights under Ti VII had been violated. She could do the same thing in the event th the Commission failed to issue its own complaint within 180 da after filing her charge with the Commission. She could also institu suit even if the respondent has entered into a settlement agreeme which is acceptable to the Commission since, under the provisions S. 2515, the aggrieved party can veto any such settlement by simp refusing to become a signator to it.

Third. While at the same time pursuing her charge before the Sta commission and the Federal Commission and/or Federal court und Title VII, she could additionally file a charge with the National Lab Relations Board. Under recent Board and court rulings, the Boa would not only have jurisdiction to investigate a claim based upon t union's refusal to demand arbitration (Miranda Fuel Co., 1962, LRRM 1585) but would also have jurisdiction to determine wheth the employer violated the Taft-Hartley Act by adhering to a "poli and practice of invidious discrimination on account of race."

In the event the Board found merit to her charge, it would also iss a complaint and would not be precluded from doing so merely beca an identical complaint was outstanding before the Commissio whether State or Federal—or before a Federal court in a Title V action.

Fourth. The employee could, in addition, and while the foregoi proceedings were pending, file a complaint in Federal or State co under section 301 of the National Labor Relations Act based upon union's alleged breach of its duty of fair representation in the h dling of her grievance and upon the employer's alleged contract in denying her a promotion (Vaca v. Sipes, U.S. Sup. Ct., 196 LRRM 2369).

ifth. In addition to concurrently pursuing each of the foregoing edies, the employee could completely bypass both the EEOC and NLRB and file a complaint in Federal court under the provisions he Civil Rights Act of 1866 against both the employer and union.
ddition, she could also file a complaint with the Labor Department nst her employer in the event she believed she was receiving less than that being received by male employees performing compae work.

xth. Concurrently with the foregoing, the Attorney General could be pursuing "a pattern and practice" investigation against the emer and union either on its own initiative or as a result of a referral the Commission. At the same time, in the event the employer party to a Government contract exceeding $50,000, the OFCC l be conducting its own investigation on its own initiative or, as a t of a complaint by the employee, to determine whether the emer or union's action violated their commitments under the approe executive order.

is Senator questions the fairness of permitting liability to be im-l upon a respondent in a multitude of different proceedings. The hat under S. 2515 an individual is permitted to institute a multi-y of suits will inevitably inhibit respondents from entering into voluntary settlements, because any settlement effectuated before orum will not eliminate the potential liability in actions brought e any of the other available forums.

is to correct the foregoing defect in S. 2515 that my amendment to is directed. It provides that, with the exception of actions filed by the Attorney General pursuant to the authority granted tion 707; second, arising out of the provisions of the Equal Pay f 1963; or third, brought before State agencies, a charge filed with ommission shall be the exclusive remedy of any person claiming to grieved by an unlawful employment practice.

is amendment will thereby prevent an individual from subjecting ondent to the time-consuming and financial burdens incident to ding against a number of separate actions before a number of ate and distinct forums. The amendment also removes the possi-that an individual can utilize the potential for litigating inherent 2515 as a means to blackmail respondents into monetary settles based upon nonmeritorious claims.

opy of the amendment accomplishing this salutory objective is ed hereto, and I ask unanimous consent that its text be printed

AMENDMENT

Intended to be proposed by Mr. WILLIAMS (for himself and Mr. JAVITS) to S. 2515, a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for American workers, viz: On page 38, line 7, strike out through line 18 on page 47 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(f) (1) In the case of a respondent not a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, if the Commission determines after attempting to secure voluntary compliance under subsection (b) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission, which determination shall not be reviewable in any court, the Commission shall so notify the General Counsel. The General Counsel may initiate a formal hearing before the Commission by issuing and serving upon the respondent a complaint stating the facts upon which the allegation of the unlawful employment practice is based.

The General Counsel, if he issues a complaint, shall also file the complaint with the United States district court for the district in which the unlawful employment practice in question is alleged to have occurred or in which the respondent resides or transacts business. Except as hereinafter provided, all further pleadings shall be filed with the Commission.

The district court shall have jurisdiction during the Commission proceedings upon motion of any party to the Commission's proceedings to review, at its discretion, any action of the Commission which involves a controlling question of law, if it finds that such review would materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation.

After the Commission has filed its findings and recommendations with the court as provided in subsection 706(h), the court shall have jurisdiction to order the elimination of unlawful employment practices and to require such affirmative action, including reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice), as will effectuate the policies of this title, except that (1) backpay liability shall not exceed that which accrues from a date more than two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commission and (2) interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the aggrieved person or persons shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable. Such action may further require the respondent to make reports from time to time showing the extent to which it has complied with the court's order.

(2) In the case of a respondent which is a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, if the Commission determines after attempting to secure voluntary compliance under subsection (b) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission, which determination shall not be reviewable in any court, the Commission shall take no further action and shall refer the case to the Attorney General who may bring a civil action against such respondent in the appropriate United States district court. The person or persons aggrieved shall have the right to intervene in such civil action. The provisions of section 706 (q) through (w), as applicable, shall govern civil actions brought hereunder. Related proceedings may be consolidated for hearing. Any officer or employee of the Commission who filed a charge in any case shall not participate in a hearing on any complaint arising out of such charge, except as a witness.

(g) The Commission, upon receipt of the General

Counsel's complaint, shall issue to all parties a notice of a hearing before it or a member or agent thereof appointed in accordance with section 556 of title 5, United States Code, relating to hearing examiners, at a place therein fixed not less than five days after service of the complaint upon the respondent.

A respondent shall have the right to file an answer to the complaint against him with the Commission and, with the leave of the Commission, which shall be granted whenever it is reasonable and fair to do so, may amend his answer at any time. Respondents and the person or persons aggrieved shall be parties and may appear at any stage of the proceedings, with or without counsel. The Commission may grant other persons a right to intervene or to file briefs or make oral arguments as amicus curiae or for other purposes, as it considers appropriate. All testimony shall be taken under oath and shall be reduced to writing. Any such proceeding shall be conducted in conformity with the rules of evidence applicable in the district court of the United States under the Rules of Civil Procedure for the district courts of the United States, and under rules of procedure that conform insofar as possible with the Federal Rules of Court Procedure for the district courts of the United States. Any officer or employee of the Commission who filed a charge in any case shall not participate in a hearing on any complaint arising out of such charge, except as a witness.

(h) If the Commission finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall file its findings of fact and recommendations concerning appropriate relief with the United States district court having jurisdiction of the case. If the Commission finds that the respondent has not engaged in any unlawful employment practice, the Commission shall file its findings of fact with the clerk of the court and shall dismiss the complaint. Copies of such findings and recommendations shall be served by the Commission upon the parties.

(i) After a charge has been filed and until the record has been filed in court as hereinafter provided, the proceeding may at any time be ended by agreement between the Commission or, after the filing of a complaint, the General Counsel upon approval of the Commission and the respondent for the elimination of the alleged unlawful employment practice and the Commission may at any time, upon reasonable notice, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or recommendation by it. An agreement approved by the Commission shall be enforceable under subsections (l)

through (n) and the provisions of those subsections shall be applicable to the extent appropriate to a proceeding to enforce an agreement.

(j) Findings of fact and recommendations concerning appropriate relief made under subsection (h) or (i) of this section shall be determined by a preponderance of the evidence on the record as a whole. Sections 554, 555, 556, and 557 of title 5 of the United States Code shall apply to such proceedings.

(k) (1) Any party aggrieved by a recommendation of the Commission or by the dismissal of a complaint by the Commission may file in the United States district court having jurisdiction of the case sixty days after the receipt of such findings and recommendations a written motion proposing new findings and recommendations or seeking such other relief as may be appropriate under this title. A copy of such motion shall be forthwith transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Commission and to any other party to the proceeding before the Commission, and thereupon the General Counsel shall file in the court the record in the proceeding in the same manner as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. The court shall have power to grant to the moving party or any other party, including the Commission, such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper; and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such record a decree granting or denying, in whole or in part, appropriate relief. Any party to the proceeding before the Commission shall be permitted to intervene in the court.

(2) No objection that has not been urged before the Commission, its member, or agent shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Commission with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, its member, or its agent, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission, its member, or its agent, and to be made a part of the record. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact, if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole, shall be conclusive. On the basis of such modified or new findings the Commission may modify its recommendations concerning appropriate relief. Upon the filing of the record with it, the jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review in the court of appeals as provided in section 1291 of title 28, United States Code. Motion filed under this subsection shall be heard expeditiously.

(l) The General Counsel, upon the recommendation of the Commission, may move in the United States district court having jurisdiction of the case for the immediate consideration of, and the entry of a decree to carry out, the Commission's recommendations concerning appropriate relief, and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, by filing in such court a written motion seeking the appropriate relief. The General Counsel shall file in court with his motion the record in the proceeding in the same manner as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Subsection (k) of this section shall apply to proceedings upon motions made by the General Counsel under this subsection.

(m) If no motion for review, as provided in subsection (k) is filed within sixty days after service of the Commission's recommendations, the Commission's findings of fact and recommendation concerning appropriate relief shall be conclusive in connection with any motion for enforcement which is filed by the General Counsel under subsection (l). The district court in which such motion for an enforcement order is filed shall forthwith enter a decree enforcing the recommendations of the Commission and shall transmit a copy of such decree to the Commission, the respondent named in the petition, and to any other parties to the proceeding before the Commission.

(n) If within ninety days after service of the Commission's recommendations, no motion for review has been filed as provided in subsection (k), and the General Counsel has not sought an enforcement of the Commission's recommendations as provided in subsection (l), any person entitled to relief under the Commission's recommendations may move for a decree enforcing the recommendations in the United States district court having jurisdiction of the case. The provisions of subsection (m) shall apply to such motion for enforcement.

(o) The Attorney General shall conduct all litigation to which the Commission is a party in the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to this title. All other litigation affecting the Commission, or to which it is a party, shall be conducted by attorneys appointed by the Commission.

(p) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to preserve the power of the Commission to grant effective relief in the proceeding, the General Counsel, upon the recommendation of the Commision shall, after he issues a complaint, bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending its final disposition of such charge, or until the filing of a petition under subsection (k), (l), (m), or (n) of this section, as the case may be, in the United States district court in which he filed the complaint pursuant to subsection (f). Upon the bringing of any such action, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such injunctive relief or temporary restraining order as it deems just and proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law. Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, except paragraph (a) (2) thereof, shall govern proceedings under this subsection.

Senate Liberals Yield In Dispute Over Job Rights

(By David E. Rosenbaum)

Washington, February 8.—Unable to break a Southern filibuster, liberal Senators gave up today on their fight to give the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission the power to order employers and unions to stop discrimination in jobs.

Senators Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, and Harrison A. Williams Jr., Democrat of New Jersey, offered a compromise proposal today, along the lines favored by President Nixon, in an effort to obtain action on legislation that has been before the Senate since it convened Jan. 18.

Rather than authorize the Commission to issue "cease and desist" orders against companies and unions that it found to be discriminating, the Javits-Williams proposal would merely allow the Commission to go into Federal court to prove discrimination and ask the court to prohibit it.

COULD CERTIFY DISCRIMINATION

The Nixon Administration has recommended all along that the Commission be given the authority to institute court suits, and the House approved a measure to this effect last year.

The Javits-Williams plan would give the Commission's findings additional weight in court proceedings, however, by empowering the Commission to hold hearings on cases of alleged job discrimination and to present certification of discrimination to the court, much as a bankruptcy referee presents his findings to a court.

According to Senator Javits, the courts could be expected to uphold the Commission's findings most of the time under this procedure, since most of the evidence would already have been heard by the time cases reached a judge.

DOMINICK IS OPPOSED

Senator Peter H. Dominick, Republican of Colorado, who has been the principal spokesman for the Administration in the battle over giving enforcement power to the Commission, said that he would oppose the Javits-Williams plan.

Senator Dominick, whose amendment to allow the Commission to go into Federal court instead of issuing cease-and-desist orders was rejected two weeks ago by 2 votes, plans to offer his amendment again as a substitute for the Javits-Williams proposal.

A vote on these measures is unlikely to come before next week.

The Commission was created by the Civil Rights Act of 1964. It was empowered to hold hearings and to try to obtain voluntary conciliation from employers who discriminate but was given no means to enforce its findings.

Senator Javits acknowledged that he was "giving away a lot" by his compromise but said that there was no other way to get any bill past the Southern filibuster.

He said he believed that with his proposal he could obtain the necessary two-thirds majority vote needed to cut off the debate. Two attempts to halt the filibuster have failed.

In another concession to the Southerners, the Senate agreed, 56 to 26, today to a compromise on the size of companies and unions that fall under the commission's jurisdiction.

At present, a company must have at least 25 employees and a union of at least 25 members before the commission has jurisdiction. The pending legislation would have lowered the ceilings to eight. The Senate agreed to lower it to 15 next year.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, the article states that Senate liberals yielded in the dispute over job rights, indicating that the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) and the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) plan to offer an amendment which they state is yielding in the matter of cease and desist.

On yesterday, the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) did state that they were going to get rid of the expression "cease and desist."

ell, Mr. President, just as a rose by any other name would smell eet, so "cease and desist" by any other name would be just as bad.
submit that the amendment to be offered by the distinguished tor from New York (Mr. Javits) and the distinguished Senator New Jersey (Mr. Williams) will still have cease and desist in the f their amendment is adopted, even though the words might be ng. It would permit the Commission, as provided in the bill and committee amendment, to receive the complaints, file the charges, the determination, and then they would certify to the district the fact of discrimination and all the district court would do l be to serve as a cat's paw or a rubber stamp for the action of the nission.

us, Mr. President, this is certainly no compromise and I would o serve notice now that it will not solve the question of whether ill should be allowed to come to a vote. It will not remove the ions of those of us who object to this Commission's being judge, nd prosecutor, as that element will still be in the bill.

President, I call on all Senators who have been voting to allow ebate to continue, not to be taken in by this strategy by which roponents of this measure say that they are yielding on this oint.

re is no yielding. We all know that this is an old game and an ractice by which proponents of a measure which is in sharp e will indicate they have made a great concession in order to ome of the opposition, or to lessen some of the opposition to the hereby allowing the guard of those Senators opposing a bill to ered.

edict that, if this amendment is adopted and the bill, as amended, sed, those saying they are making a great concession in order to is bill passed will make great claim and will take great self-ction from having passed the bill without any material change.

s, Mr. President, I hope that those who have been opposing the f cease and desist will see in the Javits-Williams proposed com-se the pernicious cease-and-desist provisions still there in actu-f not in actual words.

President, I serve notice that this amendment is not satisfactory.
not end the debate. I hope that other Senators will not lower uard and allow the amendment, which, I understand, is to be ted to the Senate on Monday next by the distinguished Senator New York (Mr. Javits) and the distinguished Senator from New (Mr. Williams), to be agreed to.

ill not remove opposition to the bill.

ill not remove cease and desist from the bill.

President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

HRUSKA. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes.

PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized minutes.

HRUSKA. The pending amendment has for its purpose the elim-of the possibility of a multiplicity of actions when an employee els that he or she is aggrieved commences proceedings.

of the more glaring defects of S. 2515 is that it would permit a licity of actions to be instituted against a respondent before a r of separate and distinct forums for the same alleged offense.

The present situation is quite a hodge-podge. As a matter of fact, is not to the interests of the employee, nor of the employer, nor of t public that this persist as a condition. It is a disservice to the employ because of the lack of expeditiousness which should be a very i portant element in any provision for dealing with a complaint on basis of discrimination or unfairness in employment practices. It is disservice to the employer not only on the question of expeditiousn but also because of the burdens forced on a respondent who is ca upon to defend the same case in numerous forums. And it is a d service to the public which should be entitled to quick, clear, and c tain resolutions of these questions.

Because of the number of remedies now available and those provid by this bill, there would be imposed unfairness, a great burden, a expense upon a respondent because simultaneously he could have—a there have been such instances—three or four proceedings before many different forums pending at the same time. Each of them has power of subpena. Each of them has the power to gather informat from the employer's records and to ask for abstracts of different inf mation, causing a heavy demand on his manpower, on his time, and his resources. The result is often a disruption within his own busine in addition to the attorney's fees and costs involved.

This whole situation reflects badly upon the effort to induce a r spondent to enter into a conciliation proceeding with a view of rea ing an agreement either with the State agency or with the EEOC with the employee himself or herself. Because of this situation we f that the benefits of the procedures that are provided are dissipated a large degree.

Now, to correct these defects, the amendment at hand would prov that with certain named exceptions a charge filed with the Commiss shall be an exclusive remedy for any person claiming to be aggrie by a particular unlawful practice.

The amendment would remove from the scene the possibility t an individual employee can utilize the possibility of litigating two more of the multiple actions as to a single offense, as it is now ava able, whether they are based on a meritorious or a nonmeritori factual situation. Without such a provision there could conceivably a presenting of several actions with the effect of blackmail on one perhaps on all of them on the basis of nuisance value. That is no good arrangement in a matter of this kind.

Mr. President, I should like to outline what can be done under present situation in a particular case, because by doing so we can the necessity for eliminating multiplicity to which reference has be made.

Suppose in the event of a black female employee, there is a denial either a promotion or pay raise and there is an allegation made that is because of her color or because of her sex. The first thing she can is to complain to the union that it is a violation of the collective b gaining agreement. The union will file or can file a grievance in h behalf. If the union decides that it is not meritorious, it is disallow

Then, of course, the employee may file charges against the union employer with the State fair employment practice agency that pro ably has the power of subpena and can call for records, correspond papers, and so forth.

ientical charges can simultaneously be filed with the EEOC, and 'ommission holds the complaint in abeyance for 60 days following iling of the complaint with the State agency. However, with the ration of the 60 days, the EEOC can move in with a similar del for records and documents.

ren after the State agency dismisses the complaints, the EEOC nove in and file a complaint against either or both respondents—is, the union or the employer, or both. If the EEOC dismisses the plaint, or if it takes no action within 6 months, then the respondent file suit under Title VII.

ıd even if the respondent and the employer have entered into an ement with the EEOC, she can still file suit. That is because of the ision in the pending bill that the employee is not bound by such ments unless he or she actually signs the conciliation agreement.
we would have two avenues down which the parties are traveling,
lel in character, with no terminal facility.

er that would happen and while these charges are pending before ate commission and the Federal Commission, the employee could onally file a charge with the National Labor Relations Board. ler recent Board and court rulings, the Board would not only jurisdiction to investigate a claim based on a union's refusal to ıd arbitration, but it would also have jurisdiction to determine er the employer violated the Taft-Hartley Act by adhering to ıey and practice of invidious discrimination on account of race." he event the Board found merit to her charge, it would also issue plaint and would not be precluded from doing so merely because ıtical complaint was outstanding before the Commission—er State or Federal—or before a Federal court in a Title VII we would have a third parallel road that would be traveled by arties involved, possibly at the same time.

n, the employee could in addition to and while the foregoing dings were pending, file a complaint in Federal or State court section 301 of the National Labor Relations Act based upon ion's alleged breach of its duty of fair representation in the han-of her grievance and upon the employer's alleged contract in denying her a promotion or employment, or whatever the ıappened to be.

ddition to concurrently pursuing each of these foregoing reme-ıe employee could completely bypass both the EEOC and the and file a complaint in Federal court under the provisions of il Rights Act of 1866 against both the employer and the union.
lition, she could file a complaint with the Labor Department her employers in the event she believed she was receiving less an was being received by male employees performing like or able work. Of course, that would be under the Equal Pay Act 3.

urrently with all of the foregoing, Mr. President, the Attor-neral could also be pursuing a "pattern and practice" investiagainst the employer and union, either on its own initiative ıe result of a referral from the Commission. And, at the same the event the employer is a party to a Government contract ng $50,000, the Office of Federal Contract Compliance could be conducting its own investigation on its own initiative, or as a r sult of a complaint by the employee, to determine whether the e ployer's or union's action violated their commitments under the appr priate executive order.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Hughes). The time of the Senat has expired.

Mr. Allen. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Nebraska additional minutes.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from Nebraska is recogniz for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Hruska. Mr. President, when one considers this vast sco this vast spectrum, of all the proceedings, the collateral proceedi and the independent proceedings in half a dozen forums that co be conducted simultaneously on the same alleged offense, then, course, one's sense of fairness is challenged. It simply is not fair. It not fair to the employee who is entitled to an expeditious handling.
is not fair to the employer who is entitled to a place where he c litigate a claim and have it over with, rather than waiting for days, and then another 60 days, and the 60 days becoming 6 month

Mr. President, it is to correct these foregoing defects and to boil it down to sensible and adequate proceedings that we would have t amendment.

The amendment would simply say that the multiplicity of s would be dealt with in the following fashion: When a proceedi would be filed under section 706 of Title VII, then that remedy wo be exclusive. The employee, he or she, could not go to any of the ot and additional channels to which reference has been made and co mence proceedings there simultaneously. There would be certain exc tions to this procedure, certainly as to section 707 of the Civil Rig Act, the so-called pattern and practice suits instituted by the A torney General, inasmuch as they partake of the nature of a cl action. That class action could proceed notwithstanding the pende of an employee's individual suit in a proceeding under section 7

A second exception would be the Equal Pay Act of 1963. That sho be allowed to go along on its own and within the purview of that act 1963 to assure that an employee would not be discriminated aga on the basis of receiving less pay than is being received by a m member of the organization for the same or equal quality of wo

Then, there would be a further exception and that would be p ceedings in a State agency. Those proceedings could continue n withstanding the pendency of an employee's action under section 7 of Title VII. It seems to me and others that this is only fair.

This is not something that is discriminatory against the emplo but it bars the employee from exploiting a situation which all for the type of multiplicity of actions, and confusing and cha conditions that prevail when a large number of forums are availa and affirms that many of them are used simultaneously all for improper except to visit harassment, harshness, and unnecessary pense on all concerned.

Therefore, I hope that this body will consider the equities and circumstances and agree to the amendment so that we may do a with this situation in its burdensome and unfair aspects.

. President, the amendment which has been proposed by the or from Nebraska involves an issue in which the Department of 'e stands directly opposed to the position taken by the Senator. I l like to refer, in that regard, to a hearing before the Committee ibor and Public Welfare held October 4, 1971, in which we had stimony of David Norman, an Assistant Attorney General, stat-ıe Department's position.

'fer the Senate precisely to pages 162 and 163 of the hearings l, where Mr. Norman deals with the issue which has been brought the Senator from Nebraska, with an exception or two which I indicate, which do not interfere with the argument I shall make. amendment which the Senator from Nebraska seeks to insert his measure is a sentence included in the bill as passed by the body in a somewhat more restricted form; that is, as to the single-f the remedy which is available to a complainant. The restriction ms of its form was as follows: In the House bill, there is no ex-n made for individual suits if the Commission decided not to self, and there is no exception made for the so-called Equal Pay elating to equal pay as between men and women. These excep-are contained in the amendment before us, but they do not affect gument made against the substance of the amendment by the tment of Justice, and referring to the House bill that I have escribed, this is what the Department's representative, Mr. Nor-said with reference to the House bill provision that I have just bed beginning at page 162 of the hearings:

on 3(b) of H.R. 1746 provides that charges filed with the EEOC and law-ought, either by EEOC or by private individuals pursuant to Title VII e the exclusive remedy of any person claiming to be aggrieved by an un-employment practice of an employer, employment agency, or labor orga-n." This could be interpreted as eliminating the use of provisions of federal er than Title VII in the attack on employment discrimination.

ıld be happy to work with the Committee staff in clarifying the language instances.

n, although we favor the granting of judicial enforcement authority to we are concerned that at this point in time there be no elimination of the remedies which have achieved some success in the effort to end em-t discrimination. In the field of civil rights, the Congress has regularly that there be a variety of enforcement devices to insure that all available s are brought to bear on problems of discrimination. For example, hous-rimination may be the subject of suit by the Attorney General, a private the party affected, or a conciliation effort by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Again, in the field of education, remedies for ... crimination are available to private persons, the Attorney General and the ... partment of Health, Education, and Welfare.

At this juncture, when we are all agreed that some improvement in the ... forcement of Title VII is needed, it would be, in our judgment, unwise to dimi... in any way the variety of enforcement means available to deal with discrimina... in employment. The problem is widespread and we suggest that all avail... resources should be used in the effort to correct it.

That is the entire quotation, Mr. President, showing the opposit... of the Department of Justice to this type of provision. It is in t... House bill, as I say, in an even more restricted form.

With the attitude of the Senate toward this legislation, we opp... including it in the Senate bill.

What is allowed by the present legal situation? For one, Mr. Pr... dent, it permits a range of actions under the National Labor Relati... Act and the Railway Labor Act and before the National Labor Re... tions Board where an unfair practice can be charged by a wor... against discrimination in a union or even by an applicant to joi... union. We consider this opportunity to test out these questions in t... forum as an extremely important one, and obviously the Attor... General does as well.

It would permit, for example, the decertification of a union for e... gaging in discrimination which is contrary to the provisions of Ti... VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

One other aspect of the matter which is cut off is the possibility ... using civil rights acts long antedating the Civil Rights Act of 196... a given situation which might fall, because of the statute of lim... tions or other provisions, in the interstices of the Civil Rights Act ... 1964. This is rather infrequent, but it is a valuable protection. T... Attorney General feels that it is desirable to maintain it, and we ag... with him. The idea is to enforce the law and not let people drop ... tween two stools where they are actually violating the law.

Therefore, we believe that this enforcement should not be hobb... in this way. It is bad enough that we have such very long backl... and that it takes long enough to get a case considered. We should ... cut off the range of remedies which are available.

The only argument that is used—and I now read from Sena... Hruska's memorandum which has been distributed to all Senators ... this:

> The purpose of the amendment is to avoid the potential situation where ... respondent is faced with the requirement to defend multiple actions arising ... a single offense. Such multiplicity of suits could result in undue burdens ... gathering of evidence and trial expenses as well as harassment and even ... of blackmail.

Mr. President, drawing on our experience with the longest enfor... ment of civil rights, which is our experience in the State of N... York, which goes back to 1945, we may have many other complai... but under these statutes we certainly have had no complaint ... harassment which business feared 26 years ago but, in its expe... since that time, is not valid.

Furthermore, there is the real capability in this situation of dea... with the question on the basis of res judicata. In other words, ... there is a litigation—a litigation started by the Commission, a liti...

started by the Attorney General, or a litigation started by the idual the remedy has been chosen and can be followed through no relitigation of the same issues in a different forum would be balance, in view of the fact that the mover of this amendment up for us the possibility that there could be abuse, let us rememhat this matter has been standing for the past 7 years; and I am ware of a case—perhaps the Senator from Nebraska can point ases to us—in which there has been claim of abuse. I am not e that this is a major problem.

all we would be doing, balancing what is sought to be avoided what would be cut off, would be very limited in a way which ttorney General of the United States opposes for the remedies are available in unjust discrimination cases.

all those reasons, so far as I am concerned—and I believe it is titude of Senator Williams also—we are compelled to oppose mendment.

PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

HRUSKA. I yield myself 3 minutes.

President, the testimony of David Norman on behalf of the tment of Justice, to which reference has been made, is directed y unyielding language in the House bill which is not at issue pending amendment. Three aspects are spelled out in the pendmendment which were not in the language considered by Mr.
an, in that part of his testimony which was just read by the or from New York.

re is an exclusion in that pending amendment as to pattern and e suits. There is an exception as to the Equal Pay Act of 1963. is an exception for proceedings before State agencies. Any dings before State agencies could proceed, and this exclusion not affect those three classes.

hat Mr. Norman was testifying on something totally different.
l say in his testimony, on page 162:

ill be happy to work with the committee staff in clarifying the language instances.

had some doubts in his mind as to how far the availability of ctions would go.

fact is that the amendment would not cut off class suits, be-he amendment is directed to an individual. The language of the amendment is that except as provided elsewhere, a charge reunder shall be the exclusive remedy of any person claiming ggrieved by an unlawful employment practice of an employer, ment agency, or labor organization. Mr. David Norman was ed with the cutting off of the class action, and he said he would ing to work with the committee to develop language which larify the situation in that regard.

the contention of the Senator that the language of the pending ment does not cut off that class action. It would be a remedy ing to individuals only. Federal action on behalf of citizens not be curtailed. It would not pertain to class actions that ffect a class. That removes it from the inhibitions of the amende are now considering.

I have every sympathy for varied approaches to enforcing o employment rights as against discrimination. But the point of t amendment is, let us get them in one proceeding and not go to many as a half dozen different forums and try simultaneously to c fuse the proceedings and to make them more expensive, in terms money as well as in terms of time and personnel.

Furthermore, it would be much more expeditious to do it this w and that would be something in which every employee would interested.

Mr. President, the Justice Department in Mr. David Norma testimony, was objecting to the possible narrow interpretation t could attach to the House approved language. The amendment t has been proposed by this Senator takes into consideration the obj tions to the wording in H.R. 1746. It is much more narrow than t House provision and provides for certain exceptions not mentioned the House bill.

It is a refinement over H.R. 1746 which takes into account the pr lems found therein. I believe the pending amendment should approved.

The amendment is not designed to eliminate remedies for unfair treated employees, but only to provide that they be litigated in c rather than a multitude of forums.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to cor certain deficiencies in Title VII and strengthen the national po against employment discrimination. It is not our purpose to rep existing civil rights laws.

e amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Neka would make Title VII and the Equal Pay Act the only Federal dy available in cases of employment discrimination. It would ely weaken our overall effort to combat the presence of employ-discrimination.

e existence of extensive employment discrimination is a well-lished fact. Testimony before our committee has shown the pere nature of this problem. The burgeoning workload at the EEOC ell as the increasing number of employment discrimination cases ir Federal courts, further reinforces the fact that employment imination is far from eliminated. There exists, therefore, an e need for a concentrated effort to eliminate the presence of this nal blight.

r present effort to strengthen the EEOC through S. 2515 is a r step toward this goal. However, our goal cannot be achieved pealing other laws already on the statute books.

originally passed in 1964, Title VII provided an administrative dure before implementing the individual's right to sue directly irt under the constitutional guarantees against discrimination.
15 corrects many of the shortcomings of that original 1964 act, is an improvement which is premised on the continued existence itality of other remedies for employment discrimination.

strengthening the administrative remedy, Mr. President, we l not also eliminate preexisting rights which the Constitution his body have accorded to aggrieved individuals.

paramount national interest embodied in the elimination of yment discrimination is both an expression of congressional in-nd judicial interpretation. While we have generally denounced yment discrimination, the courts, which have been in a better on to view the devastation which this type of discrimination s upon our social framework, have been even more adamant. eed only read the recent decision by Mr. Chief Justice Burger in s against Duke Power Co., to see the concern that the courts
In describing the scope of the act the Court stated:

Act proscribes not only overt discrimination but also practices that are form but discriminatory in operation.

ordingly, the courts have repeatedly proposed a multifaceted ach to employment discrimination, to bring to bear the full force law on this problem.

law against employment discrimination did not begin with VII and the EEOC, nor is it intended to end with it. The right ividuals to bring suits in Federal courts to redress individual discrimination, including employment discrimination was first ed by the Civil Rights Acts of 1866 and 1871, 42 U.S.C. sections 1983). It was recently stated by the Supreme Court in the case es v. Mayer, that these acts provide fundamental constitutional ntees. In any case, the courts have specifically held that Title VII e Civil Rights Acts of 1866 and 1871 are not mutually exclusive, ust be read together to provide alternative means to redress dual grievances.

President, the amendment of the S[illegible] from Nebraska will the first major piece of civil rights legislation in this Nation's
. We cannot do that.

In addition, the effect of this measure would be to repeal the validity of a longstanding legal doctrine that labor organizations under the Railway Labor Act and under the Labor Management Relations Act have a duty to fairly represent all employees in a collective bargaining unit. Cases to reinforce such a duty may conceivably not be reached in Title VII. The adoption of this amendment, therefore, might have the effect of depriving these workers of a most important legal remedy.

Furthermore, Mr. President, this amendment can be read to bar enforcement of the Government contract compliance program at least in part. I cannot believe that the Senate would do that after all the votes we have taken in the past 2 or 3 years to continue that program in full force and effect.

Mr. President, I believe that to make Title VII the exclusive remedy for employment discrimination would be inconsistent with our entire legislative history of the Civil Rights Act. It would jeopardize the degree and scope of remedies available to the workers of our country.

To lock the aggrieved person into the administrative remedy would narrow rather than strengthen our civil rights enforcement effort. While I do not believe that the individual claimant should be allowed to litigate his claim to completion in one forum, and then if dissatisfied, go to another forum to try again, I do feel that where one form of relief proves unresponsive or impractical, or where the claimant has a particular preference to bring his claim in a forum other than that which is most commonly used for claims of his kind, he should have that right. This is especially true where the legal issues under other laws may not fall within the scope of Title VII or where the employee, employer, or labor organization does not fall within the jurisdictional confines of Title VII. These situations do exist, and I am sure that it is unnecessary to spell them out at this point.

The peculiarly damaging nature of employment discrimination is such that the individual, who is frequently forced to face a large and powerful employer, should be accorded every protection that the law has in its purview, and that the person should not be forced to seek his remedy in only one place.

For all these reasons, Mr. President, I urge the rejection of the amendment.

I point out to Senators the testimony that was presented before the committee on behalf of the Department of Justice. The Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Norman, said this, speaking for the administration:

> In sum, although we favor the granting of judicial enforcement authority to EEOC, we are concerned that at this point in time there be no elimination of any of the remedies which have achieved some success in the effort to end employment discrimination. In the field of civil rights, the Congress has regularly assured that there be a variety of enforcement devices to insure that all available resources are brought to bear on problems of discrimination. For example, housing discrimination may be the subject of suit by the Attorney General, a private suit by the party affected, or a conciliation effort by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Again, in the field of education, remedies for discrimination are available to private persons, the Attorney General and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.
> At this juncture, when we are all agreed that some improvement in the enforcement of Title VII is needed, it would be, in our judgment, unwise to diminish in any way the variety of enforcement means available to deal with discrimination in employment. The problem is widespread and we suggest that all available resources should be used in the effort to correct it.

my judgment. Mr. President, it could not be put more forcefully more precisely.

e are dealing with a problem in this country that needs all avail- resources to wipe from our land the terrible condition in which man being can be and is discriminated against because of nothing he had anything to do with—a discrimination that is based on color, religion, sex, or national origin. All available resources ld be available to that individual. I say it. I am sure a majority say it. I say that all the Members of Congress say it. Our differ- is in how we reach it. One way to reach it is not to strip from that idual his rights that have been established, going back to the Civil Rights Laws of 1866. We say it most forcefully. The admin- ion has said it, through its Department of Justice and its Assist- ttorney General, Mr. Norman.

New Jersey may appear in the Record as the sponsor of the d at the moment to be in a vacuum.

e Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Javits. Mr. President, this amendment has been called up for f us. It represents the present committee position on the bill. In words, will or will not the enforcement be according to the plan ed in this compromise, which is what it is, or will it be some-else. If the compromise is rejected, then we will revert to the ions of the bill, to wit, the cease-and-desist provision.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield

Mr. JAVITS. Not yet. If the compromise is sustained, then there w be a new plan which I described yesterday. If, on the other hand, t Senator from Colorado decides to substitute his plan, according to i printed amendment, and he should prevail, that will be the way t bill will stand.

I believe, Mr. President, that it is time to bring this matter to conclusion. I feel deeply concerned in conscience about quickie vot on a matter as critical as this. It is no one's fault. It is just life a events.

I would hope very much that the Senate will act with responsibili in respect for our leader, whom we all love and respect, the Senat from Montana (Mr. Mansfield), and that we could fix a time th would give Members a moderate notice—it does not have to be long- so that Senators can present their case and vote.

I am sure that the Senator from Colorado will present his propos as a substitute for the proposal we have laid before the Senate a that this issue will be decided with celerity. Then I believe we w have a clear and fair shot as to whether we can have cloture or no whether this Senate is going to be run by a minority or by t majority.

That will have reconciled about all the points of view that can reconciled, among those who are for some bill. With respect to tho against any bill to change the powers of the EEOC, and I respect the and that is their privilege, I do not believe, as the managers of t bill, that the Senator from New Jersey and I can do anything abo that kind of opinion, but to those who want a bill, we are trying step forward, to offer a plan that is feasible and makes sense.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I understand this modification actually gives t court the original authority to issue orders.

Mr. JAVITS. It does. It is an open covenant, openly arrived at. W are up against two problems: First, the difficulty of the Commissi having no power to conclude these cases, and the second is court co gestion. We give up that power of the Commission to issue cease-an desist orders, which is important, but we retain the ability to get ov the matter of court congestion because we give the Commission t ability to hear the case and make its recommendation and findings the court.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I would be happy to yield to the Senator from Al bama, but I yield first to the Senator from North Carolina, if wishes.

Mr. ERVIN. Which amendment did the Senator call up?

Mr. JAVITS. Number 878.

Mr. ERVIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator identified the amendment as a compro amendment. Does the Senator allude to the "compromise" as bein compromise between the distinguished Senator from New York and t distinguished Senator from New Jersey? Who compromised amendment?

r. JAVITS. I think the Senator from New Jersey will speak for self, but I believe we have presented what we consider to be, tly and together, a compromise of the point of view heretofore esented on the floor by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Domi-) in presenting the succession of amendments that he has ented.

r. ALLEN. But both of you are already for the present bill, or the mittee substitute. I wonder where the area of compromise is.

r. JAVITS. I said before I did not believe that this was any com-nise with those against any EEOC bill of any meaning. So with espect, I do not know what the Senator's position finally will be, with all respect, it is my impression that that is the Senator's ion. I know it and I respect it, as I said before.

r. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

r. JAVITS. I yield.

r. PASTORE. Is it correct for the Senator from Rhode Island to his is a compromise stemming from action that has already been n by the Senate? The amendment of the Senator from Colorado rejected, and the compromise is between that and the filibuster we been experiencing. What we are trying to do is to go half way e can break up the filibuster. As the Senator from Montana ght out the other day this filibuster has been going on since this n began.

ant to say at this point that it is not the absence of various Sena-hat has caused the trouble; it is the fact that we have not been o vote. The other day we recessed at 3 o'clock. I do not know whose that was. However, the fact remains we have had a quorum here f we had not had the delays we would have disposed of this ng ago.

ant to compliment the Senator from New York and the Senator New Jersey because on their own initiative, realizing the frustra-that beset us, they have gone half way by moving original juris-n to the court to issue the order. I do not know how far reasonable an go unles it is desired and demanded that the winners declare elves losers and the losers declare themselves winners.

JAVITS. I thank the Senator.

HRUSKA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

JAVITS. I yield.

HRUSKA. I would like to ask the Senator to clarify the term promise." To me it has the connotation of agreement. Is there ment between the views of the Senator from Colorado and the or from New Jersey and the Senator from New York on this ? Or would it be more accurate to say the Senator from Colorado proposal and here is a different proposal? I do not want to quarrel semantics but so far as the choice of words, "compromise" would o connote agreement between sides and perhaps that is not en-applicable.

JAVITS. I might say to my friend that I am a lawyer, too, and een for many years. I have proposed many compromises uni-ly.

HRUSKA. A compromise proposal, but "compromise" has a dif-connotation.

JAVITS. It takes two to be deceived.

HRUSKA. Correct.

Mr. JAVITS. I am sure nobody is deceived by my using the word "compromise" or believing the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) agreed. Yesterday he told the press he did not agree and it was widely published this morning.

I still say that the Senator from New Jersey and I proposed a compromise, which will be a compromise. I think the Senator from Rhode Island described it very accurately. It is what it does.

I shall be pleased to speak to that compromise during the course of this afternoon, beginning now.

If the majority leader wishes me to yield to him, I would like to do so.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would like the floor in my own right, if the Senator will yield to me.

Mr. JAVITS. Of course. I yield the floor.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the vote showed 33 Senators for and 33 Senators against the Hruska amendment, with one pair. I am sure that the Senate knows enough about elementary arithmetic to know the difference between 100 and 67.

It is my understanding that the vote on the pending amendment will not occur until Tuesday next. That is 6 days away; another week wasted. I do not know what the Senate intends to do about facing up to its responsibility. I do not know how often they are going to count who is here and who is not here.

All I want to say is you have a majority of the Senate here today and we are going to be in session all afternoon, whether we like it or not, because we are waiting to see what the House is going to do on the dock strike legislation which passed the Senate yesterday.

I do not intend to get down on my knees to this body because as a Senator from the State of Montana I am just as important as any other Senator in this body, just as important; but as majority leader, you have the joint leadership, including the minority leader, at your feet and at your disposal. We cannot force you if you do not want to face your responsibilities but you are doing a distinct disservice to the Senate and to the people whom you have the honor to represent. May I say as I said yesterday, that no one forced any of the 100 Members of this body to become a Senator. We became Senators because we wanted to; we asked our people to vote for us and they sent us back here to represent them.

Sometimes I wonder just how much of a conscience this body has. Sometimes I wonder how they can delay, how they can postpone, how individual Senators can think of themselves foremost and the Senate secondarily.

We all happen to be lucky that we are elected to the Senate of the United States. There are thousands of people back home in our respective States who are smarter than we are, have more ability than we have, could do a better job than we do, but they have not had the breaks and the circumstances have not flexed to allow them to become Members of this body.

We are given a pretty good salary. We receive a goodly number of fringe benefits. And all we are asked to do is to come in to look after the interests of the people of our States, to expedite legislation, and appropriate debate.

And what do we do? We stall. We find excuses. Somebody is not here or somebody has to be there. We need our troops or we might lose as far as I am concerned, all I am interested in is getting the

which is supposed to be made up of mature people, people who rcise sound and sober judgment, but people who are lacking, opinion, in the attributes which should be the hallmark of this nd which should contribute to the morale and to the welfare of public.

PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

MANSFIELD. I yield

PASTORE. First of all, I do not wish to quarrel with the majority for the simple reason that I agree with everything that he n the second place, I make no apologies for myself, for the simple reason that the senior Senator from Rhode Island has re every day since the time that this session opened, with the on of one afternoon. It was an afternoon when I had to fly le Island to attend the ordination of the new bishop of Provi-nd even then I flew back here immediately without attending ial reception in the Bishop's honor. So I do not need to make ology for absence from this floor. What I want to suggest to ority leader is that his admonition, which is quite strong, in my opinion, should have been made some time ago. For I remember o well that when the Senator from Colorado brought up his ent, he brought it up on a Thursday. Then because he had his troops and he did not have the votes, the word was spread the floor of the Senate that there would be no vote until Mond a concession was made by the leadership to vote on that
. That was the time when the leadership of the Senate should od its ground and said, "You cannot do this. Your amendment ng. Stay here and talk about your amendment until we vote

We are caught in this unfortunate situation because there is a ma of strategy going on on the floor and a lot of maneuvering as to wh amendment is going to come up and at what time in order to defe what the Senate has already achieved.

Naturally, the Senator from New York is very apprehensive th this strategy will emasculate the bill, so he has called up his amen ment and said, "I will talk on this amendment until the Senator fro Colorado brings up his amendment." But the minute he sits down, motion is going to be made to lay his amendment on the table, just s sure as God made little green apples. That is the strategy that we ar faced with.

The question is, Do you want an equal employment opportunities bi or do you want to defeat an equal employment opportunities bill? Th is the question before the Senate and those of us who are interested having a good bill have every right to use every parliamentary proc dure to see that the American people are not cheated out of the e pression of the will of the majority. That is the question that is pen ing here. If they are going to abandon this to the minority maneuv and let it become a tool for parliamentary strategy, the senior Senat from Rhode Island, as long as he has a breath in his body, will n stand for it.

I could agree that it may be about time that a lot of these candidat for the Presidency of the United States should return to the Sena but we have gone through that experience before. One of the great Presidents of the United States was John F. Kennedy, and I rememb that if he had not gone around shaking all the bushes of this countr we might not have had him as President, and the people of th country would have been cheated of the fine leadership he gave us f 3 years. He was absent from the Senate because he felt he was on vital mission for the American peop'e no less than for himself.

The people we are talking about are running for the Presidency the United States, and what is wrong with that? What is wrong wi that? And because they are out on their high mission, because they a doing what they feel they must do in their hearts, minds, and co sciences, they are absent. Maybe they ought to be here, but I do not b the idea that it is abominable that they are not. I think that is pret strong language to apply in the Senate.

Last Monday or Tuesday—I do not remember which day it was—w quit the session at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Three o'clock in the afte noon. Why, with this bill pending? That is our fault, and let us g down to the genesis of the problem.

Another thing, too: We tried cloture twice, and we did not qu make it. We did not quite make it. Do you know why? Because t cloture rule is written for the rule of the minority, and that is th reason why we did not make it. The majority of the Senate voted f cloture, but we will not get cloture.

Now, what did the Senator from New York do? What is this ho rible thing he did?

He brought up, on his own initiative, a unilateral compro knowing full well that unless he compromises he cannot get a vote the bill is dead, and everybody in this body knows it. The bill is d with the provision as it stands now, and I dare say that even if it g to conference, it might be knocked out. So realizing the practi ion, being realistic as they are, the Senator from New York and enator from New Jersey did what?

ey stood up and said, "All right, you have lamented the fact up w that we are giving the agency the power of cease and desist, is a judicial power, and you do not like it." So all right, the ors from New York and New Jersey say we will amend the dment on our own initiative, even though we have won the first l. On our own initiative, we will amend the amendment and give urt that original jurisdiction.

w awful is that man from New York? Do Senators think he is to stand there and let somebody put in a sneak motion to lay table, and crucify the bill this afternoon? Mr. President, he is orth his salt, he is not worth a nickel to the people of New York, permits that. And that is all I have to say.

MANSFIELD. Mr. President, may I say this is the first I have about the possibility of a motion to table, although of course, always in order.

nd, as far as the Senate adjourning at 3 o'clock last Tuesday erned, there was absolutely nothing to do in this body at that nd if we had stayed here, there would have been nothing but votes. That is what confronted the leadership.

uld hope that these factors would be kept in mind, and may I my distinguished friend from Rhode Island, a man for whom I reat affection and whom I admire tremendously, that there are ve Members of the 33 absent today who are running for the nomi- for the Presidency of the United States; so I would say they een unfairly singled out in the overall picture, and I would like ord to be clear in that respect.

w yield to the distinguished senior Senator from Maine.

SMITH. Mr. President, it had been my intention to make a ent in the Senate today on the subject now being discussed, the of absenteeism. But the distinguished majority leader has so illy and so ably expressed my views on this subject that I ask nous consent that my statement be printed in the Record at this nd I advise the Senate that a copy of the statement is on each r's desk, and I would urge each Senator to consider cosponsoring t resolution.

PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR MARGARET CHASE SMITH

resident: The very able, distinguished and dedicated Majority Leader y made a very strong personal appeal on this Floor against absenteeism. ther things he said:

ve almost completed a month of labor, and produced nothing—not even a . . . I would make a personal plea to every member of this body to not eadership to delay on . . . any legislation this year . . . I would hope that e would face up to its responsibilities; that each Senator would act with . so that we can do the job which the people are paying us to do. . . . ngle Member of this body sought this position, and with the position ity, a responsibility, which means not only facing up to the schedule in of conventions and elections, but also facing up to attendance on the the Senate. The record of this body over the past month is, to put it hominable. . . . there will be no sufferance, no exceptions made as far enator is concerned regarding votes or a date certain on legislation. . . . ajority Leader's patience on abominable absenteeism is at an end— ime was when I made my statement two months ago on December 20, 1971 and stated I would introduce a constitutional amendment to curb absente-ism. I am attaching my statement of December 20, 1971 at the conclusion of m remarks.

I introduced that legislation on January 31, 1972. I now reintroduce it with very minor clarifying change and I am pleased to introduce it on behalf of m self and Senators Anderson, Bennett, Cook, Hatfield, Moss, Randolph, Staffor and Thurmond.

Not only is the Majority Leader's patience at an end—but so is the patience the American people for I have received thousands of letters from people throug out the nation—from every state in the union, except Alaska (and Sena Stevens tells me that many Alaskans have voiced their support of my an absenteeism constitutional amendment to him) expressing very solid support my proposal and the hope that their Senators and Representatives will support Their only basic criticism is that the required attendance should be substantial higher than the 60 percent I propose.

In view of this widespread national support to curb absenteeism, I again invi the members of this body to join me in the sponsorship of this proposal.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR MARGARET CHASE SMITH (DECEMBER 20, 1971)

The United States Senate is in trouble. It is because growing numbers of i members no longer regard it as a high institution for dedicated and honora service but rather only as a means to an end.

It has become a mere springboard to those who would use it—even abuse it for their selfish interests, whether such interests be commercializing their po tion and title with the acquisition of high-price lecture fees or running f President.

I have no criticism of presidential aspirations as long as those president aspirations do not result in dereliction of Senate duties in representation state and national constituencies. After all, having been a presidential candida in 1964, who am I to criticize presidential ambitions? Yet, I never missed a Se ate roll call vote while I was running for President.

A greater cause of Senate debilitation comes from the Senate "moonlighter who regard the Senate as strictly secondary to their money-making activities being offered high-paid lecture fees simply because they are Senators. As the R publican dean of the Senate recently said, "Being paid $2,500 for $50 speeche Presidential aspirants should realize that if they succeed to the White House t high paid "moonlighting" days are over.

Too many Senators have chronic absences because they are on the lecture to piling up annual lecture incomes that even exceed their Senate salaries—so times even doubling their Senate salaries. Their absences not only openly reta and postpone the progress of Senate business because of the difficulty of gett the necessary quorum present to do business—but as well, behind the scen unduly delay the Senate schedule. Because repeatedly they go to the Majori Leader or the Minority Leader and beg them to call off a vote scheduled for certain day simply because they can't be there as they are making a high pa lecture hundreds of miles from Washington.

So the Senate procrastinates for the convenience of "the Moonlighters". A what happens on the Senate Floor, to a lesser degree, happens behind the scen in the Senate committees.

In addition to the chronic Senate absentees of presidential candidates a "moonlighters" on the high-paid lecture fee circuits, there are those Senato who are bent upon squeezing out every bit of Senate paid world travel and en tainment they can while they are a Senator. They put this pleasurable wo travel ahead of the official duty to which they were elected. And they, too, ca the Majority Leader and the Minority Leader to hold off the votes until th return from their world junketing at taxpayers' expense.

So when you put the several presidential candidate absentee Senators, m many "moonlighting" absentee Senators, and the chronic world junketing ab sentee Senators together, you inescapably come up with a sizable number of only absentee Senators but as well Senators requesting the Senate to procras nate on its official business and regular schedule in order to accommodate th personal conveniences.

The accommodation of their personal interests and conveniences is at the ha price of detriment to the public interest and the national interest. Not only t frustrates and discourages those Senators who are dedicated to the Senate institution and who stay in Washington on the job to do a job instead of hold a job.

is 1971 Congress ended in a sad state of affairs. No wonder the American e is so fed up with Congress. No wonder so many conscientious members eir frustration left before the end of the session in their disgust over the nal and petty differences on conference reports.

the holder of the all-time consecutive roll call voting record (2,941 until ed by surgery in September 1968). I suppose that I have rightly been ac- of having too much of a fetish in this regard. On the basis of the many n promises for earlier adjournment. I repeatedly rescheduled times for al examinations, therapy and treatment.

as I went through day after day of early morning-to-late-evening sessions vember and December resulting from the procrastination caused by the can- absentee Senators, the "moonlighting" absentee Senators, and the world- ting absentee Senators - and the petty and selfish bickering of uncom- sing members of the House and Senate. I finally decided to declare my own ndence and go ahead with my own physical care already postponed for two s by Senate procrastination.

s is the same pattern year after year in the Senate—the pattern of pro- nation and accommodation to those Senators who simply don't stay around heir share of their official work and duty—to legislate—who instead cam- make paid lectures, and junket around the world.

ry year we end up at the end of the year doing what we should have done first of the year and completed by the midd'e of the year. Not only that, l up in a marathon of early-morning-to-late-evening sessions that produce ly bad frames of mind, contentiousness, and petty bickering, but as well, gerous physical condition that takes its toll of us and those who work for d the resulting irritable tempers, mental and physical fatigue produce bad tion.

is the way to legislate? Is this the way to represent the people?

gress needs several reforms. The greatest attack is that made on the senior- tem. Yet, it is the senior members who stay in Washington on the job.

the greatest evil and weakness is "absenteeism". It is the breeder of stination. It is the delayer of orderly action. It is the greatest disgrace Senate.

then doesn't the Senate do something about "absenteeism" instead of wringing hands?

use the Senate is a club of prima donnas intensely self-oriented—99 Kings Queen—dedicated to their own personal accommodation.

equently, the Senate is simply incapable of disciplining its members, r it be violation of Senate rules of order and conduct, breach of national y, improper use or abuse of authority—or absenteeism. In the 23 years I een a member of the Senate, only twice has the Senate reprimanded a r.

use of the Senate's incapability for self-discipline on the problem of absen- and because of the serious responsibility of Senators to honor their obliga- staying on the job to which they were elected instead of being absent ighting", campaigning or junketing, next month I shall introduce in the a constitutional amendment requiring that a Senator be present and vot- record roll call votes at least 60 percent of the time or automatically ex- rom the Senate.

did I select 60 percent? Because it is the same three-fifths majority that and moderates have proposed many years for stopping Senate filibusters of the present requirement of a two-thirds majority.

60 percent requirement is relatively low. After all, usually 70 percent is l for passing or getting a low D in school.

t is anything but restrictive on the absentee campaigners, "moonlight- d junketeers!

n the year 1971, the number of voting days was only 116, or at a rate of n one out of every three days.

required rate of only 60 percent, this would mean that the requirement e to refrain from absenteeism on roll call votes on only 73 out of the 365 he year—to be present and voting on only one out of five days.

s that is not a hardship on the "moonlighters", the "junketeers", and the ners -to let them "moonlight", junket, campaign or be absent from te four out of every five days for whatever reason they might have!

I am not unaware of the probable resistance in the Senate to this self-disciplining constitutional amendment.

I will need the help of the news media to inform the American public ... then the help of the American public to let the Senators know that they want this specific reform against "absenteeism."

MARGARET CHASE SMITH,
U.S. Senator

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana still has the floor.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I have had my say. It has not been easy to say what I have said, but I wanted the Senate to know that I think a lot more of the institution than I do of any individual Senator. To me, this body is my home, and what it stands for is my ideal. I do not want to see the Senate denigrated, and I am sorry that events have reached such a stage, in this most tumultuous year with so many contentious legislation confronting us, and with so little to mark as an accomplishment at this time.

I only wish to point out, before I yield the floor—because I assume that the Senator from New York wishes to obtain the floor—that it would be my hope, in view of the fact that we very likely will not be able to vote on the Javits amendment or the proposed Dominick amendment to the amendment today, that it would be possible to reach an agreement this afternoon to which both Senators as well as the Senator from New Jersey, the chairman of the committee, would agree, by means of which a vote on the Javits amendment and the Dominick amendment could be arrived at a time certain on Tuesday next, because I understand that that, in effect, could be considered D-day as far as these two legislative proposals are concerned.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes, indeed.

Mr. JAVITS. I need not protest my respect for the Senator from Montana, he knows that. And the fact that notwithstanding Senator Pastore's sage advice, I yielded the floor because the majority leader wanted it for himself, no matter what the risk in strategic terms, should certainly demonstrate that I am not asleep and I knew what it meant, that someone else could be recognized.

Mr. President, we do have—and I speak really in a very personal sense; like the Senator from Montana, I have the Senate very close to my heart—a profoundly difficult situation which has divided the Nation for more than 100 years, and men feel very deeply about it. We have been through it before. I have been here myself since 1947 and have slept in my office all night and have endured all kinds of hardships in this fight. So I sympathize completely.

The Senator knows that I would like to get unanimous consent to wind this thing up immediately. The Senate knows that; it would be silly for me to protest any such thing. But with the deep feelings and emotions which have obtained, I say to my colleagues frankly it is almost beyond me that circa 1971, there should be any idea that if we do not pass this bill, we are going to kill off civil rights in employment or some other area. It is much too late for that.

Still, there are influences and feelings in this country that seem to think that we could do it. It seems out of the question to me, but there it is, and we have to live with it.

people like Senator Williams and many others I could name, ining the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Pastore), did not keep alive, these issues, precisely because they are so exacerbated by lifferences, would go down the drain.

I ask Senators to bear with us who have to wage this fight be-the Lord put us here to wage it. I do not ask the Senator from le Island to temper what he said, nor the intensity of his remarks, beg him to understand us, that we do feel seized of a sense of mis-which is an essential element of the ultimate freedom of our try according to our lights. As Senator Pastore has said so elotly, as long as we have breath, we, too, wish to do all we can, with ey to our colleagues—and the Senator has never found me lack-n that—to protect the things in which we believe.

. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's remarks he temperateness of the tone in which they were given. May I to his attention that I believe in the measure which is before us. hat I want to see it passed. But it appears to me that, because of elay in facing up to the issue, we have perhaps somewhat dam-its chances of passage, which in the beginning were so much ter than they are at the present time.

that is beside the point. I did raise the question of the possibility arrangement for a time limitation for Tuesday next, and at this I yield to the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Domi-to see what his response is.

. DOMINICK. I thank the Senator from Montana.

President, I arrived a little bit after the discussion had started, in the middle of the impassioned address of the Senator from e Island, which I was able to hear although Mr. Pastore did not microphone.

nounced to the Senate yesterday that, as far as I was concerned, ld have voted on my amendment yesterday afternoon. I was told Senator from New York and the Senator from New Jersey that lid not think that was such a good idea. They had talked with me about introducing a different form of their own position, with derstanding that such an amendment could be debated and that ver I wanted to submit a substitute for it I would.

ir amendment was submitted late last night. It is perfectly ent that it is impossible to get a vote on any of these issues unless ors agree to it, or unless they have spoken their final piece. I aid before that as far as I was concerned, I was willing to submit bstitute amendment and vote on it at any time anyone wants to.
far as the proposed amendment of the Senator from New York e Senator from New Jersey is concerned, it does not meet any objections that I have raised, and I remain in total opposition to onstitutes cease and desist without using the words, and that, as I am concerned, is no offer of compromise at all.

e use the court enforcement procedure—which, heaven knows, integral part of our whole system—we can get a bill, I believe.
wise many friends and opponents of mine have indicated other-at we are not going to get a bill. I, quite frankly share their ent of the situation. The Senator from Montana ought to know feel about it and how a great many others feel about it, whether I feel that way.

I am willing to vote on my own amendment, but if we do not g anywhere with that, then I will probably be forced to try to search another compromise. I have made two compromises to date, one which was not satisfactory to either side. That probably means tha was a fair compromise, since it was not agreed to by either side.

My second compromise, amendment No. 871 provides for expedi hearings and determinations. It provides for a Supreme Court rev of a three-judge court decision in the very courts that have gi the minorities their advances in almost every civil rights case we h had. I do not understand why people continue to vote against it, they do. So all I can do is to continue my fight; because I am not go to settle for an agency enforcement if I can avoid it. A procedure wh incorporates in one body the functions of investigation, judge, ju and enforcer. It does not guarantee the respondent adequate process rights and threatens to frustrate the aggrieved's rights w administrative snarls.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would the Senator from Colorado consider following proposal? I make it, because I understand that what he proposes will be as an amendment to the amendment offered by distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. It is really the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And the distinguished Senator from New Jersey a joint proposal.

Would the Senator from Colorado consider a time limitation on amendment or substitute, if it would be possible to arrive at a ti certain, to vote on the Williams-Javits amendment now pending, the interest of the Senate?

Mr. DOMINICK. I would be happy to agree on a limitation of time my amendment and an agreed time to vote on my amendment. I am in charge of those who oppose the Javits amendment. I have talked a number of others who have said that they would not agree on a t certain for the Javits amendment. I am caught in that kind of bi We can vote on my amendment. If it is agreed to, I presume we can ahead and vote on it. If it fails—and I do not know whether it w fail or not—then I suspect that a number of amendments will offered to the Javits amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Let me take a chance.

Mr. President, on my own, I ask unanimous consent to make t unanimous consent request. I ask unanimous consent that a vote the Dominick amendment, which I understand will be offered as amendment or as a substitute to the Williams-Javits amendment, oc at the hour of 3 o'clock on Tuesday next, 6 days hence.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, does Senator intend to add to that a vote on the Javits proposal?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes. I would ask that immediately after the on the Dominick amendment or substitute, whichever it happens be, a vote occur on the Williams-Javits amendment as amended or not amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, as I understand the request of the distinguished majority leader, it is that a time be set on the vote on the Dominick amendment, and then, what

Javits-Williams amendment is amended by the Dominick amend-t or not, a time for voting on the Javits amendment would be set.
hat correct?

r. MANSFIELD. Immediately.

r. ALLEN. It is the judgment of the junior Senator from Alabama we ought to take the steps one at a time and that we should not off the right to offer other amendments to the Javits amendment. sibly some would not agree to the Dominick amendment but might t to perfect the Javits-Williams amendment. s to this so-called compromise amendment, it seems to the junior ator from Alabama that, while the distinguished Senator from York said there are those who object to the words "cease and st" and that they were going to get "cease and desist" out of the ndment, they got the words out of the amendment but they do ave the meaning out; because cease and desist is still there, and is just another way of stating what is already in the bill.
the junior Senator from Alabama would be delighted to agree ime for voting on the Dominick amendment, even if that time is 0 minutes from now, and then we will proceed as each amend-comes up. I think that would be the way to handle it.

r. MANSFIELD. In the interests of the best procedure for the Senate, with the indulgence of the distinguished Senators from New York, Jersey, and Colorado, would the Senate consider, in addition to revious unanimous-consent request, that, instead of the vote oc-ng on the Williams-Javits amendment, whether amended or not diately, pending the disposition of the Dominick amendment, be a half-hour limitation on all other amendments to the Wil--Javits amendment, the time to be equally divided between the or of the amendment and the manager of the bill or whoever he l agree to designate?

. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would be constrained to interpose the ration of an objection to that request, for the reason that, if we time limit on the Javits amendment, the Dominick amendment g failed, it would just be a matter of time before a vote was ed, and we would end up with the very same bill we have before w, in effect; because it occurs to the junior Senator from Ala-that the Javits-Williams amendment really makes a rubber or a cat's-paw out of the Federal district court, rather than to it to try these charges de novo and not merely from the record.
ring it step by step, I would certainly agree to a vote on the nick amendment immediately.

MANSFIELD. If the Senator will yield, there would be no time n to vote on the Williams-Javits amendment. It would appear to nt a half hour on other amendments, equally divided, depending the outcome of the Williams-Javits amendment, would allow of time. Besides, even after the Williams-Javits amendment as ded, if it is amended, was disposed of, there still would be opnity for the offering of other amendments.
in the hope that we could expedite the business of the Senate, I this proposal at this time, because it would not begin to take until 6 days hence. That is a long way off. At that time, a good n of this session of Congress—the conventions and the election ered—will be out of the way and irrecoverable.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. I want to reiterate that I am willing to vote on my amendment today.

Mr. MANSFIELD. But there are others, I understand, who would not wish to have the vote today, because of circumstances over which they have little or no control, but which are understandable to all concerned.

Mr. DOMINICK. I would like to remind the Senator from Montana that a large group—I am not one of them—is going to the Interparliamentary Union in Canada on Wednesday next. The day after that, a number of Senators will be absent, for the reason that they did not realize that any more votes would be occurring that late in the week. I am not excusing them. I am saying that we will be constantly faced with a large number of absentees.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Well, the Senator has been a Member of this body long enough to understand that no one can foretell with any degree of accuracy, unless he uses a computer, as to who will be here and who is not here. But I wish we could get away from the policy which seems to have developed so much in recent years, this matter of counting the troops, and let a majority of the Senate decide. If absent Senators are interested enough, they will not go to Canada, they will not go here, or they will not go there. They will be in this Chamber because, after all, that is where they are supposed to be. That is where they are paid to be. That is where their responsibilities lie.

So I would hope that the distinguished Senator from Alabama would find some leniency in his heart so that we could get on with this legislation which has been so long delayed and the next part of which we cannot face for 6 days from now—almost a week.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving further the right to object, the junior Senator from Alabama would say that he feels sure the majority leader would say that the junior Senator from Alabama has not sought to delay the vote on a single amendment pending before the Senate. The junior Senator from Alabama is willing to vote right now on the Dominick amendment if it is offered; but he feels that it is his duty to his convictions to insist on having a look at the situation after a vote has been taken on the Dominick amendment.

That does not preclude the possibility of any agreement being reached after the vote has been had on the Dominick amendment. It might be adopted. I think that would be the best way to solve this impasse and would bring us quickly to a vote on the bill itself. That might be the best way out of this impasse, if we could agree at this time to an immediate vote on the Dominick amendment, when, as, and if offered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I would make the request but I think it would be futile. I would anticipate an objection and I would not want to embarrass anyone. I will repeat my unanimous consent request and I ask unanimous consent to make this unanimous-consent request, that is, that the vote on the Dominick amendment, or a substitute thereof to the Williams-Javits amendment, occur at the hour of 2 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon next.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, does that just apply to the Dominick amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Ir. JAVITS. Then I would be constrained to object again. If I may lain, the majority leader said he did not want to embarrass any-

Ir. MANSFIELD. I meant on a vote this afternoon.
r. JAVITS. I understand that. The majority leader said he would make the unanimous-consent request. I think, in all fairness, it is fair to ask for a vote on a substitute and not ask for a vote on the n amendment and put us in the position of being the bad fellows objecting, as we would be irretrievably prejudiced.
r. MANSFIELD. The Senator is aware of the fact that the Senator ı Montana tried to get that into an agreement but was unsuccess-so——
r. JAVITS. Then the Senator should not present it as a unanimous-ent request, and I say that with all respect. We should not be com-d to be the bad fellows and object, when it is a one-sided proposi-
r. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I withdraw my request.
le PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn.
r. JAVITS. Mr. President, I think that what has transpired here this noon is clear evidence of where we are. Feelings are deep. Con-ns are profound. We are all adults. Apparently this matter is not y shape to be resolved.
far as the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Wil-) and I are concerned, we are ready for a vote on the basic prop-n. I really am speaking at great risk here now, but I believe that the Senate disposes of the question on this occasion, so far as we ncerned, it is ended and I would expect, in all fairness to the Sen-nd after all, this advances the proposition of the Senator from ana the furthest, that that would be so from the opposition side, t we will be at hazard on this basic proposition on which Senators voted already twice at least. That is all right. I am perfectly ready ept that, and the results. But let us give a little notice to those re proceeding on the theory that this matter was not coming up, majority leader said, under circumstances we cannot control, and hem the opportunity to appear here, cast their vote as is their so to do, rather than to be caught by surprise, I do not want to n surprises in this situation. But I do not want to accept a one-unanimous-consent request which puts us at hazard when the side loses nothing—if it wins, fine, if it loses, it still has plenty of o go—and the bill is still nowhere.
nnot see that at all. I cannot see that that is fair in any way, so far are concerned.
GAMBRELL. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from York yield for the purpose of making or entering a motion to ider?
JAVITS. This Senator will not so yield, as this Senator is not ap-of the consequences of yielding for that purpose. This Senator reason whatever for any discourtesy, and will evidence none, soon as this Senator has a minute to satisfy himself as to the con-ces of that motion, then the Senator would be prepared to yield, t now.

Mr. President, as I said a minute ago, I believe that we are dead locked in a serious situation. It evidences for the country a matter, really, of the greatest importance to all Americans; that is, who runs our country.

Mr. President, since 1957, when I first came here, I have supported motions to amend rule XXII. We have had rulings, and apparently it almost seems to be established now, even without a ruling, that rule XXII is susceptible to amendment only at the beginning of a new Congress.

So far as I can remember, we have pressed that every 2 years, whenever a new Congress came into being. We have always argued that by the operation of this rule it was not a majority of the Senate which determined the actions of the Senate but two-thirds, and that by the rules of the Senate a completely nonconstitutional devolution of power to one-third of the Senate had been granted.

We have been told in successive years constantly—especially in the past 10 years—that this is no longer a civil rights struggle and that all our concerns about the filibuster's being used—that is, used as a weapon to throttle civil rights legislation—were misplaced and ill advised, that no longer was the filibuster weapon going to be used against civil rights legislation.

But, Mr. President, I am glad that I was not taken in by that. I never have been. Here is the complete validation of that fact, the power of the minority—to wit, one-third—under rule XXII, to compel—and I use that word advisedly—the majority to accept what it wants rather than what the majority has voted. That is naked and clear.

It seems to me that very long-range interests are again at stake for the United States. If this power is to be utilized nakedly—as it is—it can be utilized in any quarter. It is a fact, and the country should know it, that one-third of Senators present and voting can veto any action by this country. That could include a declaration of war. It could include appropriations for the Armed Forces. It could include any solemn engagement made by the United States, or on anything necessary to its security. That is the way we are organized.

Every once in a while, something comes along to show it in all its pristine power. That is where we are now.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a question?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. I just want to ask the Senator whether he really feels that a majority of the Senate voted against the Court enforcement, especially when the plurality vote represented just a one-vote shift. That is not a majority of this body or anywhere else.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, a majority of those present and voting have voted that way on two occasions, and whether it is a one vote shift or not, they did not impeach a President by one vote. That would be a pretty important vote. It would be the first impeachment of a President. A lot of other measures are carried by one vote.

The evidence is that 60 percent of the Senate the last time out voted for cloture. I am talking about cloture; 60 percent of the Senate voted for cloture notwithstanding the presence of cease-and-desist power in the bill.

he Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) and I believe that er those circumstances, with a majority vote, whether by one or votes against the Dominick amendment or 60 percent of the Sen-plainly, "Unless you give us what we want, you are not going to here is nothing more clear than that. There is no more naked ap-tion of power than that. And that is what we are faced with.

ie question is whether the Senate can summon the resources to with that situation or whether it will demonstrate itself to be rless to deal with it.
. President, I respectfully submit—and I have great affection

JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I certainly applaud the ability of enator from New York, who has been on the ramparts in this and in the battle concerning the dock strike. It has wholly oc-l his time all day and all night. He has carried the burden with ficence.
t is my first observation. The second observation is that I would that if I were out in the country and not a Member of the U.S.

ld say, "They have an issue. They have had a vote. They have d the issue. Then they decide that they have to decide it again ain and again."
s particular issue of cease-and-desist power has been voted with gnity, not on motions but up or down three times.

JAVITS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, in 1970, the vote was in the neighborhood of 41 to 27 in favor of this method of enforcement on this bill.

Since we have come back, as the Senate majority leader has said, we have not done anything. We surely have not done anything finally. However, twice we have voted on this and voted in favor of cease and desist.

The Senator from New York and I have joined in an amendment to finally come to a decision. We have offered to step back and use the judiciary, which was all that we heard about during the debate.

We said that cease and desist was the effective and fair way. We are stepping back to the judiciary with this amendment. We have stepped back, and for the life of me I would think that if I were out in the country and not a Member of the Congress, I would say, "What are these men all about? In this society of ours, I thought we made up our minds in a democratic way, and that ultimately if the majority says this, this is it under the law." And that is what it is all about on this issue.

Again coming back to my opening observation, I have great applause for the Senator from New York for the way he has been carrying a substantial part of this debate.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I am grateful to my friend, the Senator from New Jersey. He, too, has shown enormous fortitude in the face of great difficulties in respect to this matter.

While we assess what we are doing, let us remember that from the point of view of any member of the minority in this country—and it is the minority who are affected by this measure, and especially the black minority, 11 percent of the people of the country—it all depends on whether one has a job. People like myself who live in enormous cities are so cognizant of that fact.

This is the most important of all civil rights bills. It may not appeal to someone so vividly if a small child is taken away from a good school or if a family is embarrassed by not being able to rent an apartment or buy a home. However, in the final analysis it is the man with the job who has the dignity, and it is the man with the job who can buy different things.

The deplorable conditions in the neighborhoods of many of the great cities, such as my own city of New York, are attributable very heavily to the fact that 25 or 30 percent of the males are unemployed and their families are on welfare. That is a very serious condition. There is no man in the house because the man has not had dignity and has not been able to earn a living or to get a job.

It has been said in the most colloquial way that

Mr. Dominick. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Colorado for a question.

Mr. Dominick. Mr. President, I feel just as sympathetic as does the Senator from New York for the people who have been discriminated against, as he knows.

We are faced purely with a practical enforcement issue and it seems to me in these circumstances that there is nothing so wrong with cease and desist enforcement that it should threaten the total bill. We can accept the amendment and go on with the bill. And in that way we would get a job discrimination enforcement bill. Otherwise I am really afraid that we are not going to get one.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I must make two comments with respect he statement of the Senator from Colorado.

would be a remedy long deferred by very extended court calendars are already heavily overloaded. The Senator proposes by his ndment—which he thinks is an improvement—to make it a three- e court, sitting on the nisi prius basis, which means taking evi- e. Considering the problems we have with court congestion al- y, I am appalled to think of what would happen if we provided hree judges on these trials, with a prolonged trial in a case of this acter, involving discrimination. If we were going to go that route, ve very grave doubt that what the Senator has now proposed is a regressive step rather than a progressive one.

r. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

r. JAVITS. In a minute, if I might finish. I might say that what ave done is, we believe, a very marked effort to make the remedy ningful. The way we propose to make it meaningful is by really lying a separate court, a special master, or a referee. Really, the edure we have outlined is pretty much what special masters and ees in bankruptcy do. It serves to divert from the court a great of hearings, evidence, and so on, which is terribly time consuming would only be aggravated by the congestion on the calendar. In York, where we have such a terrible narcotics problem, we are lishing a narcotics court. We have established rent courts. In jurisdictions, not only my own, efforts have been made to deal the grave problem of court congestion in that way, by adapting ourt system to the situation.

r all those reasons I believe we are very materially effecting the ly. One other thing I say to my friend in all fairness. He has s voted for civil rights measures. He is not an anti-civil-rights n. I meant him and others when I said there is a difference be- us in method but certainly no difference in the fact that the Sena- ants to get this bill passed. The Senator joined in letting the bill ported from the committee where he could have filibustered it. Senator voted for cloture and for civil rights. I have no challenge t in any way. As a matter of fact, I said some people we cannot ile, but one of those is not the Senator from Colorado.

other thing I ask the Senator is this. He has spoken with great nce about the fact that all we have to do is go his way; that, if uld, and I do not believe we can, the bill would be passed.

s not the Senator feel that he is out there adventuring in the wild onder, too? After all, the Senator does not control those who tely oppose it; there is a hard core—even if we should get it gh. I have done my utmost as has the Senator from New Jersey k the extra mile.

really, honestly, genuinely thought we were making a material omise, a concession, in eliminating the cease-and-desist power. mber, this is the legend on the package and it is what all the civil groups have been agitating for, what the unions have been ing for—and look at the publicity this morning. Be fair to us. did the publicity say this morning? It said we had given away a leal. We did not write that; they did.

g the Senator to do that, in view of his devotion to the civil rights for so long, which I confirm, and the feeling he has that we have ed to walk down the road toward it.

Mr. DOMINICK. I appreciate the kind compliments from the Senator from New York. I know how devoted he is to civil rights and the great leadership he has exhibited. I have only one observation concerning his last comment with respect to the media. I remember yesterday when he introduced amendment No. 878. He said: "No, we have not given up on cease and desist; we have just changed it around." I replied to the media that his amendment is purely cease and desist with the words changed. The media thinks this is a great compromise which will pass. I do not think so.

I would be happy to go back to my first proposal and put the dispute in district court, but I honestly thought by bringing it in the form contained in amendment No. 871 I was expediting the court proceeding. This is the procedure utilized in other civil rights law including voting rights and public accommodations. It is an area where it might be helpful, and if it is not I would be happy to go back to my original proposal, which is the district court trial and regular appellate proceedings. I want to accommodate the Senator from New York on this matter if I can, but I cannot compromise this irreconcilable view where he wants the major work done through an Executive agency which is responsible to no one.

Mr. JAVITS. This Executive agency is responsible to the courts and the court will issue a decree.

I would feel that we were answering one big thing and that is the question of the power of the agency to brand a respondent as guilty. I do think that is a big thing.

In terms of the procedural situation respecting the courts I believe hearing the case and certifying the record is an important power and it is a compromise.

But I really feel their inability to issue an order against a respondent, which is yielded by our amendment, is a very big thing, and it is my belief—and not necessarily that of the Senator from Colorado, he rebutted that; but those who espouse the court position generally took that point of view; that is, they felt that the power which was granted by cease and desist was the power to brand the respondent as a person who had done wrong, had discriminated, that this was so potent a power they did not want the Commission in zeal to exercise it.

So I think in our way, by giving only the court power to issue such an order—I want the Senator to understand that the power to contest it before the court issues an order is a very important point for the respondent. Under a cease-and-desist power he could have made his case, then the Commission would issue a cease and-desist order, but under the way we have it now the Commission would have made its recommendation before there was a condemnation, as it were, of the respondent, and the respondent still could have his day in court in opposition to that before a judge actually rules.

I think that is a very important power. I can conceive of many cases in which it is important to get the reversal, if that is what one wishes to call it, before an order is issued, rather than after a cease and desist order is issued, considering employee relations, trade union relations, and relations with the public in terms of sales, and so on. So I think it is very important.

Mr. DOMINICK. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment so I may comment on this matter?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

r. DOMINICK. I shall submit a statement later concerning my views nendment No. 878, but in the meantime I rise to criticize what ens under the Senator's amendment. According to amendment No.
the Commission issues findings of fact and recommendations which the court issues its order, unless the respondent within 60 asks that the court review the record. Previous to this the parties ot have any hearing before the court. The only new item as far can see, is the fact that the court itself would have jurisdiction the admissibility of single pieces of evidence as they go into the ngs. Other than that the courts are virtually powerless because ourt has practically no discretion insofar as entering its order the Commission issues its recommendations.

. JAVITS. If I may reply to that, because I think it points up the in the first place, there has been much argument by those taking enator's position that Lord knows what rulings on the evidence, o forth, would be made by the hearing examiners for the Comon; that the Commission could write a cease-and-desist order t; but under this proposal the court is able to make interlocutory gs on the controlling questions of law in the course of proceed-efore the Commission. So I think that is an important concession. other important concession is one I mentioned before. The ndent is not branded, as it were, as a violator of the civil rights with all that implies in public relations, and so forth, by the ission, but the Commission's recommendations have to be dealt by the court, and it is only the court that makes the order.
course, if a respondent is going to default, if he is not going to r, if he is not going to contest, then a court, even on the com-
. on default could enter an order. The court is not going to have a f there is no defense or if there is no answer; but if the respond-going to answer and is going to contest, it seems to me we put a much more advantageous position to do so before the court.
ddition, the court may determine that it requires more evidence, ich case it can send it back to the Commission to get more eviif it desires to get more evidence.

DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

JAVITS. If I may just finish.

think the rights which are conferred in terms of the respondent ry real and that there is not an automatic progression, the steam-which the opponents of this idea have so strongly argued, of a ission rolling over a respondent and coming down with a cease-sist order. I think the Commission can be stopped by way of a intervening in an interlocutory way while the proceedings are on, and, second, that nothing issues by way of determination he court has not only considered the record but the opposition record interposed by the respondent. On those grounds, I think ere is a real difference.

w yield to the Senator.

DOMINICK. The amendment as the Senator from New York has it now is that the district court considers the findings of facts ecommendations only if the recalcitrant respondent makes a that the court do so. Otherwise the court just automatically an order, which is the same as a cease-and-desist order—really administrative act.

Second, if the courts do decide to review the case, the district court duplicates the examination of the Commission issued findings of fact and recommendations, and then the case goes through the whole appellate procedure.

The net effect is—that such duplicative procedure is just going to delay the enforcement beyond anything my proposal would do.

Mr. JAVITS. No, because the big delay comes from the congested court calendar.

Mr. DOMINICK. Would the Senator oppose an amendment to return findings of fact responsibilities to the court?

Mr. JAVITS. No, I would not be in favor of that, because that is where the calendars are jammed. What I have tried to do—and the Senator has brought it up—is to make the Commission a special master or referee, which the court could appoint anyhow. That is all we are doing. We are enabling the Commission to act in the same way that a referee or special master could act.

Mr. DOMINICK. Will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. The Senator just brought up an interesting point. Suppose—and I do not think we should attempt this on the floor because we do not know where it will lead us—we included in the district court procedure language giving the district court judge the right to decide whether he wanted to try it himself or appoint a hearing examiner or a special master to hear the facts?

Mr. JAVITS. The court has that right, anyway. I do not know of any of these cases which have been referred to them, but I have no doubt they can do it. As the Senator knows, it is hard to decide these matters while one is standing on his feet debating the issue, but I believe the rules of civil procedure in the Federal district courts permit the appointment of a master to take the evidence.

Mr. DOMINICK. Then, under my amendment, one could do exactly what the Senator wants to do, only the court would be appointing him.

Mr. JAVITS. Except that they do not do it.

Mr. DOMINICK. There is no reason why they should not do it.

Mr. JAVITS. Let me ask the Senator, in return, just by way of speculation—and none of us knows what this means, because we need to check back on it—but under his amendment, would he care to give the court the right to refer the issue to the Commission as a special master?

Mr. DOMINICK. No, not to the Commission.

Mr. JAVITS. There we are.

Mr. DOMINICK. Not to the Commission.

Mr. JAVITS. I do not see why not. I say that poses the issue, as I see it.

Mr. President, I now deal with the differences between the Williams-Javits amendment and the bill, and also the differences between the Williams-Javits amendment and the so-called Dominick amendment, in order that Members of the Senate may be able to quickly gather the situation.

Under the bill, the complaint is filed in the Commission. Under the amendment No. 878, the complaint is filed in the Commission and the district court.

em No. 2: Under the bill, there are no interlocutory appeals to questions of law which might arise—so that the normal rules of edure would apply which say that there will be no interlocutory als or motions except in cases of clear illegality or unconstitulity, in which case an application for injunction would lie.
nder the amendment, interlocutory court rulings are permitted on rolling questions of law.
his is one of the things I have cited to the Senator from Colorado Dominick) as being a very important point which changes antively the provisions of the bill.
e third item is that cease-and-desist orders are issued by the OC under the bill, and the EEOC must petition for enforcement e order in the court of appeals and the review of the findings is ie basis of the so-called substantial evidence test.
der our amendment as now submitted, there is no cease-and-desist issued. I have pointed that out. A cease-and-desist order would sue, and the respondent's case is not terminated by the Commisout he still has the opportunity to test out the Commission's findf facts and recommendations as far as the court is concerned, so he review, also under the substantial evidence test, comes before der is issued.
at is very important, for this reason: Enforcement is a matter of tion, and a respondent might very well be bound by the subal evidence test in terms of a finding of fact, to wit, that he did not discriminate in employment. But as to enforcement in terms kpay or anything of that character, I think there will be a very pportunity for the intercession of the court in those situations. ce I think, Mr. President, there, too, the way we have drafted nendment becomes a very critical aspect of the concession which ve made and the compromise which we have offered.
last item, which I think bears repetition in terms of this comn, is that the rules of evidence applicable in district courts apply EEOC hearings. That is provided by the bill now. Under our lment, not only the rules of evidence, but the rules of civil procewhich are applicable in the district courts, will be applicable to EOC procedures.
ems to me, Mr. President, that under all of these circumstances, making a very sincere and a very precise offer of compromise ally literal sense.
eneral, the amendment makes substantial concessions. Also, I like to approach this from the point of view of the quality and of adjudication, which are so important, and are substantially ed by giving the district courts a closer supervisory role over the ission proceedings than the courts of appeal have under the bill, sense that they can act in an interlocutory way while the prog is going on, and there is nothing operative until the court y issues the order.
, as I have pointed out, the question of remedy becomes very a matter of consideration by the court, and there the court is nd by the substantial evidence rule. That is only to back up the s of fact.
think we have taken a really great step toward what has been led for in leaving the freedom the courts have in shaping a decree—and they always do have that—to the court, as to what will be the remedy, what will be the recovery of wages, or rehiring, or whatever other remedy might be employed. And the courts have been rather inventive in terms of remedies in order to deal with situations of unlawful discrimination.

So it seems to me, Mr. President, that the combination of aspects of the case which we have offered becomes the critical element in this situation.

The situation which has brought on this whole bill is also of critical importance to the Senate in its consideration aside from these procedural matters to which we have constantly referred. Why are we here and what brought us here? Why has the power which the Commission has had and has exercised for some years been found inadequate? Why has there been such a great campaign abroad in the land respecting the necessity for strengthening this bill until it has become one of the most urgent aspects of reform in this country?

The reason is, Mr. President—and our committee report deals with that critical question—that while some progress has been made toward bettering the economic position of the Nation's minority population, which is the avowed goal of social and economic equality, it is still far from a reality.

For example, we find that the median family income for Negroes in 1970 was $6,279, while the median family income for whites during the same period was $10,236. There is support for this statement in the statistics of the Census Bureau, which show that blacks are concentrated in lower paying, less prestigious positions, and are largely prevented from advancing to the higher paid and more prestigious positions. Blacks constitute about 10 percent of the labor force, and yet they have only 3 percent of the jobs in the high-paying professional, technical, and managerial spots.

It is estimated, for example, that in those industries which have the highest earnings capabilities—and they are listed, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, as printing and publishing, chemicals, primary metals, fabricated metals, nonelectrical machinery, transportation equipment, air transportation, and instruments manufacture—blacks, instead of having 3 percent, the figure I mentioned before, are down to 1 percent of those in the professional and managerial positions in these, the best-paying industries.

On the other hand, when you look down at the bottom of the scale in the lowest-paying laboring and service worker categories, you find that blacks account for roughly a quarter of all the jobs.

These figures show up again in respect to unemployment. The unemployment rate for blacks, especially for black teenagers, has been absolutely appalling. For example, the figures, here again available for 1970, show that while 4 percent of white males were unemployed and the unemployment rate for all whites was in the area of 5.5 percent to 6 percent, about twice that percentage of all blacks were unemployed, and even in the managerial and professional positions, the area with the lowest unemployment rate, black unemployment was roughly one-third higher than white unemployment.

Then when we compare these statistics—because they, too, are a minority sought to be reached by this measure—with the statistics of Spanish-speaking Americans, we do not have nearly as complete data gh there are 7.5 million persons in the United States in that cate-, but we find that their family income is even less than that of s for close to a comparable year, 1969 as against 1970; and we also a higher incidence of the worst kind of poverty, with roughly seventh of those families having incomes of less than $3,000 a year, again also we find a fairly heavy concentration of those families ne lowest paying occupations, with only a quarter of them in e collar jobs. That compares with over 40 percent for the general age in white collar jobs in the United States, and with an overming proportion, almost 60 percent of the males who speak ish in blue collar occupations.

en as to the unemployment rate: The last year for which we have es, which is 1969 again, bears out the evidences—and the courts held in discrimination cases that the ultimate facts can be used dence. The evidences of discrimination include, for example, the hat the unemployment rate for the Spanish-speaking Americans erally estimated at twice the national average.

o, as this measure deals with the question of discrimination on round of sex, we have a situation which is no less serious so far as ng women are concerned. The disparate treatment of women has shown in studies which have been undertaken by the Women's u.

MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a request, ut losing his right to the floor?

JAVITS. I yield.

Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) o further promote equal employment opportunities for American rs.

JAVITS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from ia, who has been waiting, that I have no desire but to express the st courtesy to him. But I do not wish to prejudice any rights e, considering the existing situation. I say this publicly, because no other way of speaking to the Senator. If he would be kind to confer with Senator Williams, I would endeavor, based is talking with Senator Williams, to work out his time problem, ther that he is anxious to get away, and I am keeping him here.

GAMBRELL. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator. I certainly wish to prejudice his right to the floor. I simply wish to enter on, which I understand I must enter in person. I would not prej-he Senator's rights to the floor.

JAVITS. I do not understand what rights it would prejudice, and he Senator to speak with the Senator from New Jersey.

GAMBRELL. I will do that.

JAVITS. Mr. President, to continue, this bill also affects sex disation in employment, and the situation for working women in ntry is very serious. They, too, are being seriously discriminated
. I might say—raising my voice a notch—that I hope the of the country will realize what they have at stake in this bill. is a great deal of talk about the liberation of women, and they in many ways; and in my judgment they are entirely justified y of the objectives they espouse. Here is the whole tremendous f job discrimination as it affects 30 million employed women in the Nation. They have the power and effect of backing up the desi of the majority leader to get this bill done. If 30 million women reall got agitated about the fact that here is a bill on the floor which affects them and is threatened with extinction, it would count. I hope very much that they will listen and will manifest their strength where it really would count tremendously—on this bill.

As I have said, there are approximately 30 million employed women in the country. That is close to 40 percent of the work force, and it has gone up tremendously. It has increased by approximately three-quarters since the end of World War II, about 1947, until the last recorded figure which came a few years ago. In the same period, the increase of men in the work force has been only about one-fifth of that. So this is a tremendously burgeoning area. Notwithstanding the tremendous place of women in the world of work, their rate of advancement has been much slower in terms of high positions and all the other activities they carry on.

For example, the figures still remain very low with respect to their income. The last time for which we have figures, the salary, for example, for women scientists was about one-third less than it is for men. Women earned, in terms of factory employment, only about two-thirds of what a male would make.

Also, it is very significant that most women earned less than roughly $5,000 a year the last time we had figures, which is a few years ago, in 1968, while only 3 percent of the women earned more than $10,000 a year, and 28 percent of the men, or roughly 10 times as many, earned more than $10,000 a year.

So here is an area of very great discrimination, correlated, because they do have similar characteristics to discrimination on grounds of color and faith, and really involving vast numbers of people—indeed numbers as vast as the total of the minorities, who are always thought of in terms of discrimination. So women have a very critical role and I hope they will begin to play it.

It is very interesting to me that in the amendment which the distinguished Senator from Nebraska proposed today, on which we had a very close vote—as close as you can possibly make it—the exception was made of suits under the Equal Pay Act. That is an act intended to protect the pay of women, and it indicates a consideration of the problems which are brought on in terms of women, by the recognition that they had to be exempted from the operation of the amendment which the Senator proposed.

Mr. President, I repeat that women should interest themselves in this bill instead of thinking—as most do, I am sure—that it is something which does not directly concern them. It would make a great difference in the way this bill is being regarded here. You have women and minorities. You have a majority of the workers of the country when you add the two, and even eliminate the duplication—or at least half or close to half of the workers of the country—who would have a direct interest in a bill against discrimination in employment such as the one before the Senate. I regret that, seemingly, that has not been recognized or embraced as a critical, important element in what is here sought to be legislated.

Similarly—I think it is very important—the effect upon the total economy of the country of passing a measure such as this has been rially overlooked by employers. As employers are sellers of goods of services, I see a critical importance to them in terms of their ets to have a more prosperous economy. Some years ago, when s engaged in the civil rights struggle, there were large figures n were quoted as to the potential of the American economy if we nated employment discrimination both in hiring and in upgrad-orkers. As I recall the figures, they were originally developed by a Culp Hobby when she was in the Cabinet of President Eisen-

r. As I recall it, at that time, at those prices—under today's s—but materially increased by perhaps as much as 25 percent, ad calculated the economic loss at $30 billion a year from failure grade the minorities appropriately as they should be upgraded spect both of having jobs and supervisory positions.
s is a critical matter as we approach the totality of the point making here, because the $30 billion multiplied by, say, in round s, one-third would make a total of $40 billion which would mean ulge in the Federal income tax "take," as most of the families ould be dealt with in that way come out of the lowest income ts, or may pay no tax at all—many being welfare clients on a rge scale.
what is involved here is critically important and very extensive. ther aspect of the matter which I think is also significant is the ning need of the American economic system for what are called si-professionals.
y memory is correct, and I think it certainly is correct on the of magnitude of jobs which are expert or quasi-professional in ter, right now they are something in the area of 15 percent of al working force. I have seen many estimates that this will move round numbers, to 25 percent before 1980. If that happens and it d to happen, I think almost the casual observer can see how it ening almost under our eyes, there is a vast problem in training faces all American business, because discrimination is discrimnot only in jobs, but also in the training that leads to jobs. So again have an opportunity for major utilization of this meas-e we give it some teeth.
brings me to the point which we have made constantly in to this agency, moving now from the general to the highly
. Let us remember that the agency has a very limited power ow, and that that power is essentially the power of conciliation t is about all. People do not like to be considered discriminahat is about as far as the Commission can go. Everything else s on the individual, once we get by the prestige of the agency an agency of the United States. That is, the individual who is inated against, to be able to sue, unless there is a pattern and of the Attorney General to sue—and that is by no means the ng case. The result has been a relative ineffectiveness on the the Commission. Worse than ineffectiveness, that ineffective-been pyramided and proliferated by the buildup of a backlog s the Commission is concerned. That backlog is staggering, pre-ecause it found itself without any real power. So that it is ineffective and cases pile up and there is no place for them to nto the courts—and that is expensive and slow. So they pile up up and pile up.

When we dealt with this bill, our deep efforts in respect of the bi were to cut down the workload, which was intolerable, which simply arms the opponents of this legislation with more arguments and a co stant number of arguments against the fact that we have piled up an pyramided a vast number of cases. So the cases pile up, because th Commission has no power. Then it is argued that the Commission valueless, because the cases are piling up. One feeds upon the other.

Now the facts show, Mr. President, that since its inception, th Commission has received 81,000 charges. Of this number, the Com mission has been able to achieve totally, or even partially, conciliation in less than half. This means that in a significant number of case the aggrieved individual was not able to achieve any satisfactor settlement of his claim through the Commission and was forced eithe to give up his claim or, if he found the necessary money and time, t pursue it through the Federal courts.

Now this becomes a very real problem because it piles up and pile up and piles up. For example, in fiscal 1970, 14,129 charges were file with the EEOC. In fiscal 1971, the number increased to 22,920 charges The Commission is now estimating that 32,000 charges will be file this year alone.

Obviously, all we are doing is feeding the opponents of the Commis sion with arguments by simply denying to the Commission the oppor tunity to cut down its tremendous workload through effective enforce ment power. They have no effective enforcement power. They are simply unable to progress in cutting down their workload. So it will grow and grow and grow and build up and arm those who are inter ested in knocking down the Commission with more ammunition to knock it down, precisely because they profit in that way from denial to the Commission of the opportunity to cut down its workload.

So, Mr. President, I believe that we have a situation which is, as I say, proliferating upon itself and is simply building up and building up the bad picture which we have, so far as the Commission is concerned.

These comments, Mr. President, I thought were a necessary back ground with respect to the reasons why we actually reported out the bill and why it is not fair to say, "Well, you have got a Commission and the Commission is functioning. We give it some money and a staff. What are you hollering about?"

We point out that, on that basis, we have got a complete breakdown in the Commission's possibilities for cutting down its workload or carrying on any of its business.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from New York yield, without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. JAVITS. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Montana.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I am about to propound a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) may yield to the distinguished Senator from Georgia (Mr. Gambrell) for the sole purpose of permitting Senator Gambrell to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Hruska amendment was rejected earlier today; and that ropose that the Gambrell motion be put to the Senate Tuesday at 1 p.m. and that a vote occur thereon at 2 p.m., with the time for eration thereon to be equally controlled and divided by the tor from Georgia (Mr. Gambrell) and the Senator from New y (Mr. Williams); and further that upon the making of the on by the Senator from Georgia (Mr. Gambrell) the floor revert e Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) without his right to the having been prejudiced.

. ALLEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall bject—does this mean that the distinguished Senator from New is going to occupy the floor from now until Tuesday and that oor will be returned to him on Tuesday?

. MANSFIELD. This is just for the purpose of making the request.

. ALLEN. The Senator is not going to be discussing this amend- of his until Tuesday, I trust.

. MANSFIELD. No, it applies with respect to the agreement.

. GAMBRELL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have greed to this request, and I do not think the record should suggest have.

MANSFIELD. The Senator has not agreed. It was without his ledge.

GAMBRELL. Mr. President, I did not propose this request, and not want to agree to it without a consultation with the Senator Nebraska (Mr. Hruska).

as my understanding that I was going to make a motion, with derstanding that it not be voted on this afternoon. So, I object.

MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I withdraw the request.

MANSFIELD subsequently said: Mr. President, I renew the unani- consent request which I made, and I understand that it now has ith the approval of the main parties concerned.

JAVITS. Mr. President, that is quite satisfactory with me. There point, however, that I wish to be clear on. That is that we may o table. We would not be cut off from that right.

MANSFIELD. It would be on the motion to reconsider.

JAVITS. That is right. However, I want to make sure that we are ecluded from moving to table that motion at the end of the time led for its discussion. In other words, we could move to table the vote on the motion to reconsider was had.

HRUSKA. Mr. President, if the Senator would yield, if it would sense of this unanimous-consent agreement that a motion to table not occur before 2 p.m., that would be agreeable with us.

JAVITS. I understand. It would be at the end of the time for HRUSKA. Yes. A motion to table would then be in order, and passage of that motion, we would then vote on the motion to der.

PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, s so ordered.

GAMBRELL. Mr. President, under the agreement just made, I at ne enter the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Hruska ment was rejected.

JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield for that purpose.

PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is entered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I must apologize to the Senator fro Georgia (Mr. Gambrell). He will realize now, I think, that I was no being arbitrary.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515 a bill to further promote equal employment opportunities for Amer ican workers.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, we felt, because of the plethora of case and the inability to have any way in which those cases could be dis posed of by virtue of the constant building up of a backlog in th absence of any ability to curtail the number of cases through the powe of the Commission to decide, that we were in an impossible situatio Hence, Mr. President, there was the granting of the cease-and-desis power to the Commission which the committee voted for and reporte in the bill.

Let us really analyze what this means. What is the cease-and-desi power which is granted to the Commission in the bill? We have hear so many comments about the fact that this is a case of the Commissio being a prosecutor, a judge, and a jury all in one. We have heard th there is no accountability to anyone and that this is an absolutely aut cratic procedure.

Mr. President, with all respect to those who have made the a sertions, they are simply belied by the fact that, in the first plac cease-and-desist orders are issued by the Federal Trade Commissio and by other agencies of the Government, including Government de partments, not even commissions. And we have had the great body o law called the Administrative Procedure Act which gives procedura due process in such agency proceedings.

Mr. President, continuing now with the reasons why we gave th cease-and-desist power and a showing as to why the cease-and-desis power is not in any way a star chamber procedure, as it has bee called, as I pointed out a minute ago, cease-and-desist power is in th hands of other Federal agencies. It is a power which other agencie have, including departments. Some 32 or 24 State commissions dea ing with equal employment opportunity also have cease-and-desis authority. Again, I would point out that the procedures and the his tory of the situation in New York, of which I am extremely proud show that we have had under our law since 1945—26 years—the ad ministration of the best antidiscrimination law in the United State with Governors, particularly the present Governor, Gov. Nelson Roc efeller, and other Governors, regardless of parties, beginning wi Gov. Tom Dewey, all of whom were absolutely devoted to this effort.

Mr. President, this therefore very materially reduces the charg which is made about the star chamber procedure. Also, Mr. Presiden the practice in respect to these matters is important to understan In the first place, the cease and desist order, although it is a finding and that is what I debated with the Senator from Colorado—it is no operative as a decree. There is really nothing that the respondent ha to do about it, though he may be unhappy with it. There is nothing has to do about it.

Mr. President, the only establishment and the only entity which ca do anything about it is the court. And in this case, on the present ha the Commission must make the case in court on the record and a case lesist order and a decree is entered. Only then does it have opera-provisions and only then can it be enforced by contempt, civil or nal, whichever may be the remedy that would be justified.

. President, so that there will be no operation of the cease and except by decree, and within 60 days, the respondent can contest ease-and-desist order and then the matter goes through the mill in of decision by the court, again without the cease-and-desist order ning operative unless the court, after the contest, puts it into effect cree.
under these circumstances, protected with full procedure and due ss under the Administrative Procedure Act, it seems to me that pressive action can arise or that the charge of Star Chamber prong can be made.
ope Members will read what we have debated here today so that e one hand, those with me and the Senator from New Jersey ling we want to jump over the long delay in courts may be with in an appropriate fashion, and also those who hold with the or from Colorado and feel we have not given anything up, will he Record and our amendment with great care.
ally believe what I said in respect to the powers which are left Commission. That is a real statement. There are real powers the Commission, but also real powers are given up, and that real is the greatest of all for public condemnation—the issuance of e-and-desist order. Such an order, being entered, if it is con-cannot be enforced; but it is a finding and an authoritative g—and he is ordered to cease and desist. When one is dealing ompanies that spend millions of dollars in public relations that a very happy thought.

DOMINICK. Mr. President, is the Senator from New York about d the floor? I would like to comment on the amendment. The or has now talked an hour or more. I know the Senator does not ngage in this practice but, as long as the rule exists, it might as used. I do not intend to stop the Senator. But if no one else can floor there will be no opposition in the Record to the amend-

JAVITS. The Senator knows I would never hold the floor as long ave except for a reason. I was deeply disturbed by Senator e's assertion that there might be a motion to table our amend-

WILLIAMS. Will the Senator yield?
JAVITS. Coming now, that would be most embarrassing.
DOMINICK. I had not heard a vague rumor of that until I was the door.
JAVITS. It is the same with me.
WILLIAMS. There was a misunderstanding. There was developing ought that there would be a motion to reconsider the Hruska ment and there would have been a motion to reconsider that. It hing to do with our amendment.
JAVITS. I thank the Senator. Under those circumstances, with eling of assurance, I would be prepared to yield the floor in a t so that the Senator from Colorado can speak. nk the Senator from Colorado is correct. I hope he would, withining himself, introduce his views in the Record in a fairly elaborate way. No matter how many people may say we are runni it, we are not running it. Our colleagues will come here and vote y and nay whether they have heard the debate or not, and that w settle our hash in a very definite sense.

I hope the Senator will make his case as fully as he thinks he shou because we have a few days and Senators will be able to read t essential elements in the Record. I hope very much we can work o our problem and vote with reasonable promptness. I think we shou vote on the substance and then there should be adequate opportuni to amend the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey and m then, we should vote on that. I do not wish in any way to cut off tha I believe both can be accomplished with reasonableness if we are of mind to vote on two questions.

There are those who will oppose it to the end, even if the Senat from Colorado wins; and we may still have cloture, but we will over that hurdle and I am perfectly willing to engage in that ente prise and leave opportunity to amend our proposal. I hope very mu the Senator will now help us to achieve some agreement.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I will not take much time on th matter but I do think it is worthwhile for the sake of the record, the Senator from New York so correctly stated, to make a stateme about the amendment which I understand is now the pending busine Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is amendment N 878.

Mr. DOMINICK. I thank the Presiding Officer.

Mr. President, I had hoped when we initially talked about the po sibility of working something out that the Senator from New Jers and the Senator from New York, in trying to formulate an acceptab proposal would come up with something that was rather meaning fully different from the original cease-and-desist proposal.

I have read over amendment 878 with considerable care. For th benefit of those who may read the Record or who may be listening would like to outline what happens under the amendment. First a co plaint is filed and then the Commission determines whether it ca secure voluntary compliance. Mr. President, the Commission has di cretion to judge acceptability. If they do determine that the co pliance agreement is not acceptable, that determination is not revie able in any court.

In other words a compromise agreement is attempted to be worke out but then the Commission can say, No, that is not satisfactory t us. It might be satisfactory to both sides but not the Commission. Th the Commission determination forces further Commission invol ment under succeeding sections.

That, I understand, is in the original bill. So there has been no i provement along that line.

Following that, then the Commission notifies the General Coun The General Counsel has the discretion to initiate a formal hear before the Commission by issuing and serving upon the respond a complaint stating the facts upon which the allegation of the unla ful employment practice is based.

the General Counsel issues a complaint, he then files it with the ed States district court for the district in which the unlawful em-ment practice is supposed to have occurred. But except as the dment thereafter provides, all further pleadings shall be filed the Commission.
the only thing there is in the court, unless questions of evidence come up, is the original complaint. So the court has no knowledge at is going on except to review questions on controlling issues of if the court finds that such review would materially advance the ate determination of the litigation.
this point, all that is before the court is the complaint, so it is to have to have a hearing to determine whether it will ultimately ce the termination of the litigation. This compounds the litigaprocess.
n, as I read the proposal, the Commission files its findings and mendations with the court. That recommendation, incidentally, les findings that unlawful employment practices exist and whatffirmative action may be required for reinstatement or hiring of yees, with or without backpay, limited only by a 2-year limita-next procedural step as contained in subsection (k), provides ny party who thinks he has been aggrieved by the recommendaf the Commission may then file in the district court, within 60 a written motion requesting the entry of new findings and new mendations; in other words, a relitigation of the issues. A copy motion is given to the Commission and to all other parties, and e General Counsel files in the court for the first time the record proceedings. Up until that time the court does not have the fog-lea of what has been going on, or on what basis the recommendawere made, or on what basis the recommendations should be

court then has power to grant any temporary relief, if it wants after receiving the testimony and proceedings set forth in the
, it can issue a decree.
ther words, what we have proposed here is two trials instead of e have one trial before the Commission, upon which it bases its gs of fact and recommendations, and then if the aggrieved party ot like the Commission recommendations, it can move for another fore the district court.
e have the same bogged-down procedure that was emphasized h by the Senator from New York—only in this case we dupli-
. It originates before the Commission, which already has a of over 32,000 cases, and, with expanded original jurisdiction, ve many more than that. It will probably take 2 or 3 years a party can get to the Commission for a hearing. Then a party to the court and have a new trial on the record and proceedings he court.

ILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

OMINICK. I yield.

ILLIAMS. I did not hear the full statement, but in the last state-e Senator is saying there is a full trial before the district court.

Mr. DOMINICK. Only on the record that has been produced by t Commission. In other words, the court does not give a full hearing, b based upon the record of the pleadings and everything else, it has determine what relief it is going to give.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It makes a judgment and enters an order, or decid not to, on the record that has been sent up to it from the Commissio Is that correct?

Mr. DOMINICK. I quote from the amendment:

> The court shall have power to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimo and proceedings set forth in such record——

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is based on the record made.

Mr. DOMINICK. Granting or denying, in whole or in part, appr priate relief: and that occurs only when the aggrieved party makes motion for reconsideration. Otherwise- and this is the point I wa to make -those recommendations go into effect as a matter of cours There is no other review by the court whatsoever.

So the court, in effect, is forced to treat a ministerial action as court decree without having any idea what was in the record or wh the facts were or what the testimony was before the Commission. Th is where no objection is raised.

On the other hand, if an objection is made and the record is file the party can go through the court and the court can do what it wan to.

The interesting thing is that the proponents, believing that th were doing something constructive—and I really believe they we trying to do something—have compounded the worst problems of bo issues. They have compounded the problem of trying a case initial before a commission which has filed the complaint, and which has do the investigation, and then the amendment, say, OK, this is what w need, we need to do this by cease-and-desist order in order to get arou the court system, which is badly backlogged; but then they go throu the court system, ultimately, anyway. This really does not make mu sense to me.

I could go on and on, and probably will later on, to point out so of the other problems, as I see them, in this amendment; but this is t real nub of the situation.

I cannot, for the life of me, understand why the proponents of t bill are taking such an adamant position on the particular point cease and desist. They have already agreed in committee that, in t case of Federal employees, after proceeding through their agen remedies, they can go through the Attorney General into the Fede court system or to the Civil Service Commission Board of Appeals a Reviews, at their option. The proponents have already agreed th State, county, and local government employees, instead of relying cease and desist orders before the Commission, could go to the Att ney General, who would decide whether or not he is going to file, a action on the employees' behalf. In pattern and practice suits, th agreed to either leave enforcement of grievances with the Attorn General for a period of 2 years, with some concurrent jurisdiction the EEOC, contingent upon subsequent reorganization provisions, o leave it entirely in the hands of the Attorney General, which then go into the district courts.

der what conceivable type of logic can the proponents of cease-desist orders say it is best to go to the court system for the Federal oyees, and best to go there for the State and local government oyees, and it is probably best to go there in practice and pattern edure; but in the case of private employees, we are going to force to agency determinations.

annot understand how, under any conceivable logic, they arrive at result.

night add here that in the amendment the Senator from New y and the Senator from New York have proposed there is pro- for court procedure when they want immediate relief. Parties get injunctions or temporary restraining orders. They have to the court to get that.

at is already in the present bill. So on every single thing, except ns of private employees, cease-and-desist proponents say, "Let the court system, which is the typical forum of relief for ities throughout this country; but in the case of private em- es you cannot do that."

HRUSKA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

DOMINICK. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

HRUSKA. It was with interest that this Senator listened to the ay between the Senator from New York and the Senator from ado with reference to who should receive the evidence, in the lace, and of course the proposal of the Senator from New York he Senator from New Jersey puts that in the hands of the trial ner designated by the Commission and working within the w of the Commission's activities.

I recall it, the Senator from Colorado suggested that perhaps al examiner could be in the person of a referee appointed by art. Further, the Senator from New York asked if it would be ht to have the testimony procedure reversed, and if the Senator Colorado would agree to the trial examiner of the Commission the evidence.

Senator from Colorado had said, "No, I would not agree to whereupon Senator Javits responded:

this negative answer warrants a negative answer on my part as to the appointed by the court.

question of the Senator from Colorado is this: Is there a differ- a proceeding of this kind between evidence being taken by a xaminer appointed by one of the parties to the lawsuit -to wit, mmission—and the receiving of evidence by a referee appointed mpartial, life-tenured judicial officer?

DOMINICK. It seems to me that there is an enormous difference; e latter preserves the impartiality of the court, the jurisdiction court, and the integrity of the referees and examiners who have ained in that field. But if we assign it to the Commission, which ally what the Senator from New York was suggesting, all we ng is compounding the thing they are trying to put in their ment; namely, that the Commission is going to prosecute, inves- and hear the case, and then say to the court, "OK, these are ommendations, which have the substantial force of evidence; force them."

Mr. HRUSKA. The Senator from Colorado has been a student for long time of the history and the social and political structure of Amer ica. Does he know of any procedure in which one of the parties to t controversy is allowed to take evidence and make recommendatio and findings of fact, on which there is only limited appeal? I kno of none.

Mr. DOMINICK. I can think of none in the private sector. I unde stand that with some variations the NLRB, which is in desperate tro ble, has this type of procedure; and I also understand that perha the Federal Trade Commission has similar procedures, and it is als the subject of some opposition by a large number of people.

Mr. HRUSKA. Yes.

Mr. DOMINICK. I personally think it is wrong no matter where yo do it.

Mr. HRUSKA. But, in those instances, the NLRB and the FTC po sess the power to make a determination. They have that power.

Mr. DOMINICK. That is correct.

Mr. HRUSKA. And then there is the appeal to the courts.

Mr. DOMINICK. That is correct.

Mr. HRUSKA. There is an appeal to the courts; that is not the situ tion here.

Mr. DOMINICK. No, that is correct. This would vary that procedur and vary it rather adversely and substantially.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unan mous-consent request?

Mr. DOMINICK. I wish to make such a request myself, and then I sha yield the floor.

I ask unanimous consent at this point that the speech, which was ve brief, which I made in support of amendment No. 871, be inserte in the Record at this time as I intend to offer a version of 871 as substitute for amendment No. 878. It provides an expedited court e forcement procedure before a three-judge court with direct appe to the Supreme Court, or, if it is not in the national interest to have three-judge court, to put it in the district court on an expedited pr cedure. Following which, I ask unanimous consent to include in t Record a brief statement which I have here, commenting adversely o the amendment which is presently pending; namely, the William Javits amendment.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printe in the Record, as follows:

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I send to the desk for printing and fut consideration, an amendment to S. 2515, the "Equal Employment Opportunit Enforcement Act of 1971."

The amendment offers probably the best opportunity to resolve a deadl existing since January 25 when my court enforcement amendment was v voted on. Since that time the deadlock has solidified through three reconsi tion votes and two cloture votes. During this period I have exhausted t reasonable sources and suggestions in seeking a fair compromise. In the co of such a search, I have carefully considered numerous compromises informa and formally. I introduced amendment number 856 in an effort to resolve deadlock. Unfortunately, all efforts have gone for naught and the nati employees and potential employees remain largely devoid of enforceable empl ment rights.

amendment contains essentially the same court enforcement procedures earlier amendment. I remain firm in my resolve not to desert 45 of my es who faithfully supported the court enforcement procedure and not promise my principles concerning the superiority of court enforcement.
ite voluminous rhetoric to the contrary, my convictions that U.S. district nforcement provides employees and potential employees with the fairest, fective redress of their grievances, remain unshaken.
most rational argument against court enforcement is the potential delay ed by backlogged federal courts. I acknowledge this problem and remedy incorporating in this amendment priority language from the same Rights Act of 1964 that created the Commission. Pursuant to e contained in Title I (Voting Rights), Title II (Public Accomns) and Section 707 ("Pattern or Practice") and included in this ent, unfair employment practice suits will be accorded priorities in hear-determination before federal court judges. Upon certification that the of "general public interest", the case would be assigned for hearing and ent determination "at the earliest practicable date" before a three judge ith appeal to the Supreme Court. In the event the petitioner doesn't certify as being of general public interest, it would be assigned to a district lge for an expedited hearing.
newly incorporated language cures the primary defect in the court en-nt procedure. The final result would be machinery in which the respond-e process rights will be protected by an experienced, impartial judge n stare decisis while the alleged aggrieved is guaranteed an expedited before a federal forum which has in the past exhibited great compassion rity rights.
nendment contains several cosmetic differences from the original amend-well as one substantial change which reduces the time period within ne commission many file a civil action against the respondent from 180 150 days from the time the commission first issues its informal charge.
portance of this amendment should not be underestimated. As it repre-last best offer it signals, insofar as I am concerned, the final effort to he court enforcement cease and desist issue and presents a strong step salvaging the entire bill. Previous opponents of court enforcement would dvised to consider the resonableness of this amendment versus the very pect of no equal employment opportunity enforcement law at all—a most ate and unnecessary consequence.

resident, I am sorely disappointed to discover that the heralded EEOC nt offered by my distinguished colleagues, Mr. Williams and Mr. Javits, ntially less than what the media characterized as a compromise. The nt. Amendment #878, is certainly a hollow offer of compromise to those senators and myself who have fought long and hard for the principle of partiality in the enforcement of job discrimination. The amendment even greater deception on the previous supporters of cease and desist.
ng to create a cease and desist mechanism without using the pernicious e amendment interjects one additional level of review into the procedure nusual level at that. Under S. 2515, Commission issued cease and desist uld be subject to petitions of review brought within 60 days of the order to Sec. 4 (k) or enforcement petitions brought after 60 days by the Comursuant to Sec. 4 (k) and (m) or by the aggrieved after 90 days pur-recalcitrant respondent can drag the aggrieved through a review panded by the highly unusual and time consuming U.S. District Court his procedure flies in the face of critics of my district court enforcement amendment who were upset by unconscionable delays caused by fede court backlogs.

Whereas the Javits-Williams amendment serves to exacerbate the probl of federal district court backlogs, amendment #871 introduced by the dis guished Senator from South Carolina, Mr. Hollings, and myself, preserves benefits of court enforcement while alleviating the federal district court back problem by providing for expedited hearings and determinations similar the procedures contained in other civil rights law, including voting rights a public accommodations.

Despite media coverage to the contrary, Amendment #788 retains Commiss cease and desist powers under the coy pseudonym of "recommendations". It relabeling without substance. Courts have no more authority or discretio deciding the merits of a "recommendation" than they did with a cease desist order. Both are given the force and effect of law unless upon appeal respondent can prove that they are not supported by a substantiality of evidence.

The result with both is identical—a commission determination that, unl not supported by a scintilla of the evidence, can't be upset.

The Javits-Williams amendment does throw some rather skimpy bones the court enforcement proponents but I emphasize that they are indeed skim The amendment does give the District Courts jurisdiction to enter interlocu orders during the Commission hearing, but only if such order involves a "co trolling question of law" and if it will "materially advance the ultimate ter nation of the litigation"—both litigious qualifications at best.

Whereas S. 2515 provides that the federal rules of evidence shall apply "i far as practicable," amendment 787 states that proceedings be conducted conformity with the rules of evidence and that the rules of procedure ap "insofar as possible" -a judge factor which practically speaking will prob make inapplicable the most important federal rules of procedure those pretrial discovery. Adequate pretrial discovery safeguards respondents fr the probability of entering hearings inadequately prepared to defend themsel against Commission charges.

Not only is Amendment 787 a woefully inadequate vehicle for compro to court enforcement proponents, it also jeopardizes the rights of the aggri with a longer appeals process. I respectfully advise the cease and desist p ponents to seriously consider not only the advantages of my amendment vis-a-vis amendment 878 but also the advantages of present cease and de language contained in S. 2515 with amendment 878. I am certain that in latter instances you will find S. 2515 preferable. Amendment 878 should pr unacceptable to everyone. I urge my colleagues once again to vote for the fai most expeditious job discrimination enforcement procedure—my substi amendment to amendment 878. It offers the best hope of resolving the pres deadlock.

Mr. Dominick. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that somehow other we can get a vote on my amendment, be it today, be it Mond or be it Tuesday. I say that because of the fact that the substi which we have ready for the Javits-Williams amendment, beca of the rules of procedure in the Senate, require a few changes whic we were successful in substituting my amendment, would again m that we would have to put perfecting amendments in later.

What I am saying in general is that it is a very complex proced It would be far easier if we could just have a simple vote on amendment, and just let it go that way. But in order to do that guess we are going to have to get Senator Williams and Senator Ja to put theirs aside, and I do not believe they are going to do it. I sh continue to work with them, but I doubt that I shall be successful.

I yield the floor.

TURE AND IMPORTANCE OF "PATTERN OR PRACTICE" CASES

lawsuits typically involve large employers or labor unions. umbers of employees are involved. Sometimes in the later f this type of litigation, company-wide suits are brought, to all of its branches, plants, or divisions. Industry-wide actions n undertaken, involving an industry with all affiliated unions. nple, one suit embraced 17 gambling casinos and hotels on the Las Vegas, and five unions, constituting the 20,000-man resort in the locality.

onal and sensitive situations often are involved. The relief s frequently unpopular with defendants and with some parts mmunity involved. Very complex, difficult questions of law, remedy are inherent in such cases. Also involved are enforceceedings subsequent to the entry of judgment or decree. These ay of supplementary relief or for contempt of court.

Such lawsuits partake of the character of class actions.

They have a two-fold mission: first, to get a decision and disposit of the case itself; and, second, to have that decision serve as a precede for situations with similar facts and circumstances.

Judicial enforcement is highly superior and more advantageo than administrative enforcement.

PRESENT PROCEDURES FOR SUCH CASES WERE CHOSEN ADVISEDLY— THEY SHOULD BE RETAINED

To abandon judicial enforcement of "pattern or practice" suits favor of administrative cease-and-desist powers would constitute substantial erosion of Federal enforcement efforts in the field of eq employment opportunity.

COURT ENFORCEMENT IS SUPERIOR, MORE EFFECTIVE, AND EXPEDITIOUS

First. The respect and confidence accorded Federal courts are a s stantial and valued asset in the field of employment discriminat cases.

Second. The Federal courts have achieved much experience in p tern or practice cases in all aspects of civil rights cases: employme voting, housing, education, public accommodations.

Third. Court decisions are helpful in precedents in similar or lated cases. They are well recognized and highly regarded as in pretation and application of the law.

Fourth. Such decisions are useful in conciliation efforts, beca they clearly spell out the law as it is applied.

Fifth. Court decisions promulgate the law as the courts apply in a broad reliable fashion through the court decision reporting s ices. Thus employees, employers, and all concerned are infor currently and promptly of their rights and responsibilities.

Sixth. Enforcement proceedings after decree may be necessary supplemental relief or for order of contempt. Such subsequent p ceedings are handled with much greater advantage by the judge w entered the decree in the first place. A judge who enters an order w be determined that it is properly enforced. The Department of J tice—Civil Rights Division—knows this. The courts know it. And defendant knows it. That is why the Department does not have to back to the Court very often in order to secure compliance. But cases where they do so, the relief is quick and effective.

Seventh. Under administrative enforcement with cease-and-de authority, the agency which hears the evidence and formulates order, would not be responsible for enforcing it. The experience of other agency—NLRB—which has dealt with employment oppo nities and with respect to which factfinding and remedy formula function are separate from the enforcement function has not b either happy or effective. Recalcitrant defendants have been able resist full compliance more successfully than if they had been d with directly in a Federal district court.

Eighth. Court enforcement is more expeditious. The testimony re shows that experience of the Justice Department in the last 2 y was that a court order was usually obtained in less than a year from time the suit was filed.

Civil Rights Division has been successful in securing expedihandling and disposition of such cases. Most Federal courts have ersuaded to advance such cases on their dockets, and have brought ut for early hearing. Therefore, statistics showing mean elapsed etween filing and disposition of all kinds of civil cases in vari-deral district courts provided very little guidance in determining ng it takes to bring Title VII cases to judgment .
he contrary, it will be the administrative proceedings under nt Attorney General David Norman—page 127 Senate hear-

THREE EXAMPLES

National Labor Relations Board in 1964 ordered that two segre-ngshoreman locals in Texas be merged. In 1966, that order was l by the court of appeals, and the Supreme Court denied review.
1969, when the Department of Justice commenced a Title VII against all of the segregated Texas locals of the International oremen Associations, the two locals referred to were still totally ted. No effectiveness had been given to the court order that had proved by the circuit court and the Supreme Court. suit by the Department of Justice against five trade unions in included a union that had been ordered by the NLRB to stop nation in favor of union members in referral. Although the d been entered before the Department filed suit, the order was owed until the court in the Department's lawsuit ordered comnder Title VII.
the years, the NLRB entered a series of orders against a major manufacturer in directing it to stop discriminating against es because of their union activities. After these orders became ble as a result of decisions of the U.S. court of appeals, the leemed it necessary to file motions for contempt. The court of not being equipped to conduct evidentiary hearings, directed evidence with respect to these motions be heard by a Federal judge, who was then to make findings and transmit them to the appeals for the latter to make final determination on the mo-contempt.
ubmitted, Mr. President, that a procedure such as this denies relief and expends manpower unnecessarily. In reality, any ment proceedings were to be heard by the district judge from urt the order first came.

IT IS ESTIMATED THAT 3 YEARS WOULD ELAPSE BEFORE EEOC CAN OBT SUBSTANTIAL NUMBERS OF ENFORCEABLE ORDERS

The procedures set forth in the bill for the processing of charges complex and lengthy. Under that procedure, it is unlikely that substantial number of enforceable orders could be produced in than 3 years. As David L. Norman, Assistant Attorney General of Civil Rights Division, testified before the Senate Labor Committee

The administrative system intended to replace the judicial enfo ment now conducted by the Attorney General could not begin to fu tion effectively for some considerable period of time, and probabl would be at least 3 years before enforcement orders could be p duced in any substantial number.

The reason for the length of time is not difficult to perceive. Un section 706(b) of the bill a charge is filed with EEOC. Normally i filed informally, in the form of a hand written letter. The charge t has to be made in formal notarized form and the Commission m serve notice of the charge and make an investigation thereof, sect 706(b), page 34 of the bill. At present I am advised that the back of charges is such that investigations are made more than a year af the charge is filed.

Even before EEOC may commence an investigation in a Stat locality which has a fair employment practice law, it must defer for days to the State agency before commencing investigation.

After the investgation is commenced, EEOC must interview the tim of discrimination, look at the personnel record of the corporat and obtain statements from persons who have knowledge of the fa At present, it takes well over a year and a half from the tim charge is filed until a reasonable cause determination is made. U the bill, section 706(b), page 35, the Commission has 120 days to m a reasonable cause determination, and that 120 days starts after the day deferral to State or local authorities.

Once a reasonable cause determination is made, the Commissio obliged to attempt conciliation by conference, conciliation, and p suasion, section 706(b), page 35. No time limit is set forth in the as to how long the conciliation efforts should or would be expecte take. A minimum of 3 months could be expected if the conciliat efforts are to be more than perfunctory.

If conciliation fails, the bill contemplates that the Commission s an administrative complaint upon the respondent and go to hearin section 706(f). The respondent then has the right to file an answ section 706(g). Testimony is then to be taken, under oath, and tr scribed before a hearing examiner. Such proceedings are to be in cordance with the rules of evidence of the district courts.

Even assuming the best of good faith efforts by both the Gen Counsel for the Commission and counsel for the respondents, the t from administrative complaint to the administrative hearing wou at least 6 months, with an additional 3 months for decision by hearing examiner.

Following the procedure followed by the NLRB and most of administrative agencies, either side would then have the righ appeal from the decision of the hearing examiner to the Commis ally this entails not only transcription of the record, but the of briefs by both parties and oral argument, and the writing of sion by the Commission. An absolute minimum time for this al appeal procedure would be 3 months, from the date of the g examiner's decision to the date of the Commission's decision; months would be a much more realistic estimate. But even this n of the Commission is not enforceable in court. The losing s then have 60 days within which to challenge the decision of the ission in the appropriate court of appeals. Before this court, the s then have the opportunity to have the record made and printed erwise reproduced, briefs must be written and oral argument The court of appeals must then write its decision. Only after rt of appeals decision is entered is there an order enforceable tempt. Experience of other administrative agencies indicates e time from the date of the Commission's decision to the date ourt of appeals decision is normally well in excess of a year.

ummary then, the following is a minimum table for the ing of charges:

rral to State agency, 60 days—2 months.

stigation to reasonable cause decision, 120 days—4 months.

onable cause to fail conciliation, 3 months.

inistrative complaint to hearing before hearing examiner, 6

ing to decision of hearing examiner, 3 months.

sion of hearing examiner to decision of Commission, 3 months.

sion by the Commission through to decision of the court of , 12 months.

, the minimum period of time from the filing of the charge to sion can be expected to be 33 months; and since those are mini- mes, we can expect that there will be a 3-year interval before ill be any substantial number of enforceable orders.

ial enforcement should be retained in pattern or practice cases.

on 5 does not involve a transfer of pattern or practice cases en- nt. It is total abandonment of judicial enforcement of such rcement is more effective and expeditious in the courts under 707 than it would be under EEOC cease-and-desist powers of 706.

Department of Justice—Employment Section of Civil Rights n—is better equipped. It possesses long-standing expertise, has able record in court, and follow-up proceedings by way of com- with court order is more certain and satisfactory.

BETTER EQUIPPED

1954 it has been handling litigation in courts on all phases of hts: voting, education, housing, public accommodations, and ment resulting in a broad experience in pattern or practice suits. s very significant by way of developing a "know how" on the the many resources in the Department of Justice available to loyment section.

resources are numerous and important. They are largely not able because they are integral working parts of an entire di- Civil Rights—and of the department itself.

So that when the pending bill provides that the resources, record unused appropriations, and so forth, be transferred from the Civil Rights Division, the employment section, to the Commission, there will be precious little that will be affected by that transfer. Certainly, the investigatory powers and capabilities of the FBI will not be transferred, nor of the U.S. attorneys, nor of the U.S. marshals; and I can go right down the line with a long list of these resources which will not be available—unfortunately, in some ways—to the Commission.

First, such resources include: 36 attorneys in the employment section—with an enviable record of securing favorable court decrees or orders in every case brought by them.

Second. Appeals Unit of Civil Rights Division, three attorneys.

Third, Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights Division; two deputy assistant attorneys general.

Fourth, U.S. district attorneys—plus 1,200 assistant attorneys located in 93 judicial districts, plus the branch offices within the districts.

Fifth, U.S. Marshal's Service: 1,400 operational persons—marshals and deputies—385 administrative people—364 persons on hourly wage.

Sixth, FBI agents and staff. It should be noted again that these resources are not transferable. Each is an integral part of a division or department. Each devotes a portion of their time to Title VII matters—not only in employment areas, but in education, voting public accommodations, housing, and related civil rights subjects.

To convert judicial enforcement to cease-and-desist procedures under section 706, would require a long period of time to acquire staff, procedures, and organization before EEOC could start functioning. The estimate of an interim of at least 3 years was testified to, before any EEOC would be able to obtain substantial numbers of enforceable orders under its section 706 cease-and-desist proceedings.

FAVORABLE COURT RECORD, UNDER SEC. 707 PATTERN OR PRACTICES SU

In October 1969, the Civil Rights Division was reorganized on a subject matter basis, rather than the previous geographic basis.

The newly created employment section became responsible for all Title VII enforcement and related activities under direction of the Assistant Attorney General and Attorney General.

Its record at reducing trial time of cases has been remarkable. Prior to July 1, 1969, 47 "pattern or practice" cases had been filed, but only 18 had been tried or settled by that date. Of the 57 such cases filed prior to January 1, 1971, all but seven had been settled or brought to hearings on the merits; and the Government prevailed in each of them.

The section's experience in the last 2 years has been that it usually obtains an effective, enforceable court order in less than a year from the time suit is filed.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES COMMISSION FAVORS PRESENT JUDICIAL PROCEDURES FOR PATTERN OR PRACTICE CASES (SEC. 707, TITLE VII

William Brown, Chairman of the Commission, testified before the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee. At page 58 of the hearings, he spoke on the subject of transfer of powers to the Commise very outset, he said:

el that such a transfer would not, at this time, be in the best interests of the ission and would not promote the most effective administration of Title VII.

pointed out, among other things, that 30,000 complaints will be during this fiscal year and that there is an estimate of 45,000 com- ts that will be filed in the coming fiscal year. He outlined many reasons why the transfer to the Commission would be inadvisable ould constitute, as he put it, an erosion of the enforcement powers tle VII of the Civil Rights Act.

pointed out that to subject pattern or practice suits to adminis- e remedies would be to cast them into the same role and class as ther complaint submitted to the Commission; that is, any com- t, individual in character, or one which does not partake of the e and scope of "pattern or practice" suits.

er all, there is a reason for a separate section (707) in Title o deal with pattern or practice suits. The reason is still valid and . Its essence is that such a situation embraces a much larger pro- n than an ordinary case or complaint.

pattern or practice suit typically involves large employers or unions. Also difficult legal questions which are diligently can- and urged by opposing sides. They are cases which are large, ex, and far-reaching.

ir importance goes beyond the issues of the instant case. It goes application of that case to subsequent lesser Title VII actions. decision serves as a precedent for like or similar situations, and be arrived at, and promulgated or disseminated, in appropriate n. The publication of official court decisions makes such available wide; not only as to the original case and judgment or decree, o as to supplementary proceedings which may be called for in se- enforcement and compliance. The capacity now resident in the ey General to go directly to the courts with such a case is le for maximum effectiveness.

as upon the foregoing considerations and others that Com- n Chairman William Brown III based his testimony, which n part:

S. 2515 as presently written, the power of the Attorney General to bring or practice suits, once transferred, becomes subject to the administrative s proposed in Section 4 of the Bill. This, in effect, minimizes the effective- he pattern or practice suits since they would become no different than any mplaint submitted to the Commission.

effectiveness of pattern or practice litigation is the result of the ability ustice Department to bring these large, far-reaching, and often very com- ts directly in courts. The importance of these suits has largely been the s which have resulted and which have set the precedents for subsequent itle VII actions.

lify this powerful and effective means whereby the courts can interpret ify the provisions of Title VII, while at the same time establishing new precedents applicable to other courts and administrative agencies alike, ot, in my judgment serve to promote the most effective administration of nployment. Page 58, Hearings.

as asked by the committee chairman in hearings as to whether mmission would have the competency and will to handle all the matter involved in S. 2515 as written, including the self- ng cease-and-desist orders embraced in the broadened respon- of the bill, the transfer of functions of the Office of Contract

Compliance, the transfer of the Civil Service Commission juris tion over Federal employees, the transfer of the pattern and prac provisions of the Department of Justice, and so forth. Here is answer (page 74, hearings):

Mr. Brown. Mr. Chairman, I certainly feel that the commission has the petency to handle these matters.

I would question at this time whether it has the ability in terms of resour that is, financial resources—or in terms of people.

I would be very much against the transfer, as I have indicated in my prep text, of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance responsibility at this ti

I would be against the transfer of Attorney General's right in Title V this time and also the responsibility of the Civil Service Commission to EEOC.

Still later in his testimony on this point, Commission Chair Brown stated:

One of the problems, as I have mentioned is the overwhelming backl cases and I should point out to the committee that this is true, notwithstan the fact that in the past fiscal year we have increased our ability to turn decisions at something like three times the rate of the previous year.

We have doubled the number of conciliations and predecision settle over the prior year but the number of cases coming into the Commissio continued to escalate at a very alarming rate and, as I have indicated ne current estimates for the fiscal 1972 are now over some 30,000 individual plaints coming in as opposed to the original estimate which was made last of 19,000 compliants being sent into the Commission.

As a matter of fact, in the budget which was submitted for fiscal year 197 anticipate some 45,000 new incoming charges of discrimination in fiscal year and I am told by some of my staff that may be a low estimate.

So, taking those figures into consideration—plus the fact that in some ca question the advisability of putting some of the provisions in this Commiss as it relates to the Office of Federal Contract Compliance—my position wou that I am not in favor of those transfers.

In summary, it can be said that Commission Chairman Brown posed section 5 of the bill to transfer the Attorney General's power the EEOC, on two broad grounds: The effectiveness of pattern practice suits would be minimized and impaired; and second, the o whelming burden of cases and their monumental backlog with inc ing volume of complaints for processing would make it most diff and inadvisable to handle additional duties such as those embrace the transfer in question.

There is still another reason why an erosion of enforcement of would occur if section 5 is enacted.

Enactment of section 5 of the bill would place all "pattern or p tice" cases under the cease-and-desist authority contained in sectio of the Civil Rights Act as amended. Such cease and-desist author complaint oriented. It was so devised and written to handle indivi cases with dispatch, with as little formality as possible, and so f So this fiscal year they will have some 32,000 complaints filed wit Commission. Next fiscal year they expect 45,000.

But pattern or practice authority is not a complaint ori authority.

The nature of pattern and practice authority is to investigate information that may come to attention that suggests patterns of crimination in a large company which may have many plants, divis or branches; or in a large labor union, or group of unions, or affiliates, with thousands of members and jobs involved; or in a tire industry, with many companies and unions. There the necessity determine complex and difficult questions of law, fact, and remto render a decision or decree; and be prepared to engage in subsequent proceedings as necessary to insure full compliance.

ips by supplementary relief, or maybe by way of contempt of orders.

h imposing, far-reaching, and extended proceedings would be difficult if not impossible for an administrative body to handle as igator, prosecutor, and judge. If it could be done at all, it would for a long time that it could start producing substantial num-f cases, and then not very effectively and not very well.
se latter points have already been covered in my remarks as to me involved—3 years at least—according to testimony in the l.

President, in summarizing, I might say that the judicial en-ment provided in section 707 as pesently effected should be re-
. These practices have worked well. The attorneys assigned to the have been backed by the substantial prestige of the Department stice and all the resources of that Department. These resources e existent talent possessed by the FBI, the U.S. marshals, the s unit of the department of the U.S. attorneys located, together re is a highly effective law enforcement operation under this ement under Title VII. It is submitted that this record fully its continuation of that operation, whether the Commission n enforcement power or not and whether such power that they en will be judicial or administrative. That record is very signal.

g other things, it was pointed out that in the last year and a half of the dozen or so cases which were tried and disposed of—con-, as they call it—11 were concluded within 11 months after the f the complaint in the court. So that, together with many other s, would argue persuasively for the retention of section 707 as ently exists in the law in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. It also argue persuasively that section V of the pending bill be deleted in its entirety to accomplish that result.

PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Brock). Without objection, it is so .

ERVIN. Mr. President, several years ago I stated on the floor of ate that the constant agitation about racial matters was im- our national sanity. If we needed any proof of the accuracy of tement, such proof is furnished abundantly in the pending re there is a proposal to give to five bureaucrats, who are elected dy to do anything and who are responsible to nobody on the he earth, powers greater than those that the courts and the laws nited States impose on the office of President.

r the pending bill, these five men would have virtually auto- owers to do virtually anything in the employment field. I say virtually autocratic powers because this bill is very skillfully drawn make it impossible as nearly as human language will permit for courts to reverse any decision made by these five men.

There is an old adage which expresses the most fundamental truth on the subject of juris prudence, and that is that out of the facts all law arises.

Mr. President, if I have the power to write the verdict in a case I do not care who writes the judgment, because the judgment has to follow the verdict.

My distinguished friend, the Senator from New Jersey, said, while quoting a man who knew better, Professor Wigmore, that the rule requiring a preponderance of evidence in a civil case is a vague rule.

With all due respect to Dean Wigmore's spirit, I would say that is an absurdity. Every day between the time we awake until the time we seek repose in slumber, we make many decisions on the basis of the preponderance of the evidence available to us. We certainly do not make our decisions on the basis of less than the preponderance of the evidence. We weigh all of the evidence, and then the evidence which weighs most heavily in our minds and has more convincing force is the evidence we follow.

Some years ago we started setting up administrative agencies with judicial or quasi-judicial powers. And these executive agencies were very loathe to have their opinions and ruling tested in the courts. When they first started passing laws to allow them to be reviewed in the courts, these executive agencies were able to persuade the Congress of the United States to adopt what is known as the substantial evidence rule. The substantial evidence rule is embodied in the pending bill.

What is the substantial evidence rule? Substantial evidence is more evidence more than a scintilla. And it has been defined in the courts many times to be less than the preponderance of the evidence. The preponderance of the evidence is the evidence which shows that an allegation is probably true or probably false.

Yet, when I offered an amendment before the Senate of the United States to the pending bill to provide that the courts should be free in the findings of fact made by a crusading board when the evidence showed that those findings of fact were probably untrue, the Senate rejected the amendment. The amendment provided that the courts would not be bound by the findings of fact unless those findings of fact were supported by the preponderance of the evidence. That means in simple English, that the court would not be compelled to abdicate the exercise of its mental faculties and to do such violence to justice as to be bound by the findings of fact based upon the evidence which showed that that the findings of fact were probably not true.

I have said here and I reiterate that those who back the pending bill wish to make it virtually impossible for a court to reverse the findings of the Commission. The crucial thing that is involved here is that no man should be hailed before a court by a commission or be compelled to go to court to escape a judgment of the Commission if that man, that employer, has fully complied with the law and has not practiced discrimination in any respect.

Yet, under the pending bill, the Commission can hail that man into court or compel him to go to court. And that man is denied the opportunity to disprove the very thing for which he has been unjustly hailed into court or unjustly compelled to go to court.

y do I say that? I say that because the pending bill provides that the Commission can do anything of an affirmative nature out-f investigating, it must attempt conciliation and must attempt to ade the employer whom they charge with discriminating to take se of action which does not discriminate. That is a condition lent to the right of the Commission to take any action at all or to any findings of fact or to make any recommendations or to a judgment which impels an employer to seek relief in this roo proceeding which makes a mockery of justice; and yet this ovides that although a man has not discriminated and although mmission is trying to make him do more than the law requires, lenied the right to prove that in the court, and he is denied the o show that the condition precedent to any action on the part of mmission has taken place.

provision is found on page 38 starting with line 7:

Commission determines after attempting to secure voluntary compliance ubsection (b) that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliаeement acceptable to the Commission, which determination shall not be ble in any court—

, mind you, Mr. President, it does not say if they shall fail to agreement complying with the law, but an agreement which is tory to the whims and caprices of the Commission. Then, it determination shall not be reviewable in any court.

is just another one of the things to show that this bill is not so oncerned with obtaining justice, but with imposing the notions EEOC as to what policy is desirable upon a people who have not l the law. If it had been done for any other purpose it would id:

Commission determines that it is unable to secure from the respondent tion agreement complying with the law—of the whims and caprices of the Commission. That is the way l have been phrased.

n ought to have the right in any litigation to show that the exist.

l that this bill would give these five men more power than the nt of the United States has because under this bill they could any State government, any county government, any school dis-d they could actually appoint the officials there. This is the first it I have ever heard it advocated in the Senate that the Senate ss a bill whose cosponsors do not know what it means. I have y good friend from New Jersey the meaning of the provision ference to State employees of political subdivisions of States, re it stops. He admits there is no limitation in the bill. I asked nguished Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft)—I am sorry he is not hat protection the people in State government have against the f it told them that the Governor, whom the people of the State ted, had been elected by them because of his race, or religion, nal origin; and he said we had protection in the courts under antee of the Constitution that the United States should guarvery State a republican form of government.

Mr. President, I read all the decisions under that provision, and t courts of the United States have nothing to do with that provisi They cannot entertain any case to secure an interpretation of th provision, and they cannot entertain a case which is designed to fi whether a State has a republican form of government.

The decisions state that there is a political power which belongs Congress and Congress alone, and that, therefore, whatever Congr does must be accepted by everybody as being a republican form government within the meaning of the Constitution. So there is remedy there.

I say this is the most far-reaching bill that has been proposed to Co gress since George Washington took his first oath of office as Preside because it gives this Commission absolute power, with no review exc the sort of kangaroo proceeding imposed on the courts, which are nied the right to find according to what the evidence states is probab true.

What does it say about States? It says that a State is an employ Then, they define an employee as a person who is employed by an e ployer. That is already established on that point. Then, Mr. Preside you go to the dictionary to find out what an employer is, and it sta he is a person or concern that employs another, usually for compens tion, wages, or salary.

So under that definition the Governor of a State, although he elected by the people of the State, would be an employee of the Sta This gives the Commission jurisdiction to deny any man, whether h a Governor or a State supreme court justice or a State legislator, t office to which he has been elected by the people of his State or his d trict or county. Why do I say that? The bill states expressly tha State is an employer. It confers jurisdiction over every employer. gives them jurisdiction over every employee of a State or politi subdivision. Now, what is a State?

The court said in the celebrated case of Texas against White:

> A State, in the ordinary sense of the Constitution, is a political communit free citizens occupying a territory of defined boundaries and organized und government sanctioned and limited by a written constitution and established the consent of the governed.

In other words, it will be noted that the salient thing is that it political community of free citizens. They no longer will be free c zens if this bill passes because we will have a Federal agency that supersede them in the selection of their officials and employees. A there is not a man in the Senate whom I have been able to discover y can point to anything in this bill which subjects it to a semblance any other interpretation.

This amendment would remove from the jurisdiction of the C mission the power to determine which persons are to be employe physicians and surgeons in hospitals. Mr. President, if there is a thing which shows what absurd lengths this bill goes to, it is the po it gives the Commission to determine which persons a hospital s select to perform surgery, or which persons it shall select to be m bers of its medical staff. There never has been, according to my der tanding, a single doctor on this Commission. Its members are more competent to pass on the qualifications of surgeons and ph cians than I am to perform the functions of an archangel.

bill would make every public hospital and every private hoshat employed as many as 15 persons, subject to the jurisdiction Commission.

re is one other thing that has caused this country much diviss and has caused this country much consternation and much il, and that is the fact that we now have, in addition to local boards, which should be allowed to select principals and teach-d superintendents, two Federal agencies which are exercising ower—the U.S. district courts and the U.S. courts of appeals e Supreme Court of the United States. In addition to that, we ne Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. And this bill, first time, would place jurisdiction over the employment of all superintendents, all school principals, all school supervisors, all eachers in every one of the 50 States, in the Commission. They say who were to be hired and who were to be fired and who e promoted and who could not be promoted. They could say, ecause of any external act that you committed which was il-ut we find that although you did a legal external act, you had roper motive in your heart when you did it."

r this bill, the Commission could order school boards to hire teachers and pay them back salaries for the time they did not pass this bill quicker than we have?" I think I can answer that. some people in the United States are finding out that there ast a few men who will stand up on the floor of the Senate and r freedom for the people of America. They will fight for the

They will fight for the freedom of school boards to select their

he persons whom he thinks are most likely to make his busi-ture a success rather than a failure.

President, the bill before us would place the employment practhe 50 States under the jurisdiction, as I have said of five men not elected by anybody to do anything, and who are not ble to anybody for anything they do, and whose actions can-ffectively reviewed by courts of justice. I say this because the s the courts of justice in a straitjacket and compels them to t the decrees of the board by accepting their findings of fact, ough the evidence may show that those findings of fact are not true. So this bill would give five men on that Commis-re power than the President of the United States possesses.

mendment offered by the distinguished Senator from North would exempt from the coverage of the law, as it would be ill passes, all hospitals, public and private, in the hiring of ns and surgeons, and in doing so it would be saying affirmaat hospitals, in their selection of physicians and surgeons, can nate against a person because of his race, color, religion, sex, nal origin.

This amendment, I suggest to my colleagues of the Senate, i from new cloth. It is different from the other amendments we had. It goes to some fundamental principles. When we were ta about the preponderance of evidence when we were talking abo tending coverage to State and local governments, that was one th but we cannot exempt hospitals, in the selection of physicians surgeons, from the dictates of the Constitution and the basic against discrimination. I think that we would be stepping back years, and I am most strongly opposed to this amendment.

The amendment would mean that a physician, fully qualified accredited by appropriate State and national authorities, coul denied employment with a hospital simply on the basis of race, religion, sex, or national origin and be unable to appeal to the E Employment Opportunity Commission for relief. There is no log this proposed amendment. It is not based on any showing of need is contrary to the present law and policy of this Nation with re to equal employment opportunities.

We have seen, during the course of debate on S. 2515, that mi ties and women have been, and continue to be, denied access to h level and professional job categories. The medical profession, I re offers no exception to this pattern of discrimination.

The 1971 American Medical Association publication, Relative on the Profile of Medical Practices, shows that only 2.2 percent of Nation's 334,000 physicians are black.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that only 7 percent of al physicians in this country are women.

There are, of course, many factors which contribute to underut tion and discrimination in the medical profession, such as the enrollment of minorities and women in medical schools.

However, the availability of employment opportunities for mi ties and women is a key factor. A substantial number of the physi considered employed by public and private hospitals are interns residents. Intern and resident programs are essential elements physician's medical education, and are the basis for training i various specialized fields of medicine.

Statistics collected by the Department of Health, Educatio Welfare show a very serious underrepresentation of minor Among interns and residents employed by reporting hospitals, 1,047, or 2.2 percent, were black. Although the number of black creased over the 1966 total—860 out of 34,188 were black—the pr tion of blacks declined from the 1966 proportion of 3.5 percent.

I might point out that in the State of North Carolina in 1969, o out of 883—0.5 percent—interns and residents were black. In Ala only 3 out of 384—0.8 percent—were black.

Further, a significant proportion of physicians in this Natio considered "hospital based." According to statistics compiled b American Medical Association, some 31 percent of the over 319,0 fee doctors in this country work out of hospitals rather than p offices.

We must assure that access to these positions in hospitals is on ability, rather than on arbitrary and capricious qualifications as race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

se figures, I believe, dramatically show why it is important to employment of physicians by private and public hospitals the jurisdiction of EEOC.

ddition, the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Carolina is wholly in conflict with the general need recognized h public and private groups for more female and minority s.

American Medical Association and the Department of Health, ion, and Welfare have established a goal to increase the num- blacks enrolled in medical schools to 12 percent of the total l school enrollment by 1975.

Comprehensive Manpower Training Act—Public Law 92-157— during the first session of the 92d Congress, would provide l assistance for medical training. Title VI of the Civil Rights 1964 assures that this assistance is available to all without to race, color, religion, or national origin. A special section o the manpower legislation assures that no person be denied as- because of sex.

le justice demands that employment be equally available with- crimination to students who have completed their formal on.

ly, the exemption proposed by the distinguished Senator would lear conflict with the Constitution and existing Federal law equires that opportunities for employment at publicly sup- nospitals be available to all on an equal basis. The amount of financial assistance in the field of health care is substantial. 947 over $12 billion in Hill-Burton funds have been spent for truction of health facilities.

98 percent of the general and specialty hospitals in this coun- ive some form of Federal assistance for health services. In ar 1971, 31 percent of the money spent on health care was Fed- ney—"The Size and Shape of the Medical Care Dollar," So- urity Administration, 1971.

know, the Constitution and Title VI impose a legal obligation Federal agencies to assure that Federal assistance be available cipients on an equal basis. HEW has taken several steps to as- the hospitals which receive Federal assistance be available to ients on an equal basis, and comply with Title VI.

Department has determined that protection of the rights of the beneficiaries of Federal assistance, the patients, requires that onal staff members, including physicians, be employed on a iminatory basis.

while the amendment by the distinguished Senator may create otion under Title VII for physicians employed by hospitals, the tion and Title VI would compel that employment remain avail- nondiscriminatory basis.

resident, I said earlier that this amendment, in my judgment, ll this country back 100 years. Certainly we have seen the dis- ion within the last 100 years that it would permit. I was vis- ny office, before coming over to the Senate floor, by a very shed former Governor of the State of New Jersey, who is very his Irish ancestry.

I asked Dick Hughes:

Dick, I have heard stories that in this country at one time there wer signs out where there were jobs available that no Irish need apply. was that, in the last century?"

He said:

No, it wasn't. It was a lot more recent than that.

My administrative assistant, Ben Palumbo, is of Italian ance I asked him:

I have heard that people with names ending in "o" indicating Italian ground have been discriminated against on that basis. When was tha years ago?"

He said:

My father says it was a lot more recent than that.

Irish, Italians, Jewish people, and women—these are the peop whom we are trying to give an equal opportunity. The mayo one of America's great southern cities shocked everyone not long when he suggested to his constituents that they "think black." W he meant by that was that his white constituency should try to u stand the feelings and the thinking of the black man.

As I stand here leading the debate on this measure, I try to t as a young person who has gone through that long, hard, and pensive trail to be the graduate of a medical school, be he ma woman, black or white, or whatever national ancestry. I say th this Nation, which so badly needs doctors, it would be a terrible if because of ethnic background, sex, race, or religion, the Amer people were denied the services of that new doctor.

That is exactly what this amendment would do. It would from a doctor the protection that the Constitution gives him would protect through this law. I think it would be against all this country holds itself up to be, in an area of one of our gre needs.

Right now, in the central city in New York City, there is one d for every 2,000 to 3,000 people. Rural America is crying for doc Yet this amendment would eliminate opportunities for those already tend to be shut out because of their race, religion, se national origin. This amendment stands out among all those pro as representing exactly the opposite of what we should be do this country, which is opening up opportunities for everyo strongly oppose the amendment.

The Presiding Officer. Does the Senator from New J yield time to the Senator from New York?

Mr. Williams. Mr. President, I yield the floor. I yield the Se such time as he may need, within our limitation.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I have heard with the greatest pl the statement of the Senator from New Jersey on this amend Interestingly, it seems to have roused him as almost no other a ment has, and I was very pleased to detect the note of indig with which he addressed himself to this subject.

Mr. President, I shall not endeavor to go over the same gr the Senator did superbly. I do have, however, one or two other I wish to raise.

, this amendment is so completely regressive that it does not to undo what is in this bill, but it tries to undo what we did ill passed 8 years ago, in 1964. That is what the amendment ted to. It proposes to undo a measure we enacted in 1964, which we have heard no complaints. There have been a great rguments here about the fact that this, that, or the other n has worked out in an oppressive way, but I have not heard word said about the measure having worked out in an op-way as to doctors and surgeons.

matter of fact, it was one of the most striking evidences of ination that discrimination against doctors was exercised even itals which were largely patronized by blacks. That was one nost sensational aspects of the debate in 1964. So that is one Mr. President: An effort is being made to undo a measure ther point, which I think is critically important, is that every e Senator from New Jersey has said about continuing dis-ion up until very, very recent times in respect of race and igin and color, as well as sex, is true.

ntally, I had that in my own family. My father was an nt from middle Europe in about the late 1880's, and I am gh to know the discrimination which was practiced, overtly antly, through many of my adult years in respect to ent.

f the things that those discriminated against have resented is that they are relegated to the position of the sawers of d the drawers of water; that only the blue collar jobs and ging jobs are reserved for them; and that though they built and certainly helped build it enormously in the days of its struction, they cannot ascend the higher rungs in professional r life.

be remembered that one of the most cruel aspects of discrimwas the quota system practiced in many American universities ame to doctors. It was the reason for the establishment of the instein College of Medicine, one of the great colleges of medie United States, in the city of New York. It involved a tre-reaction. The first revolt within academic ranks on the part ts and faculty, as well as the general public, came when these is amendment would go back beyond decades of struggle and ce, and reinstate the possibility of discrimination on grounds origin, color, sex, religion—just confined to physicians or sure of the highest rungs of the ladder that any member of a could attain—and thus lock in and fortify the idea that being or a surgeon is just too good for members of a minority, and have to be subject to discrimination in respect of it, and the aw will not protect them.

very much, almost in self-respect, that the Senate will reject this amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I understand, I appreciate, and I a with everything the Senator from New York has said.

Down deep in my heart, I do not believe that the sponsor of amendment intends to do what this amendment actually wou There are those of us who come from nationalities that have bee criminated against in one form or another, at one time or anothe particularly by our immigration laws. Our parents have under grave injustices, inequities, and discriminations that violat very spirit of the Constitution.

I remember a time in my own State when individuals of ce racial extraction could not gain an internship in some of our hosp Today they accept them freely. But it was a hard road to recogni I know the experience of one individual in particular. Today he i of the greatest surgeons in this country. At the time I speak of, he refused an internship in a certain hospital. Later, that very hos begged him to come there to lecture—but by then he had become renowned in his profession of medicine. That goes to prove that ac ance was not a matter of qualifications at all.

No one here questions the right of any hospital or any medica thority to reject anybody, regardless of the color of his skin, or m bership in any minority group, if the applicant is not qualified. is not the question. All we are saying is that where all qualifica are met, please do not put certain groups under the burden of pro that they are twice as good in order to be considered equal. Th what we are trying to avoid. Equality is equality, under any stand and that is the one test that should be used in America. If yo any other test, you violate the very spirit of the Declaration of I pendence. It was written indelibly, not only on paper, not mer words, but as the will and the way in the hearts of all people believe in freedom. I hope that that indelibility will indeed e eternally in this great Nation of ours, and I hope the day never c when for any reason any person who is fully qualified will be criminated against because of the color of his skin or because he c from southeastern Europe or from any other part of the world. T of course, would be an injustice that America must consider in able.

For that reason I oppose this amendment—with all due resp the Senator who sponsors it. I know he is a man of good heart. H humanitarian, completely and in every respect, and I do not thi intends to do what this amendment would do—I hope that the a ment will be rejected.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I would add one prayer to that s quently uttered by Senator PASTORE: that even if he and I are no as ultimately we cannot be, the spirit of our immigrant forebears be voiced by someone on the floor of the Senate for as long as Nation may endure.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the or for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state i

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Chair please rule on whether the amend submitted by the junior Senator from Alabama is in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from A bama is in order.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, may I inquire of the tinguished Senator from Alabama as to whether he would be wi to enter into a time limit on his amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. I would be delighted to do so.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. What would the Senator suggest

Mr. ALLEN. I would say 1 hour, to be equally divided.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous con that time on the pending amendment be limited to 1 hour to be eq divided between the mover of the amendment and the manager of bill; that time on any amendment in the second degree, debatable tion, appeal, or point of order be limited to 10 minutes to be eq divided between the mover of such and the manager of the bill; that the time on any amendment to the amendment, debatable mo appeal, or point of order come out of the time allotted to the am ment in the first degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the S tor from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordere

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the amendment which I have just to the desk for myself and the distinguished senior Senator from N Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) would knock from the bill one phrase, as lows: On page 38, beginning on line 10, "which determination s not be reviewable in any court."

This bill as introduced and as amended by the committee empo this Commission to act as court, jury, investigator, and prosecuto rolled into one. It provides that if the Commission at the outset o complaint and its investigation determines it is unable to secure v tary compliance from the respondent under a conciliation agree acceptable to the Commission, which determination shall not be r able in any court, then this would knock out that phrase "whic termination shall not be reviewable in any court."

Mr. President, the inclusion of this phrase in this section, giving Commission the authority to make this determination without ap view, is typical of the arrogance of the Commission, which was st as a conciliation agency, which has been in existence for some 7 y or more, and which now seeks the power not only to investigate plaints but also to file charges, to hear the charges, to reach a de ation, to issue an order, and then to have the power to enforce those ers.

t does not desire any control over its activity. It inserts the phrase n reference to a determination of whether compliance under section of this section can be obtained. The purpose of the amendment is rike from the bill this one phrase.

Mr. President, I have previously discussed in great detail many of inherent dangers and evils of S. 2515.

n my discussions of the bill, I have strongly denounced and critid the fact that the legislation would violate the Constitution by owering the Federal Government to interfere with the basic and damental functions of State and local governments by dictating r employment practices. I say again that the States' power over employment functions is not only basic, but essential to the very ence of State sovereignty. If we deprive the States of their basic tions, it is pointless for anyone to maintain that we have a dual of government.

my discussions of the bill, I have strongly denounced and cried the fact that the legislation would violate the very first item of irst article of the Bill of Rights by empowering the Federal Gov-ent to interfere with the free exercise of religion by dictating st all of the employment practices of church-supported educal institutions. I say again that it would be difficult to imagine any ice more at odds with the idea of religious liberty than to say that rst amendment left it open to the Federal Government to compel h-supported schools at every level of education to capitulate the ral Government's secular concept of "equal employment oppory." If this is not true, the first amendment is but an empty pledge ssed in idle words.

my discussions of the bill, I have strongly denounced and cri-
d the fact that the legislation is a direct assault upon the free prise system. The bill brings within its orbit every employer hav-ight or more employees and every labor union having eight or members. Thus, the small businessman, already overburdened, l encounter new regulations, investigations, hearings and appeals yond his time, his energy, or his finances. If this bill becomes law, of the most cherished benefits which organized labor has attained last four decades would no longer become matters of right but automatically become matters of administrative grace to be out by EEOC bureaucrats as rewards for good behavior or eld as punishment when any union does not comply with their ds.

ny discussions of the bill, I have strongly denounced and criti-the fact that the legislation would give judicial function to the Employment Opportunity Commission by permitting it to order dents to "cease and desist" from alleged unfair employment ces with such orders subject only to limited review in a U.S. court peals. To vest in a single Federal agency the prerogative of bring-charge, then investigating it, then trying the case, while at the ime sitting in judgment on it, and then enforcing its own find-alien to guaranteed and fundamental principles of due process.
n absolute contradiction with all that our constitutional system
ls.

Mr. President, time and again throughout this debate we have heard the proponents of S. 2515 state, indeed insist, that Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 has not been a success. That is the title setting up the EEOC. We have been told that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has been weak, innocuous, and behind in its work because it did not have cease-and-desist power. It has been pointed out to the Senate repeatedly that the EEOC is only a paper tiger because employers, employment agencies, and labor unions have refused to cooperate with the Commission in its mandate under Title VII to conciliate charges of unfair employment practices found to be supported by facts adduced by EEOC investigations. All of these arguments have been made on the premise that the EEOC has diligently and faithfully endeavored to discharge its statutory obligation to attempt to conciliate unfair employment practice charges.

The language which we seek to strike out makes any decision it reaches with regard to whether the employer, the respondent, is pacified and whether a conciliation agreement can be reached, nonreviewable by any court whatsoever.

In listening to these arguments and the many statistics which have been presented to substantiate them, I became interested in the facts of the record. I wondered, Mr. President, just how the Commission has performed its conciliation role which all agree is the keystone of Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. I submit, Mr. President, that, on the basis of the EEOC's own figures, the answer is a dismal one.

For example, in the Commission's fourth annual report—its report for the 1969 fiscal year—the Commission determined that 12,63[illegible] charges warranted investigation, but completed investigation in only 7,543 of them. At the conciliation stage, the EEOC's total workload of cases was only 3,329 or 21 percent of the EEOC's total workload. Finally, the conciliation efforts of the EEOC were "fully successful" in only 486 cases—less than 15 percent of its conciliation caseload and less than 2 percent of the cases earmarked by it for investigation and conciliation. The report further states that EEOC conciliation efforts were "partially successfull"—whatever that means—in 90 cases and wholly unsuccessful in 729 cases during the 1969 fiscal year.

Looking at the Commission's fifth annual report—its report for the 1970 fiscal year—the Commission determined that 16,348 cases warranted investigation, but it completed investigations in only 5,0[illegible] of them. At the conciliation stage, the EEOC's total workload of cases was only 2,956 or 18 percent of the EEOC's total workload. Finally, the conciliation efforts of the EEOC were fully successful in only 342 cases—less than 15 percent of its conciliation workload and less than 3 percent earmarked by it for investigation and conciliation. The report further states that EEOC conciliation efforts were partially unsuccessful in 105 cases and wholly unsuccessful in 732 cases.

Mr. President, a record so devoid of accomplishments quite naturally raises sharp questions. Why is the EEOC conciliation caseload so low in relation to its total caseload? Why is the Commission so singularly unsuccessful in its achievements in the conciliation area—the very area to which the Congress specifically directed it to devote its energies under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act?

As I have previously stated, advocates of cease and desist authority for the Commission have pointed to the record I have just discussed evidence of employer recalcitrance and a general unwillingness cooperate in achieving equal employment opportunity objectives. leed, the Commission itself has not hesitated to suggest the same ng, and at the same time stamp its feet and cry for an expansion its powers, including the right to issue orders enforceable against pondents in the employment field.

At that point I might point out that the proponents of the bill state t the EEOC now has approximately 1,000 employees; that in the t 2 or 3 years it is anticipated they are going to build up the num- of employees to where they will have approximately 2,000 em- vees.

That seems to be a quality, an attribute, or a feature of all govern- nt agencies with which I am familiar; they want to grow in size, y want to be more important, they want to exercise more functions, y want to get more people under their control, they want to have ater jurisdiction, they want to be able to order more people around. o here is a case, directly in point, of the expansion of the Federal eaucracy; this is an example of mushrooming Federal bureauc- ; it is an example of another invasion by the Federal Govern- t of the rights and everyday lives of the citizens of this country. r. President, it is not often that we in the Senate have an oppor- ty to strike a greater blow at Federal bureaucracy, and a greatly nding one at that, than we have with our vote on this bill, which titutes a power grab on behalf of the Equal Employment Oppor- ty Commission.

es; we can strike a blow at increased Federal expenditures; we strike a blow at the tendency of the Federal Government to take the rights of our citizens, because under this bill the EEOC is g to have control of employment practices of States, counties, the agencies of local government.

e have a chance, by standing firm, with respect to this bill by vot- against any effort to cut off debate on this important issue, by vot- against any effort to apply gag rule in the Senate.

his amendment would make the bill somewhat better. This amend- would make it subject to some control in making its determina- , subject to some oversight, and not allowing it to be a complete unto itself.

r. President, on page 1 of the EEOC fourth annual report for 969 fiscal year, we find the unadorned and unexplained statement "the Commission continued to be limited by a lack of enforce- power."

submit, Mr. President, that mediocre accomplishments of the l Opportunity Commission and its failure to achieve a better liation record is due in large measure to the Commission's simple al to carry out the congressional mandate set forth in Title VII e Civil Rights Act of 1964.

rther evidence of the Commission's misfeasance in failing to ientiously carry out its statutory mandate to achieve conciliation nfair employment practices charges may be found in its own ations. A cursory review of the legislative history of Title VII fically shows that the Congress intended that the filing of law- by aggrieved individuals would be a "last resort" after the mission has exhausted its conciliation efforts.

This desirable objective has been thwarted and frustrated by Commission procedures which permit the filing of lawsuits by charging parties without any finding of probable cause by the Commission and without any efforts on its part to conciliate at all.

This Commission has been operating for more than 7 years. They contend they have been doing a good job. They come in every year and apply for an appropriation; and I assume in support of that appropriation they point out what a good job they are doing and why they need more money to operate the Department. But, Mr. President, I point out that the Commission has not needed enforcement powers during the 7 years of its existence, so why should the proponents of this measure tie up the business of the Senate with this measure which seeks to give this Commission the authority to issue and enforce its own laws? Where is due process? There is none. There is no due process.

Mr. President, I commend the distinguished present occupant of the Chair, the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Cotton), for the valuable contribution he made to the amedment of this bill. The bill originally provided that the number of employees that an employer had to have to be covered by the bill would be reduced from the present law of 25 down to eight. The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire pointed out that that would bring under the control and operation of the Commission very small employers, employers who are already subject to so much Government redtape, already subject to so much Federal bureaucracy oversight, already subject to heavy taxation, and that to be harassed by this Commission would in all likelihood crowd these small businesses to the wall. Out of the goodness of their hearts the managers of the bill were willing to raise this number for required coverage after the several speeches by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, from eight to 15.

That might not sound like a whole lot but it will prevent literally tens of thousands of small employers from coming under the oppressive provisions of this bill; and a great contribution was made by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Cotton). I commend him on his activity in that regard.

I should like to call to the attention of the Senate that section 1601.25a(c) of the EEOC's procedural regulations states that:

> At any time after the expiration of sixty (60) days from the date of the filing of a charge . . . the charging party or the respondent may demand in writing that a notice issue pursuant to section 1601.25 and the Commission shall promptly issue such notice . . .

Section 1601.25, however, provides that such notice shall issue:

> In any instance in which the Commission is unable to obtain voluntary compliance as provided by Title VII, and that the notice shall include . . . (b) a copy of the Commission's determination of reasonable cause.

Alabama employers and their counsel with whom I have discussed this matter have advised me that, despite the specific language of section 1601.25 and of the act itself, the Commission as a matter of practice continues to issue so-called suit letters in any case in which a charging party requests even though no "probable cause" determination has occurred and no attempt to conciliate has been made by the Commission.

All of this goes to say, Mr. President, that a charging party to date s been able to bring suit on his claim even though the Commission never rendered a probable-cause decision in his case and no—epeat—no conciliation has occurred. Because of this fact, we readily from the figures I cited just a few minutes ago why only a very cases reach the conciliation stage at all. Thus, the most important e of the Commission under Title VII—conciliator—is deliberately arted by its own regulations and apparent blase attitude to the ressed congressional judgment that conciliation is not only the ferred method for eliminating employment discrimination, but that conciliation efforts of charges were intended to be a con-on precedent to the bringing of individual lawsuits.
t is obvious that the EEOC to date has had only limited conciliа-experience. It is apparent, too, that the Commission, on the onstrable record, is according only perfunctory significance to its iliation role because of its continuing obsession with obtaining Congress the power to issue coercive cease-and-desist orders. resumably, the Commission well knows that a major failure on art to conciliate will lend strength to efforts to obtain for it ceasedesist authority.
nciliation, Mr. President, can and should work. I know that ama employers have, by and large, sincerely tried to comply both the letter and spirit of Title VII. I am convinced that only y low percentage of conciliation failures with Alabama employers e to the latter's recalcitrance. hat I am trying to say, Mr. President, is that conciliation will given a fair opportunity, if, and when, the EEOC seriously sincerely "gets with it." Instead of conferring additional admin-tive power and authority upon the EEOC as the bill before us rastically attempts to do, what we really should be doing is to ly remind the Commission of its statutory obligation to attempt nciliate every appropriate case.
m confident that the end result will be a heartening increase in the number of conciliations attempted and the number of con-ion agreements achieved; in short, the kind of progress which Congress intended and expected when it passed the act 8 years

. President, how much time do I have remaining?
e PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2½ minutes remaining.
. ALLEN. I reserve the remainder of my time.
e PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the ion of the amendment. Does any Senator yield time?
. ALLEN. Mr. President, in the absence of Senators representing oponents of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that I may suggest bsence of a quorum with the time on the quorum call to be ly charged to both sides.
e PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair none, and it is so ordered.
e clerk will call the roll.
e legislative clerk proceeded to call the role.
. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order
e quorum call be rescinded.
. PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield the Senator from New York 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, as we understand the amendment—we have sought to analyze it quickly in the time which has been made available—it seeks to provide a court review where the Commission rejects, or is unable to secure, a conciliation agreement from the respondent.

We can hardly conceive seeking to deprive the Commission of the opportunity to use its judgment, through court review, to endeavor to obtain a conciliation agreement or to substitute a court for it in deciding a conciliation agreement is acceptable. We come to the conclusion that that is what the amendment means when it says if the Commission determines—that is, the determination after attempting to secure voluntary compliance under subsection (b)—that it is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission.

Therefore, it seems to us that if this amendment is adopted, the words "acceptable to the Commission" might just as well be stricken because if the Commission is not permitted to determine that it is unable to secure a conciliation agreement, certainly one is not going to stultify the Commission and demand that it accept one which is not acceptable to it. Therefore, the determination becomes meaningless.

It seems to me that if we are going to give them the power of entering into a conciliation agreement at all, it has got to be one which they regard as acceptable, and not one mandated upon them by a court. So, if the amendment is to prevail, the whole clause ought to be stricken and the statement just ought to be that if the Commission determines, after attempting to secure voluntary compliance to subsection (b), that it cannot secure voluntary compliance, then it may go ahead and issue a complaint, or—if the Senate decides tomorrow to vote on the substantive matter—if it has got to sue, that it then can go ahead and sue.

I cannot see how one can expect the Commission to stultify itself by being subject to an order of the court that it is able rather than unable to secure a conciliation agreement acceptable to it. I emphasize that the amendment does not seek to strike those words. They remain in the clause.

So it seems to be that the words "which determination shall not be reviewable in any court," if we strike those out, now that they have occurred, it would simply stultify the Commission as well as the process. Our understanding of what is sought to be done here may be incorrect, but that is the way it seems to us, Mr. President.

For those reasons, as we wish to favor rather than frustrate conciliation with respect to activities of the Commission, and most of the cases—the overwhelming majority, are settled as a result of conciliation agreements, and since there is no compulsion on the respondent he does not have to enter into the conciliation agreement in any way, shape or form—it seems to me that the determination which the amendment would carry out is quite inappropriate, and that the Senate should reject the amendment.

Ir. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. he PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for the quorum call will come out he Senator's time.
he clerk will call the roll.
he legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.
Ir. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the er for the quorum call be rescinded.
he PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. How h time does the Senator yield himself?
Ir. WILLIAMS. I yield myself 5 minutes.
Ir. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
he PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.
Ir. WILLIAMS. How much time remains on this amendment?
he PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has 21 min-remaining, and that is all the time that is left on the amendment.
other side has used all of its time.
r. WILLIAMS. In the time that the author of the amendment had xplain the amendment, it was not fully made clear to me just tly what the amendment encompasses and what the basic result d be if this amendment should prevail. I wonder if I could impose the Senator from Alabama to ask him one or two questions.
r. ERVIN. Mr. President, I think I can answer the Senator's ques-
, if the Senator will yield me time.
r. WILLIAMS. Yes. Under present law, in the situation where the mission is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation ment that is acceptable to the Commission, is that a decision or a tion that is reviewable in a court of law?
r. ERVIN. It would be if it was prohibited by the bill, surely. It is dition precedent to the Commission taking any action. It is a con-precedent to the court having jurisdiction that the Commission have attempted to effect a conciliation agreement conforming law. That is a condition precedent, and ordinarily a man would a right to raise it in court as a defense.
r example, an employer who, we will assume, is willing to make reement complying with the law, which in full complies with the ut the Commission is not willing to accept it. The bill would pre-he court from inquiring into the matter.
other words, the Commission, by demanding more than the law res, could say, "They have not come to an agreement satisfactory e Commission," and no one on earth could dispute it in court.
. WILLIAMS. At what time is this failure to arrive at an agree-reviewable in court?
. ERVIN. Well, under the bill it would not be reviewable at all.
. WILLIAMS. Without reference to that, but under the law as it , is it the Senator's judgment——
ERVIN. Does the Senator mean under the 1964 act?
WILLIAMS. Yes.
ERVIN. No, the 1964 act was written just as this act is being n, for the purpose of preventing a court from determining what uth is.
I say, a court cannot even inquire into the matter. The court can-en inquire whether the Commission has made a false statement, herefore brought a man into court who should never have gone to court. It is a condition precedent, just as there is a law in virtually every municipality that you have to give a notice before you can bring a suit against it.

Mr. Williams. It is clear that it is not in the law now. Is there anything in this bill, any language which suggests that the failure to reach an agreement is reviewable even if that language "which determination shall not be reviewable in any court" is stricken?

Mr. Ervin. It should be reviewable.

Mr. Williams. At what point? That is the question.

Mr. Ervin. It should be reviewable by the court when a man goes into court.

Mr. Williams. At what point?

Mr. Ervin. Whenever it gets there.

Mr. Williams. At the point where it is found that there is no agreement?

Mr. Ervin. Once the court reaches the case for trial, for hearing. In other words, if a man is perfectly willing to comply with the law he ought to be able to show the court that he was willing to make an agreement in compliance with the law but that the Commission demanded more; and, therefore, he ought never have been brought into court. He ought to recover his costs and, as we lawyers say, go hence without delay.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator's time has expired. Does the Senator yield himself the remainder of his time?

Mr. Williams. Yes.

In other words, if the Commission is unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement that is acceptable to the Commission, at that point the respondent cannot go in to have that situation reviewed.

Mr. Ervin. That is right. In other words, nobody on earth can find that that statement is incorrect. It cannot be reviewed. Just tell the judge, "You have to shut your mind to the truth, if the truth is to the contrary."

Mr. Williams. Is it the Senator's viewpoint that, when the Commission discovers that it cannot get an acceptable agreement, at that point in time the respondent should be able to go to court?

Mr. Ervin. No, not then. A man ought not be compelled to go to court if he is perfectly willing to abide by the law. If he was perfectly willing to abide by the law and the Commission asked for more than the law required, the Commission ought not have him silenced when he gets to court. In other words, you have to have a condition precedent.

Mr. Williams. If this is stricken, what would the court be reviewing? I would imagine that, in this whole business of conciliation and negotiation toward an agreement, a great deal of the record would be on the basis of conferences and telephone calls, personal meetings where there is no record. What would the court be reviewing?

Mr. Ervin. I would think that if the judge was qualified for his office, when it appeared that the employer was willing to comply with the law and that the finding of the Commission on this point was not the truth, he would dismiss the case and say that the employer ought never have been harassed.

. Williams. At that point, I do not see where the record has made that a judge would have before him with the elements for ng an independent decision as to whether the respondent was g to enter into an agreement.

. Ervin. You have it in the record. If the Commission kept a d—and it should have—and the employer came in and said, "We illing to do this and that and that," that should go into the l; and then the Commission says, "That is not satisfactory to us."

. Williams. We are talking rather loosely about the record. I ggesting that the record could not be preserved in any printed

. Ervin. If the Commission does not preserve the record, it ought permitted to adjudicate the rights of other people.

Williams. This is in the very preliminary stages. No complaint en filed. It has been informal mediation and conciliation. No has been made. The judge would have nothing to go on.

Ervin. If I were the attorney for the employer, a record would t, because I would write it out and hand it to the Commission; they could not read, I would get somebody to read it to them.

Williams. That is the most improbable hypothesis of all.

Ervin. No, that is not improbable. Any competent lawyer, when s, "My client is not violating the law and is willing to take urse, in full compliance with the law," will put it in writing. It be the duty of the Commission to make a record of it, because they make a record to the effect that conciliation cannot be had, annot take action. That is a condition precedent.

Williams. I do not know how an objective record would be without one party reporting the conversation on the telephone he other party and vice versa, the sort of thing that makes for n a precise record, I would suggest.

Ervin. I learned a long time ago the truth of Lord Coke's state- hat one scratch of a pen is better than the slippery memory of witnesses. Whenever I represented a client who made a proposal a position, I reduced it to writing; and that is exactly what be in writing.

Williams. That would be an ex parte document. The Senator be making that out in his office, and it would not be reviewed other party as an accurate representation of what had ed.

Ervin. It would be an accurate representation of what I was to do.

Williams. A scratch of the pen would have been after you had ed to the other party what you were willing to do.

Ervin. Not if I were the attorney for the employer. I would in there when they were talking. I would put it in writing. You going to have a record made of the slippery memory of the ssion.

Williams. I am a former country lawyer from New Jersey, but we had one of those major lawyers from New York here to on this point. Frankly, I just cannot see it. It seems to me that e are talking about, in the working out of an agreement that nd does not come to pass, is not the kind of record with which lge could deal. They would have an informal background of discussion—give and take—which did not jell into an agreement. A we would really have, perhaps, with any formality, would be the fi words of the respondent's offer, and that is all, without any of the gu of what went into it.

Mr. ERVIN. I do not see why there would not be a record. There is writing. A lawyer making a proposal on behalf of his client or stati his client's position is not going to trust to the slippery memory of commission. He would put it in writing. If I were the lawyer for t man, there would be a record.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would not want to burden any judge with a revi of anything that imprecise as that record.

I yield to the Senator from New York on this.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the whole provision is self-operative seeking to set a time when, if the parties cannot agree, something el should happen, whether it is litigation or a complaint leading to cease-and-desist order.

I have never heard of a case in which a court could force anybo to make a settlement. The court might call them up to the bench a urge strongly that they settle and might imply that things go wro if they do not. But to provide that some court should review the det mination that they cannot settle is almost unheard of. I cannot co ceive of how a lawyer could advance such a proposal.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield.

Mr. ERVIN. How is the court going to know that the Commissi has been unable to get an agreement satisfactory to the Commissio How is the court going to know that? Is the Commission going whisper it in the judge's ear, or is it going to have a written documen

Mr. JAVITS. If the Commission acts and the statute calls for a d termination, the Commission runs the risk that its decision may upset if the court determines, on review—and there is adequate j dicial review—that the necessary procedures provided by law w not complied with—to wit, that they did not try to conciliate and t they actually felt that they could not get a conciliation agreement. seems to me that a pendente lite decision on that score would simp hold up the works forever and espouse the proposition that peo can be made to settle, which just is not a judicial proposition.

Mr. ERVIN. How is the Commission going to give that informati to the court—orally or in writing?

Mr. JAVITS. In addition, I think the other critical point is that neg tiations for settlement are traditionally without prejudice. The Se ator's amendment would seek to make the negotiation of a settlem a judicial proceeding, again an absolutely unheard of provision. one's rights are cut off. The respondent can appeal in the event he not satisfied and has gone through the necessary procedures. A the party most affected—to wit, the basic party in interest—the cla ant, as it were—is not cut off from a suit that he is not a party to settlement of. This bill adequately provides for that.

Under those circumstances, it seems to me inconceivable that would enter into a court proceeding test, whether the Commis could or could not get a conciliation agreement, in terms of the la of such a conciliation agreement, which gets down to the point we would substitute the court for the parties insofar as a settle- is concerned. If the court is going to get into that, to decide her it will or will not restrain or permit the Commission to make tlement, I cannot see how, without running afoul of the basic ciples of settlement in litigated cases, we can do it through the ts at this stage of the proceedings.

e opponents of this bill have made many amendments to it which arguable but, in the case of this amendment, I cannot see how it tand the proposition among lawyers in respect of the problems of ment of a case or of conciliating one.

. ERVIN. If the Senator will yield, I would ask, is the Commission ake no record of the fact that the Commission has been unable to n agreement?

. JAVITS. The Commission runs the danger, it runs the risk that hole proceeding may be upset after the cease-and-desist stage or tigation stage. I doubt very much that any commission would so simple a step as to certify for the record that they were unable rk out a conciliation agreement.

der this amendment I do not know what the court would decide v a court could probe into the minds of members of the Commis- whether they did or did not, in good faith, decide that they would uld not work out a conciliation agreement which the respondent have wished.

nnot see how we could possibly encompass this kind of provision to settlements. It certainly is completely outside the purview experience of every lawyer, not only myself, but I know of no r who would for a moment think that we could submit this to the as to whether the parties should settle. If they settle, they do. they do not and they go to court. This tries to introduce a totally nt standard than anything encompassed by our laws of practice. all these reasons, Mr. President, I hope that the amendment rejected.

Allen-Ervin amendment was rejected.

Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which endment was rejected.

I move to lay that motion on the table.

otion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The pending question is on the amendment
Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from New York
No. 878.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey and t Senator from New York have presented to the Senate their amen ment with a view toward facing the realities of the situation and e deavoring to present for all who wish a bill a formula by which bill could be obtained, we believe. It seems to me that this is the dir tion in which the Senate has been moving. We deplore the idea t those who have different views as to the remedy are thrown in ind criminately with those who oppose the bill outright. We believe t tends to confuse rather than simplify the issue, notwithstanding deep feeling about the way we are organized today with rule XX The Senate does not operate by a constitutional majority but by tw thirds of those present and voting. I think this is a very serious def in our system of government. It has its classic result in frustrati what should be the controlling will after decent and honorable debat to wit, the will of the majority. Nevertheless, this is the world which we live.

In recognition of that fact, the Senator from New Jersey (M Williams) and I have proposed a formula by which we think t difficulty can be surmounted by those who want a bill.

Mr. President, the main criticism that has been made against plan is the fact that it represents no substantial difference from ce and desist. But, Mr. President, we respectfully submit that it does would like to suggest to the Senate, so that the matter may be stud overnight by individual Members, that they pay particular attent to the following two points:

The first point is that we provide for a review by a court of qu tions which arise in the course of the hearing before the EEOC, any question of controlling law in the proceeding. That is not pr vided for by the cease-and-desist process, but would be provided by special proceedings we suggest. Second, we provide that the Co mission cannot issue a cease-and-desist order; that only the court enter a decree. It is claimed that does not make a difference beca the court is bound by the evidence to the extent the evidence is substa tial. We feel it makes all the difference in the world because the arg ment of our opponents respecting cease and desist has been just words. We have constantly pointed out they cannot be enforced at except by court decree, even though it is called a cease-and-des order.

They have argued that if it is called a cease-and-desist order t brands the violator as a violator of the law. If that is true, the co verse is equally true. If we strike out cease and desist we cannot bra the violator as a violator of law. We are bringing it before the Co mission as a special matter, to hear the evidence, make the report the evidence, and recommendations to the court.

I respectfully submit in those respects there is a very real differe between cease and desist and the court-enforcement concept wh we have advanced to the Senate. We hope very much it will have interested attention of Members in light of the substitute which understand is going to be offered by the Senator from Colorado (M Dominick) to our amendment. So the Senate will have its choice the remedies available, make that choice, and go and deal with the in chief.

. I have been most sympathetic, as has the Senator from New if we agree to vote on the Dominick amendment at a given time, t an agreement to vote on both measures in order to endeavor

e done shortly.

. BYRD of West Virginia. Surely.

. DOMINICK. Mr. President, there has been a great deal of dis-concerning what should or should not be done with the en-ent procedures of the EEOC. Some persons have interpreted cussion as to whether or not those who are in favor of court ire were in fact in favor of any enforcement procedure. Having participated in the debate before the committee, having written individual views in the report, and having debated the issue on the floor extensively, I think it is only fair to say that, from my point of view, the EEOC deserves and needs enforcement procedure. That is why I insisted on reporting the bill and why I wrote my supplemental individual views, and that is why I have been carrying forward the discussion on the court enforcement method. It is an enforcement procedure and an enforcement procedure which myself and at least 3 other Senators happen to think is best.

The Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) has been very kind in this matter, and so has the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams), but persons other than those in this body, in some of the more vocal "Now" groups, in the more militant women's groups, and other groups have said I was against civil rights. Nothing could be further from the truth.

I have said before, and I think it worthwhile repeating, that I have voted for every piece of civil rights legislation since I have been a Member of this body. In fact, I thought that the fair housing bill which was before us did not go far enough toward protecting minority rights. It is my guess that if we had had a fair housing bill with enough strength in it, we would not have the busing problem we are faced with in the school situation today, and I have said this repeatedly.

The language of this particular amendment is concise and uncomplicated. It says that if within 30 days after a charge is filed with the Commission, or within 30 days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), of this bill, the Commission has been unable to secure a conciliation agreement, the Commission shall notify the General Counsel, who then can, if he so desires, bring a civil action against any respondent other than those within the category of a governmental entity.

In those cases, Senators will recall, we have already provided in the bill that with reference to disputes involving State or local governmental employees, the dispute would go to the Attorney General for the filing of a case in U.S. district court. Federal employees would exhaust their respective agency remedies and then the employee would have a right either to go to the Civil Service Commission Board of Appeal and Review or to submit it to the Attorney General for action through the U.S. district courts.

So the bill provides governmental employees and the governmental agencies with rights to redress their grievances in court. The only ones who are not subject to such court relief are the private employers and private employees; this, in my own humble opinion, is discriminatory in and of itself. I do not see why we should arbitrarily carve out a sector.

This particular amendment, which is offered as a substitute for the Williams-Javits amendment, says that the Commission shall take no further action after the General Counsel files the complaint before the court. The General Counsel goes before the U.S. district court judge, and if he certifies that it is in the general public interest, can request an expedited three-judge panel, similar to the procedure we now have in connection with voting rights, public accommodations, and the "pattern or practice" cases.

appeal from that three-judge panel then goes directly to the me Court. In terms of timing this is what happens: The charge l before the Commission, and they review it. If they find reason- ause and are unable to reach a conciliation agreement then the al Counsel goes into court. If he thinks that it involves an issue neral public interest, he can ask for a three-judge court. If it es individual rights, which is probably more likely, he would o the regular district courts with the right to have the judge priorities and expedite the hearing of the case.

case would be heard and it would then go, in the first instance, three-judge court to the Supreme Court, and in the expedited g would go through the regular appellate proceedings.

re is no doubt in my mind that this will be much more expedi- han the complex Javits-Williams procedure, which if I may has been tabbed by some of my knowledgeable friends in the rofession as a turkey.

problem is that it is not really a turkey; it is rather a camel, is a horse created by a committee. It has all the defects of the l amendment, and very few redeeming features.

procedure I have outlined would be far quicker than would vits-Williams amendment. Consider for a moment the delay d with the interlocutory appeal that might occur on evidentiary nder amendment No. 878. The respondent raises the issue with ring examiner hearing the case; any evidence which creates an nt concerning admissibility would have to be heard before a and I can foresee a lot of cases in that category. It seems to impartial court system would be far better.

he purpose of creating a record and after thinking about this ore and more, all the while getting more concerned over the ation of the sides, it seemed to me that we should get an opin- he relative merits of the two amendments from the people who en intimately involved with the enforcement of job discrim- —the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice. I ed them to send up such an opinion, and I shall send a copy opinion to every Senator late this afternoon or early tomorrow g.

etter from Assistant Attorney General, David L. Norman says ndidly that in his opinion the Javits-Williams amendment e extremely difficult to administer, it would be time consum- l it does not afford the protections available under the Domi- nendment. Mr. Norman indicates that he had already so testi- summary on the points in favor of my procedures before the tee and that he held such testimony urging that, as between o amendments, the Dominick amendment should be adopted. e my colleagues will read Mr. Norman's letter with some care, his opinion also deals with the Hruska "pattern or practices" nent, and then brings up a whole new issue which has not been ed at all concerning the exclusion from either court proceed- nforcement proceedings those cases which are presently pend- re the EEOC.

ust to give Senators some idea of what the Civil Rights Divi- s, I shall read into the Record at this point a portion of the g applied by the Civil Rights Division of the Department ce.

Amendment 878 (the Williams-Javits Amendment) carries forward the features of S. 2515 as reported by the Senate Labor Committee. Under Amendment, EEOC will have authority to issue orders, which may be enforceable in the courts after opportunity for judicial review. Although words "cease and desist orders" in the original bill have been deleted and term "recommendation" substituted therefor, this change does not appear be a substantial one, since under either version the EEOC position becomes enforceable order unless modified by the court upon review. Like the committee bill, the Williams-Javits Amendment calls for judicial review of the EE order on the Administrative record. Sec. 706(k)(1), pp. 6 and 7 of the Amendment. Like the Committee bill, the Williams-Javits Amendment makes the findings of EEOC "conclusive" on the courts if supported by "substantial evidence on the record as a whole" (Sec. 706(k)(2), p. 7 of the Amendment).

Although the Williams-Javits Amendment provides for filing of the administrative complaint with the district court, we do not perceive any substantive change resulting from that novel procedure. Also, the Williams-Javits Amendment provides for an interlocutory appeal to the district court on any "controlling question of law" if it finds that such review "would materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." It is doubtful that the addition is a significant one, since controlling issues of law were judicially reviewable under S. 2515, and this Department's experience under the analogous provisions for interlocutory appeal from district court decisions (28 U.S.C. 1292(b)) indicates that such appeals are only useful on rare occasions.

The one material change which the Williams-Javits Amendment would make in S. 2515 is to transfer judicial review from the courts of appeals to the district court. This change adds another layer of review to the already lengthy process of charge, investigation, cause finding, administrative complaint, hearing before hearing examiner, review before the Commission and review in the Court of Appeals.

Amendment 871 (the Dominick Amendment)—

The substitute incorporates those same provisions—on the other hand, authorizes the EEOC to proceed in the appropriate United States District Court to secure relief from any employment practice it deems unlawful. In such proceedings, the evidence would be heard by the District Judge and the facts found by him. In addition, under the Dominick Amendment, the judicial proceedings would be expedited and the General Counsel could request the convening of a three-judge court with direct review in the Supreme Court upon a filing of a certificate of general public importance.

As you know, when I testified before the subcommittee on Labor of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare in October last year on behalf of the Department of Justice and the Administration, I again expressed our view that the granting for authority to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to bring judicial proceedings is a better means of enforcing Title VII than granting that Commission administrative enforcement powers. We still adhere to that view.

In my testimony before the Senate Labor Committee I set forth four grounds for our view that judicial enforcement is preferable to administrative proceedings. (Hearings pp. 150–151.) One of those was applicable only to governmental employers and was accepted by that Committee. The other three bases for our view may be summarized as follows: (1) Federal district judges hold office throughout the country and enjoy a confidence and respect in their community which cannot be matched by administrative officers; and their authority to issue enforceable orders enables them to resolve cases speedily;

If I may interject, Mr. President, I think this is a most important point. Under the procedures of S. 2515, and the procedures under amendment No. 878, the Williams Javits amendment, cease and desist orders or recommendations can only be issued in Washington.

Under court enforcement the district courts in every State of the Union are able to provide an impartial determination—an enormously simplified procedure insofar as both the complainant and the respondent are concerned.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado now consent to yield?

r. DOMINICK. I shall be through in just a few minutes, if I may nue.

. BYRD of West Virginia. Very well, I thank the Senator.

r. DOMINICK. The letter continues:

because of the sensitive nature of the issues to be resolved and the fact he larger cases involve the rights and expectations of substantial numbers ple, it is inappropriate to leave the critical factual determinations and for-ions of relief to hearing examiners and Commissioners sitting in Washing-nd (3) the fact that Federal courts resolve the factual and legal issues in opportunity cases in the areas of voting, housing, and education make them icular appropriate forum for resolving the same kinds of issues in employ-discrimination cases. In addition, I pointed out that there is a definite, gh hard to measure, advantage in having the person who has heard the ce be responsible for fashioning the relief which he must then enforce.

I have said, Mr. President, we will supply a copy of this letter to Senator, whether he be for us or against us, either this afternoon norrow morning.

ink the letter is extremely important, because it indicates what I been saying—namely, that we must retain a belief in this country he Federal district courts provide a method of impartial review rhly emotional cases which involve not only basic human rights so basic human emotions. Additionally, you can do far better in rt proceeding which is impartial, organized, and ruled by precend established rules of procedure than you can from an admin-ve proceeding composed of a group of people who are responsi-no one except the person who appointed them—largely in the ive department—or who may have been appointed as part of the f the agency itself.

nnot conceive of anybody saying to me—as they have done over er again—that what I am trying to do is in any way detrimental viding fair employment opportunities to people throughout this
y. The fact is, my position provides a far more fair and far more ial and far more expeditious way to solve these disputes by g lasting precedents which can apply as a rule of thumb for situations which are similar to that in other areas of the country.

President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the l at this point editorials from the Chicago Sun-Times and the go Tribune endorsing the court enforcement procedure.

ld to the Senator from West Virginia.

re being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed Record, as follows:

THE SENATE AND JOB BIAS

House-passed proposal to allow the Equal Employment Opportunity Comto file suits in federal court on behalf of citizens who complain of hiring nation is a step in the right direction, aside from the fact that it probably all that could be expected out of Congress in an election year. South-n the Senate who filibustered against a more liberal proposal one which ave allowed the EEOC to issue "cease and desist" orders of its own—did t the government interfering with subtle methods of blocking blacks bs which required anything but heavy lifting and dirty hands. Nor did ers of the filibuster, the Jim Crow leaders of Northern craft-union locals. seven years since Congress ordered an end to discrimination, particularly n employment, most responsible businessmen have taken the view that nployment opportunity is not only good for individuals but good for busi-lf. But the enforcement procedures given the EEOC to bring suit against or employers have been restricted: only where a pattern exists can the ove.

The House measure changes this to help individual plaintiffs, and it is a p gressive move. After all, the federal courts have a good record in civil rights ca and in administrative law, which the EEOC proposed powers would become, word of a government agency is taken as prima facie evidence; it is up to alleged offenders to prove their innocence. Admittedly, the federal courts are clogged with cases, and this would add to the load, but it seems a small price pay for widened enforcement powers for existing legislation.

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D–Mont.) has said that if the p posed legislation runs into too much more opposition, he'll lay the whole ma aside for this session of Congress. It would be a pity if this should come to p and we would urge all senators to support the House bill. Ending discriminat in employment is already several centuries overdue, and this compromise, wh not perfect, would be more than welcome.

Cease and Desist

Twice in three days, the Senate has defeated an attempt to cut off debate o bill to give the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission power to issue "c and desist" orders. A third attempt is expected later. If it fails, too, Senate lead may shelve the question. If they do, passage of any new EEOC legislation in t session will be in doubt.

The subject has already consumed an inordinate amount of Senate time. Fr tration of "liberal" senators on this question should cause little if any regret.
deed, it is ironic that the same "liberals" who are trying to vest the EEOC w "cease and desist" powers are generally the same ones who complain that ot federal agencies—in particular, the Atomic Energy Commission—are too pow ful in that they adjudicate their own affairs.

A more moderate proposal, approved in the House and sponsored in the Se by Sen. Peter Dominick of Colorado, would empower the EEOC to go direc to the courts to seek enforcement of its orders. At present, the EEOC is lim to persuasion and conciliation, and has no enforcement powers beyond re mending to the attorney general that he initiate civil action.

By persisting in the effort to give the EEOC an administrative baseball b Senate "liberals" may have doomed EEOC to no increase at all in its enfor ment powers. Better that than enabling it to act as an arbitrary tribunal, w no necessity for placing controverted questions before an impartial court.

Mr. Javits. Before the Senator yields, I would appreciate it if would yield to me, as I would like to have, at the same place and ti our reply to the position of the administration, which we know ab and which everybody expected.

Will the Senator allow me to speak before he yields for unanimous-consent request in which I hope to be able to concur?

Mr. Dominick. If it is all right with the Senator from West Vi ginia.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. Dominick. I would like to keep the floor.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Se tor may yield to me without losing his right to the floor.

The Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, we have been expecting this. This is t position of the administration. They prefer court litigation to t cease and desist order practice which is contained in the bill repor by the committee.

I have read with great interest the letter which comes now, declo ing officially this position, and I most respectfully disagree.

Inherent in the Department's view is the very basis for our di agreement. First, they say that Federal district judges hold co throughout the country and enjoy a confidence and respect in the communities which cannot be matched by administrative officers respectfully submit that if that is true, we had better dismantle hole administrative machinery in Washington, which includes of thousands of cases not only in this field but in many other as well, especially the National Labor Relations Board, which les cases exactly in this field and which does issue cease-and-desist

s.

ond, the innuendo is made—and even was made this minute by istinguished Senator from Colorado—that "these officers are nsible to no one." They are appointed by the President, they are med by the Senate, and they are surely responsible to the courts, s the judges are. How many lower court decisions are reversed?
we have argued time and time again, before the cease-and-desist can be enforced, it must be the subject of a court decree by a court of appeals, and under amendment No. 878, by a district as well.

the whole point comes in the next clause of the Department's heir authority to issue enforceable orders enables them to resolve cases

us take a poll of any street—Washington, Takoma, San Diego,
—see who will tell you that the courts decide cases speedily.
lo not, of course; especially in the major industrial centers, the district courts are 30 and 40 months behind in their calen-nd that is where these cases are going to come up.

second point which gives the whole thing away is "Because of sitive nature of the issues to be resolved." It is pretty sensitive with questions involving trade unions in the National Labor ns Board. It is pretty sensitive to deal with questions involvud and deceit, just what the Federal Trade Commission deals n terms of the issuance of cease-and-desist orders. And I am only two. Precisely because it is sensitive, we have given that tion to commissions, because we believe they develop an ex-
: they develop a sensitivity to the issues. They are mandated otiate settlement and to try conciliation before they engage summary action. We expressly created this idea of commissions country because of the sensitive nature and the degree of spe-ion and expertise which is required in these measures.

her, the fact that the courts do resolve civil rights cases in elds—voting, housing, and education—does not make them a larly appropriate forum for resolving job discrimination issues, because it is job discrimination that gets away from you the n a man is discriminated against in employment, he loses money ay or goes on welfare, and that is where the difference comes respect to housing, education, and voting, where you have time around and where it is not a matter of eat or starve or go on

President, I understand that we have been over this ground nd what the Department of Justice has sent Senator Dominick ng new. But I do feel that the Senate has voted at least three ejecting the thesis which Senator Dominick is now putting again in his substitute amendment. That is a majority of the and efforts have been made to overturn it, and it has not been overturned. On the one occasion when the vote went the other way, was obvious that it was because Senators had left, and it was ju necessary to wait until they came back.

The whole situation is revealed nakedly. I have no complaints criticisms of any opponent. As the Senator from Colorado knows, have the highest respect and regard for his good faith and for h interest in civil rights legislation. I have never challenged that. B the fact is that if we are going to go this route, it will be notwit standing the will of a majority of the Senate and only because t Senate is not run by a constitutional majority, and perhaps the bigge thing which will emerge from this debate and our effort to pass a b will be that irrefutable fact. The fact is that if this is the route, will be only because this is the only way to get a bill, to yield to t minority, not for the minority to yield to the majority, as one wou expect in a democracy. That may be the only way to get legislatio and it may be the only thing that is left for us to do. I am not pr pared to subscribe to that. But I do think that as legislation and h enfold and the history of our country enfolds, it is absolutely essenti that that be made clear.

Again, I have no criticisms whatever. The Senator from Colora believes as deeply in his thesis as I believe in mine; and just as it my duty to do everything I humanly can to get my thesis accepted, is his duty to his conscience and those for whom he speaks to do t same thing. I am not complaining about that. But I am complaini strongly, as this is a lesson over and above the debate on a civil rig bill, in terms of the future of our country. This may not represent t shattering of the institutions of the Republic, but it could happen a could completely devastate the faith in our democratic system, b compelling the majority to do what the minority wants, notwithstan ing free and fair and open extended time for debate. That is the wa the system is now run. I deeply believe that is fair.

I repeat, I desire in no way to derogate from the good faith, t skill, and the capabilities of my colleagues engaged in this struggle o the other side, but it is essential for the future of this country clear to delineate where we are and why. That is the reason I have take these moments to speak.

I thank my colleague very much for his typical graciousness an fairness in yielding me this time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator from New York. I listene with great interest to his comments. I have no intention of getting in a debate on rule XXII. We have had so many of them since I came to the Senate that it is hard to say anything new about them.

I must say, in all fairness, that on the first vote on this particul issue there was only one vote difference until one of our Member paired. On the second vote, there were only two votes difference. I no time was that a majority of Senators either opposing court enforc ment or in favor of cease and desist. My amendment was only defeat by a plurality of those present.

I should also point out that the House, on a rollcall vote on t floor, adopted the Federal court procedure over the cease and desi procedure in a straight up or down vote. It is my guess that in ord to get some resolution of the impasse we are in now, we will hav enough Senators to objectively consider the changes which have be in the competing amendments so that we can get my substitute ed tomorrow. If we can do that, we will have a fair chance to e bill out of this body. But, I must confess in all candor, that if not adopt an amendment substantially similar to the one I have we will not get a bill out at all. As a matter of fact, I have heard ajority leader say that he was not going to waste much more on it and he would pull it down.

if we are going to pass anything, we are going to have to pass nendment, if we are going to get an enforcement procedure for EOC, which I would like. Therefore, I hope that we will adopt nendment.
h all due respect to my good friend from New York, who has raordinary ability to organize his thoughts and speak brilliantly

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST

Byrd of West Virginia. I thank the distinguished Senator from do.
I inquire of him as to whether he would be willing to make an ent which would limit time on his amendment tomorrow, folthe vote on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the nent of the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Hruska) was rejected ednesday, and also agreeing to a specific time to vote on the ick amendment?
Dominick. I would have no objection to doing that at all. My tion is that the motion to reconsider will probably involve, motion to table, so that we may get two votes out of that. They eduled for 2 p.m. so we would not be through until a quarter rhaps; is that not correct?
Byrd of West Virginia. The motion to reconsider is scheduled ote on tomorrow at 2 p.m. A motion to table would be in order. of no intention to move to table the motion to reconsider, but motion to table is made, that would consume an additional utes. In any event, the motion to reconsider is scheduled for a 2 p.m. If no motion to table is offered, then the vote would be ed on the motion to reconsider at about 2:15 p.m. s wondering whether I might propound the following unani-nsent request in order to see if it would meet with general
l:
President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the pendndment by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) occur w at 4:30 p.m.; provided further that time on the pending ent begin running tomorrow immediately upon disposition of ion to reconsider the vote by which amendment No. 877 of the from Nebraska (Mr. Hruska) was rejected; provided that be equally divided between the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) and the manager of the bill, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams); that time on any debatable motion, point of order, appeal, or perfecting amendment to the amendment in the first degree by the distinguished Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) be limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divided between the mover of such and the manager of the bill; with the further proviso that time on such will come out of the time allotted to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), with the exception, of course, of time on any motion to reconsider, which would naturally come after the vote on the Dominick amendment.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—this is a terribly complicated unanimous-consent request which the distinguished Senator from West Virginia has just propounded.

It is my understanding that maybe we should get a parliamentary ruling on it first, before the Senator actually pushes it forward, on the fact that the proposal I put up is a substitute and would not be subject to any further amendments.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMINICK. Therefore, we are dealing with this one amendment and we do not have to worry about amendments to my amendment; is that not correct?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. The Senator is correct, but there is the possibility that a perfecting amendment to the amendment by the Senator from New York (Mr. Javits) could be offered and, in such case, that perfecting amendment would be voted on before the substitute would be voted on. So that, if that possibility should materialize, the proviso would take care of any such perfecting amendment.

Mr. DOMINICK. What is the time limited to on perfecting amendments?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Twenty minutes, to be equally divided. Such time would come out of the time on the Dominick amendment.

Mr. DOMINICK. I could not agree, under those circumstances, because I have had considerable requests from Senators to speak on behalf of my amendment. I know that we will use at least 1 hour, if not more. I wonder whether the Senator could not put it this way: I do not know of any perfecting amendments that might be offered—there may be some, I suppose. But why should that come out of our time?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I include that proviso just so that the Senate can be assured that a vote would occur, in any event, on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) no later than 4:30 p.m. tomorrow. I can revise the request if the Senator desires.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I do not think that would be satisfactory to us. The only reason we would have for agreeing—and I am not sure that we would agree—is that we still want to have something to say about it and that would be the fact that we could count on the time that is critical to us because of our situation here. I would make this suggestion, if we could agree—if the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) would give me his attention—perhaps we could set a time on perfecting amendments with a gentleman's understanding on the part of the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) and the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) that if someone has a perfecting lment, accommodation would be made within the time limita-

The result of that would be that it might be 20 minutes, or it be 3 minutes, 8 minutes, or 6 minutes. But the perfecting amend-could be submitted to a vote when the time had expired and we eady—at the end of the 4:30 p.m. period.
h that understanding, I think everyone would be protected. Conly, once the time has expired, a motion might be made or an ment could be submitted to our amendment, which would be er and would be voted on with the gentleman's understanding ere would be some accommodation to people who felt strongly the matter.

DOMINICK. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from New York e difficulty with that would be in the event the offerer of a per-amendment would not want to agree to a time limitation.

JAVITS. No, because the time limitation would expire. And at e it would have to be voted up or down.

DOMINICK. I do not know of anyone who wants to offer any someone does so, it might not be fair to him or her. difficulty, as I see it, is that we are trying to encompass everynder one blanket. I do not see how we can do it. We can say ill be 2 hours on the Dominick amendment and not set a time on at all.

JAVITS. That is our problem with respect to the matter. We then up to having a vote at 7, 8, 9, or 10 o'clock. Anyone could sub-perfecting amendments.

DOMINICK. If they do, what do we do about it? The time for would have long since expired.

JAVITS. That would not be true the way I have suggested. The from Colorado would have control of half the time and the from New Jersey would have control over half of the time. If had a serious perfecting amendment, the Senator from Colo-ght allow him 1, 2, or 3 minutes. The same would be true with to the Senator from New Jersey. That would be stipulated. ould be no time, but they could get a vote. That is not unusual, we do it all the time. All the votes would begin at 4:30. No one e cut off.
ot see where the Senator from Colorado would be in jeopardy and neither would we. The voting might take a little longer, ould be at the voting stage at 4:30.

DOMINICK. Does the Senator from New York know of anyone l offer any perfecting amendments?

AVITS. None whatever. I know of none. Like the Senator from o, I know of none. Perhaps we might suspend for awhile so Senator from Colorado could think about the matter.

OMINICK. I am just trying to get to a vote on my amendment.

AVITS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from West Virginia
t. We have to protect the rights of everyone. I have felt that t to get a time limitation on the whole ball of wax—that is, ominick amendment, and if it succeeds, then on the Williamsmendment. If the Dominick amendment fails, then we should ote on our amendment. I wish to note also that our amenduld be subject to amendment in that event.

Mr. President, when the Senator from West Virginia has fini making his unanimous-consent request, as he might work it out the Senator from Colorado and with us, I would like to incorpo it, before we agree to it, in another unanimous-consent request would be more inclusive and would set a time for voting on the w issue, including the Dominick and our amendment as perfected.

I beg the Senator to give me that opportunity.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A unanimous-consent request is pendin

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I withhold my u mous-consent request temporarily.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, assuming that a unanimous-con request of some kind is finally agreed to here, is it not also true if it does not encompass the Williams-Javits amendment, perfec amendments could be offered to that after mine was disposed of in event it got defeated. In the event it passed, it could not be. Is correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMINICK. On the assumption that it is going to pass, I happy to to say that there would then really be no reason for perf ing amendments as far as I can see. If the Senator from West Virg wants to propose his unanimous consent request, I see no problem.

In order to offset the possibility of having two votes at 2 o'clo could we give ourselves another 15 minutes?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator wo yield, in the event there is no tabling motion, under the request wi I have presented there would be a total of 2 hours and 15 minute the Dominick amendment.

Mr. DOMINICK. The time to be equally divided.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMINICK. That would be all right.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the Senator would yield, I would to make the following unanimous-consent request, incorporating request of the Senator from West Virginia and adding to it the that after the vote has been taken on the Dominick amendment any perfecting amendments which come before the Dominick am ment, or after the vote has been taken on the Dominick amendm there be 2 hours, the time to be evenly divided on the Williams-Ja amendment, plus 20 minutes on each amendment or motion or app the time to be also equally divided between the mover and the Sen from New Jersey, and the vote then occur on the Williams-Ja amendment as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I object. I do not object to the reques the Senator from West Virginia, but I do object to the unanim consent request of the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, we anticip that objection. However, we thought it only fair to have the clearly appear in the Record in respect of the Senate's judgme to when debate ought to close. If that is what we are brought to respect to this measure, I am now prepared to agree to the unanim consent request of the Senator from West Virginia. However, Senator from New Jersey can speak for himself, of course.

. Ervin. Mr. President, I am always anxious to put everything e Record. That is the reason I supported the Allen amendment ake the rulings of the EEOC reviewable.
. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I now renew my request.
ld the Chair like me to restate it, or is that necessary?
. Javits. Mr. President, would the Chair restate it so that we all hear it?
e Presiding Officer. Following the disposition of the Hruska dment, time will begin running on the Dominick amendment, to ually divided and controlled by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. nick) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams), with 20 tes on any debatable motion or amendment, that time also to be ly divided and the time to come out of the time on the Dominick dment, with the vote on the Dominick amendment to occur at Javits. Mr. President, the Chair did not mention a perfecting lment to the Williams-Javits amendment which would be voted he appropriate time, after the time had expired. Is that correct?

Presiding Officer. The unanimous-consent request as repeated Chair did mention debatable motions or amendments, which ed perfecting amendments.
Javits. Mr. President, I would not wish to be cut off once the as expired from making a motion to table.
Presiding Officer. This agreement would preclude a motion le.
Javits. Therefore, I wish to make that exception.
Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, let me state that if we into an agreement to vote on the Dominick amendment at a time then the Senate automatically is precluded from a motion le.
Javits. I am aware of that. That is why I made the reservation.
s not debatable.
Byrd of West Virginia. Then, I have to revise my request to that a Senator could move to table at that time.
Presiding Officer. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent
ent?
Dominick. This creates a reservation. What we are doing is to create an escape hatch. I do not think I will go along and vill have to object.
President, I object.
Presiding Officer. Objection is heard.
Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence
orum.
Presiding Officer (Mr. Stevenson). The clerk will call the second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Williams. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the or the quorum call be rescinded.
Presiding Officer. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 2515) a further promote equal employment opportunities for American s.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, I renew my previous r quest, and I shall restate it.

I ask unanimous consent that time on the pending substitute by M Dominick, amendment No. 884, begin running tomorrow upon the d position of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Hrus amendment No. 877 to S. 2515 was rejected last Wednesday;

Provided further that a vote occur on amendment No. 884 by M
Dominick at 4:30 p.m. tomorrow;

Provided further, that time be equally divided between the dist guished mover of the amendment (Mr. Dominick) and the dist guished manager of the bill (Mr. Williams);

Ordered further, that time on any debatable motion, amendment meaning perfecting amendment to the Williams-Javits amendment point of order, or appeal be limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divid between the mover of such and the manager of the bill:

Provided, that the time on such perfecting amendment, debatab motion, appeal, or point of order, be taken out of the time allotted amendment No. 884, with two exceptions: One being in the case of perfecting amendment which is pending at 4:30 p.m., in which i stance that perfecting amendment be allotted whatever remaini time would be necessary to round out the full 20 minutes: the seco instance, of course, being on a motion to reconsider the vote on amen ment No. 884; with the further understanding that in the event t manager of the bill is not opposed to any perfecting amendment, m tion, appeal, or point of order, the time in opposition to such wou then be under the control of the distinguished minority leader or h designee.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, reserving t right to object—and I do not expect to object—it seems to me we ha not stated properly the proposal as to perfecting amendments to t basic amendment. As I understand, the votes on those would occ at 4:30 p.m., and a reliance would be placed on the Senator from N Jersey (Mr. Williams) and the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dom nick) to accommodate Senators who had any further proposals with the time allotted, with the substantive vote to start at 4:30 p.m.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. However, in a case where a Senator o fered a perfecting amendment, let us say, at 4:30, he would then ha 20 minutes. If he offered it before, say, at 10 minutes to 4, he wou have 10 minutes.

Mr. Javits. That was not our understanding; our understandi was we would start voting at 4:30. If there were perfecting amen ments, both sides would allow Senators to discuss them, but we wo vote at 4:30.

Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Very well. I will delete the pro which would accord to a Senator with a perfecting amendment, pe ing at 4:30 p.m., 20 minutes.

Mr. Dominick. Mr. President, reserving the right to object. I s foresee a situation where we would have 2 hours of debate, 1 hour each side, and with 20 minutes on perfecting amendments, we wo not get to debate the basic amendment. In view of that fact, I do n see anything to do except object. I am sorry.

JAVITS. Let us not get hot——

DOMINICK. Well, we are getting that way——

JAVITS. Well, we are getting that way, then. I am trying to get at 4:30, not 8:30.

DOMINICK. I do not care whether we get them at 4:30 or 8:30.

JAVITS. I do. That is why I am agreeing to the unanimous-consent request.

DOMINICK. Mr. President, I object.

PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Stevenson). Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, after several discussions with various Senators who are parties to the request which I am about to make, I propound the following unanimous-consent request:

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that a vote occur on amendment No. 884 by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) at 5 p.m. today; that time on that amendment begin running upon the disposition of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Hruska amendment No. 877 was previously rejected; that the time be equally divided between the mover of the amendment, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) and the manager of the bill, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams); provided further, that in the event the motion to reconsider amendment No. 877 by Mr. Hruska carries, the consideration of amendment No. 877 then be put over until the final disposition of amendment No. 884 by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), at which time amendment No. 877 by Mr. Hruska then again be placed before the Senate for debate and disposition.

PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, there is no question but that the vote on the amendment by Mr. Dominick will be a rollcall

On page 38, beginning with line 7, strike out all through line 18 on page 47 and insert in lieu thereof:

"(f) (1) If within thirty days after a charge is filed with the Commission or within thirty days after expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), the Commission has been unable to secure from the respondent a conciliation agreement acceptable to the Commission, the Commission shall so notify the General Counsel who may bring a civil action against any respondent not a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision named in the charge. In the case of a respondent which is a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, the Commission shall take no further action and shall refer the case to the Attorney General who may bring a civil action against such respondent in the appropriate United States district court. If a charge filed with the Commission pursuant to subsection (b) is dismissed by the Commission, or if within one hundred and fifty days from the filing of such charge or the expiration of any period of reference under subsection (c) or (d), whichever is later, the General Counsel has not filed a civil action under this section or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision, or the Commission has not entered into a conciliation agreement to which the person aggrieved is a party, the Commission or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision shall so notify the person aggrieved and within ninety days after the giving of such notice a civil action may be brought against the respondent named in the charge (1) by the person named in the charge as claiming to be aggrieved or (2) if such charge was filed by an officer or employee of the Commission, by any person whom the charge alleges was aggrieved by the alleged unlawful employment practice. Upon application by the complainant and in such circumstances as the court may deem just, the court may appoint an attorney for such complainant and may authorize the commencement of the action without the payment of fees, costs, or security. Upon timely application, the court may, in its discretion, permit the Attorney General to intervene in such civil action if he certifies that the case is of general public importance. Upon request, the court may, in its discretion, stay further proceedings for not more than sixty days pending the termination of State or local proceedings described in subsection (c) of this section or further efforts of the Commission to obtain voluntary compliance.

"(2) In any such proceeding the General Counsel or the Attorney General in a case involving a government, governmental agency, or political subdivision may file with the clerk of such court a request that a court of three judges be convened to hear and determine the case. Such request by the General Counsel or the Attorney General shall be accompanied by a certificate that, in his opinion, the case is of general public importance. A copy of the certificate and request for a three-judge court shall be immediately furnished by such clerk to the chief judge of the circuit (or in his absence, the presiding circuit judge of the circuit) in which the case is pending. Upon receipt of the copy of such request it shall be the duty of the chief judge of the circuit or the presiding circuit judge, as the case may be, to designate immediately three judges in such circuit, of whom at least one shall be a circuit judge and another of whom shall be a district judge of the court in which the proceeding was instituted, to hear and determine such case, and it shall be the duty of the judges so designated to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited. An appeal from the final judgment of such court will lie to the Supreme Court.

"(3) In the event the General Counsel or the Attorney General fails to file such a request in any such proceeding, it shall be the duty of the chief judge of the district (or in his absence, the acting chief judge) in which the case is pending immediately to designate a judge in such district to hear and determine the case. In the event that no judge in the district is available to hear and determine the case, the chief judge of the district, or the acting chief judge, as the case may be, shall certify this fact to the chief judge of the circuit (or in his absence, the acting chief judge) who shall then designate a district or circuit judge of the circuit to hear and determine the case.

"(4) It shall be the duty of the judge designated pursuant to this subsection to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.

"(5) Whenever a charge is filed with the Commission and the Commission concludes on the basis of a preliminary investigation that prompt judicial action is necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Commission may bring an action for appropriate temporary or preliminary relief pending final disposition of such charge. It shall be the duty of a court having jurisdiction over proceedings under this section to assign cases for hearing at the earliest practicable date and to cause such cases to be in every way expedited.

"(g) (1) Each United States district court and each United States court of a place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of actions brought under this title. Such an action may be brought in any judicial district in the State in which the unlawful employment practice is alleged to have been committed, in the judicial district in which the employment records relevant to such practice are maintained and administered, or in the judicial district in which the plaintiff would have worked but for the alleged unlawful employment practice, but if the respondent is not found within any such district, such an action may be brought within the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office. For purposes of sections 1404 and 1406 of title 28 of the United States Code, the judicial district in which the respondent has his principal office shall in all cases be considered a district in which the action might have been brought.

"(2) If the court finds that the respondent has engaged in or is engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include, but is not limited to, reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without backpay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, reponsible for the unlawful employment practice), or any other equitable relief as the court deems appropriate. Backpay liability shall not exceed that which accrues from a date more than two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commission. Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the backpay otherwise allowable."

President, I favor the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska reasons I stated at the time the amendment was offered on ary 8, as set forth in the Record of that date.

nk the Senate should have an opportunity to express itself by rity vote on this issue and not have the issue decided by a tie

The proposal of the Senator from Nebraska, as I understand it, would limit the means by which action might be taken to protect minority rights under the job discrimination provisions of the EEOC bill.

I myself see no reason for saving six of seven different remedies for the protection of these rights, particularly when an employer would be thereby subjected to a great deal of harassment.

In my own judgment, by far the greater number of employers in this country would be happy to abide by this law and are simply seeking to find out what the requirements of the law would be and are not undertaking to frustrate equal opportunities for our citizens in connection with employment, whether by race, sex, religion, or national origin.

Mr. President, assuming that good faith, as I do, on the part of most employers, I do not think they should be held in suspense as to how many different modes of attack might be made upon them when any one or certainly the several that remain under the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska would be sufficient for the purpose.

Therefore, Mr. President, I at this time yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska for his statement in support of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 10 minutes.

EXCLUSIVE REMEDY AMENDMENT

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. President, I rise in support of the motion to reconsider the vote by which my amendment was rejected last week.

The proposed amendment provides that apart from those actions specifically sanctioned by S. 2515 or pursuant to the provisions of the Equal Pay Act of 1963, the only remedy available to individuals aggrieved by employment discrimination is a charge filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Under the amendment there are exceptions. Under this amendment actions filed by aggrieved individuals with State fair employment practices agencies; actions filed by the Attorney General in pattern or practice of discrimination cases; private actions filed by aggrieved individuals in the Federal district courts following the failure of the Commission to act upon a charge within the time proscribed in the bill; actions brought by the Secretary of Labor for noncompliance with the regulations of the OFCC; and actions brought in the courts for alleged violations of the provisions of the Equal Pay Act of 1963, are all preserved. The amendment would therefore, continue the availability of a wide range of avenues of redress from employment discrimination.

It might be noted parenthetically that the other body approved a provision similar to my amendment. But it was much more broad. It was much more broad, for example, in that the Equal Pay Act of 1963 was not included as an exception. That deficiency was noted in the debate in the other body. For some reason—very likely the fact that there was a closed rule prohibiting amendments—it was not incorporated in the text of the amendment as adopted, according to my recollection.

The merit of that proposal on the other side of the Capitol was recognized and there was inserted the additional exception for the Equal Pay Act of 1963 which, very simplistically, said that there must be equal pay for similar or equal work for men and women.

amendment reflects a recognition, however, of the fact that we er existing laws, individuals who allege that they are the victims iminatory employment practices have access to a multiplicity of before which they can bring actions seeking to redress a sin-ged employment discrimination. Although Congress, in Title the Civil Rights Act of 1964, created the Equal Employment unity Commission and invested it with the primary responsi-r investigating and conciliating alleged violations of Title VII, slative history of that act as well as subsequent court decisions hed that the Commission was not the exclusive authority for ment of equal employment rights.

under the present law, an individual can subject an employer organization to the necessity to defend simultaneously against r of separate actions, brought before a number of separate and forums for the same alleged offense.

Commission has noted in an ex parte statement submitted to rstate Commerce Commission concerning Equal Opportunity ce Transportation, ex parte No. 278:

e VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 did not grant exclusive jurisdiction al Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) in all matters of em-discrimination over which it has jurisdiction. On the contrary, its very vides for the uses of all available means to achieve the end of employ-rimination. (Ex Parte No. 278, Page 56) (emphasis added).

for example, notwithstanding the enactment of Title VII, it that the National Labor Relations Board still retained jurisn the area of civil rights in employment. In United Packing-orkers Union v. NLRB (Farmers Cooperative Compress), 416 26, 1133, n11 (C.A.D.C., 1969), the court found, as a matter of racial discrimination by an employer is an unfair labor prac-stated that:

itself says nothing to indicate that the National Labor Relations Board from jurisdiction in these matters, and an examination of the legislative monstrates that the Board was not meant to be. 110 CONGRESSIONAL 07 (1964).

rly, court decisions issued subsequent to the passage of Title held that Title VII has not preempted the field of civil rights vment and thus an individual has an independent cause of ac-ises of employment discrimination pursuant to the provisions vil Rights Acts of 1866 (42 U.S.C. 1981) and 1871 (42 U.S.C.
983) and that actions may be brought under all three laws eously.

er, according to the EEOC, the list of available forums in tions concerning employment discrimination can be mainntinues. In its statement to the ICC, the Commission stated

. . . the provisions of Title VII only applied to the activities of the EEOC— to the Department of Justice as applicable—and were not intended to prec other Federal agencies from independent action in this area. (emphasis add

It is, therefore, the Commission's position that in addition to n regulatory administrative agencies such as the National Labor Re tions Board Federal regulatory agencies such as the FCC and I similarly have the authority to regulate the employment practices those who are subject to their jurisdiction.

Moreover, the Commission apparently is not satisfied merely w asserting that such regulatory agencies have jurisdiction over employment practices of their regulatees—a tenuous assertion at bes but it has also felt compelled to interject itself into the affairs of th agencies and attempt to direct those affairs.

For example, apparently without any charge having been filed, Commission conducted an independent investigation of the empl ment practices of the trucking industry and solely on the basis o statistical disparity in employment between minority and nonminor employees concluded that a prima facie case of discrimination at l had been established. This was not enough for the Commission, ho ever. After reaching this gratuitous conclusion, the Commission th tried to impose on the jurisdiction of the ICC by attempting to ha the ICC adopt rules forbidding discrimination in the surface transp tation industries, violations of which would hopefully, according the EEOC, result in loss of a carrier's license to operate.

Similarly, the EEOC has applied the same consideration to the FC and has interjected itself into the affairs of that independent agen For example, again apparently without any charges having been fi the EEOC conducted a study of the equal employment opportunit in the Bell System. In a voluminous report entitled "A Unique Co petence," the EEOC concluded that from top to bottom, the Be System discriminated against its employees on the basis of sex, r and national origin. However, the Commission's 290 page report is plete with conclusions unsupported by evidence and reads like a s chamber indictment. Nevertheless, the Commission on the basis of t obviously prejudiced report would have the FCC impose sanctions the Bell System.

Thus, in addition to all the other actions a respondent can be s jected to, the Commission would also include Federal regulatory ag cies in that already bulging list. It is apparently of no consequence the Commission that such agencies have neither the requisite expe ence in the area of civil rights in employment, nor the knowled training, resources or investigative know how to involve themsel in that area. On the contrary, the lack of resources and experience these agencies in the field of employment discrimination serves Commission's purposes all too well. The Commission can then in itself with the authority to act as the investigatory arm of these ag cies, draw unilateral conclusions as to the regulated industry's emp ment practices and utilize these agencies as mere rubber stamps for application of sanctions as a result of their conclusions.

Under the present provisions of Title VII, the EEOC was granted pro-century or enforcement authority which it could call in order to fulfill its role to eliminate employment discrimina Rather, the Commission was forced to rely solely on its efforts to and conciliate in order to fulfill its function. Therefore, since mmission had been given no enforcement authority, an arguable ıle existed for the availability of multiple forums, each with ction to hear, decide and remedy complaints of employment nination. The lack of authority granted the EEOC in 1965 ed it inadequate for the task imposed upon it by Congress. It nerefore, intended by Congress that victims of employment disation should be able to avail themselves to the fullest extent of ources of other agencies and other applicable statutes. ever, this rationale no longer is applicable. We are now granting EOC the necessary authority to effectively administer and en-he Nation's equal opportunity employment laws. Yet, the bill fore the Senate contains no provision restricting the availability rnative avenues of redress for persons aggrieved as a result of ment discrimination. Nothing contained in S. 2515 prevents an ual from subjecting a respondent to the onerous prospect of ubjected to the vexations, time-consuming and financially bure necessity of having to defend against a number of separate procedure is contrary to this Nation's well established principle e accused of a violation of the law should not be harassed and y multiple actions for a single offense. This principle is conally recognized in the criminal law by the prohibition against jeopardy" and in the civil law by the correlative concepts of udicata" and "collateral estoppel." It is also recognized in adative law. For example, the National Labor Relations Act, upon he instant bill is largely patterned, provides that the Board s exclusive jurisdiction in the area of its authority and other are preempted from consideration of cases properly before the ental rights of due process.

mendment which I have offered merely represents a recognition conclusion. It does not, as the rhetoric in the House suggested, e actions under the Equal Pay Act and my amendment speciftains the availability of actions under that act. My amendnot intended to eliminate the jurisdiction of the Attorney Genattern or practice cases. We all recognize the fine and valuable ne by the Justice Department in this area and my amendment hat the Attorney General's efforts and jurisdiction will be d. mendment is only intended to eliminate actions brought before or forums such as the NLRB, ICC, and FCC, which Congress intend to have jurisdiction over employment discrimination.
r, while the need to preserve the right of private actions is recognized and retained in this amendment, the expertise of the C mission to sift and investigate the evidence and attempt conciliat of the dispute before such private actions can be brought is neverthe preserved.

Therefore, the intent of this amendment is not to impede the ef tiveness of the Commission. On the contrary it is my opinion tha would advance its effectiveness. We are all aware that one gage of Commission's ultimate effectiveness will be its ability to obtain vol tary compliance. Failure in this regard could result in the Comm sion's being drowned in its own caseload. This danger is even grea now that approximately 12 million additional individuals are be included within the Commission's jurisdiction. S. 2515, in its pres form, militates against such voluntary compliance on the part respondents. Apart from the inherent unfairness of imposing this bility upon a respondent, the fact that under S. 2515 an individual still be able to bring a multiplicity of contemporaneous suits will hibit respondents from entering into voluntary settlements. beca any settlement effected before one forum will not eliminate its poten liability before the other available forums.

Mr. President, it is not the intent of this amendment to abri or to contract the rights and the benefits the law confers upon th who allege discrimination in employment practices. They are f protected and they are given every consideration in this amend in connection with that matter with reference to their charges of crimination, but they are denied that multiplicity of actions that exists in their favor which can be used for harassment, for the accu lation and imposition upon the labor unions and the employers are made respondents, the necessity to expend much money, time, litigation, all involving a single alleged offense.

Some point has been made that the Department of Justice wit who appeared before the committee was opposed to an amendm of this kind. Reference has been made to his testimony and a sub quent letter which appears at page 162 of the hearings of the co mittee on the bill, S. 2515. The fact is that there was not an outri opposition. There was opposition to the extent that the language the amendment could be interpreted as eliminating the use of p visions of Federal law other than Title VII in the attack on empl ment discrimination.

The witness, Assistant Attorney General David Norman, went to say:

> We will be happy to work with the committee staff in clarifying the langua

The language to which he addressed himself did not have the ceptions provided in the effective language of this amendment.

Reference has been made to the idea that all available resou and remedies should be retained in the field of civil rights to as employees their rights.

Among other things, Mr. Norman said:

> In the field of civil rights, the Congress has regularly insured that ther > a variety of enforcement devices to insure that all available resources > brought to bear on problems of discrimination.

It is submitted that is precisely what this amendment does. It sp out the language and clarifies the language, it states what can be cannot be used as the basis for a suit, and that is proved by the le cited by Mr. Norman in his testimony on page 163. He said:

xample, housing discrimination may be the subject of suit by the Attorney l, a private suit by the party affected, or a conciliation effort by the ment of Housing and Urban Development.

s amendment meets that exact situation. There is retained ex- the suit by the Attorney General; there is expressly saved employee a private suit by him or her; there is expressly ed the conciliation effort by the Commission and other agencies. ddition to those three, however, there is in the case of the pend- endment the saving grace of allowing the Pay Act to be fully e, and also any pending determination in State court.

PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

TAMBRELL. I yield the Senator 3 additional minutes.

PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized ldditional minutes.

HRUSKA. Mr. President, another example given by the Assist- torney General was in the field of education. He stated "rem- or discrimination are available to private persons," which is e in our amendment, "the Attorney General," which is the case amendment, and the "Department of Health, Education, and e," which is our situation again, except instead of HEW there qual Employment Opportunity Commission.

ent on to state:

s juncture, when we are all agreed that some improvement in the ent of Title VII is needed, it would be, in our judgment, unwise to in any way the variety of enforcement means available to deal with iation in employment. The problem is widespread and we suggest that ible resources should be used in the effort to correct it.

that statement this Senator completely concurs, but he will so far as to say there should be such a surplusage of means e that instead of being a tool, an instrument to achieve redress ngle offense in this area, that there is open the situation, the rimental, harmful, and expensive situation of a multiplicity nvolving a single alleged offense.

n that basis that the motion to reconsider should be approved re may have a vote anew with these facts before the entire body. resident, if there is any time remaining, I reserve it for future the time being I yield the floor.

RESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

AVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 10 ?

ILLIAMS. I am happy to yield to the Senator from New York.

AVITS. Mr. President, we oppose this amendment most stren- I wish to emphasize that to the entire Senate. If this amend- re to be accepted, I really fear for the fate of this whole into which we have poured so much time and effort.

y to the vote is whether we want this amendment; not whether be reconsidered. The motion to reconsider was simply a tech- which the tie vote could be resubmitted, as it were, when there e Members present. That is perfectly proper and legitimate, ieve that the consideration which we can give to the measure ebate is adequate for the purpose of voting substantially on the motion to reconsider; that the vote should very decidedly be "

that there should not be reconsideration, and that the amendm should fail.

The key to the reason it should fail is in the statement of the Sen who proposed it, who said, "They are fully protected," meaning t against whom there is discrimination in employment. Our answe decidedly "no," they are not fully protected unless the amendmen defeated. The reasons for that are as follows:

There are other remedies, but those other remedies are not surp age. Those other remedies are needed to implement the promise make under the Constitution to prevent discrimination in employm
The laws of 1866, 1871, as well as the law of 1964 are to imple that promise.

Let me point out specifically what we have in mind. It will be n that the key to the amendment is the word "remedy." That appears the first page of the amendment, at line 6. It does not say anyth about a suit or type proceeding to be instituted: it states "reme and nothing else. That means, if we are to construe that word, e remedy, whether that remedy is litigation, or decertifying a t union, or denying somebody the right to a Government contract.
proposer of the amendment has, for all practical purposes admi that himself.

These are not remedies encompassed in Title VII, which has its methodology, whether that results in a pattern or practice suit cease-and-desist order. The methodology in Title VII is a uni thing: it pits the individual or class of individuals against the emp er; it does not affect third parties. There have been cases in which t parties have been guilty of bringing about the discrimination.
way those third parties have been reached has been through the sta of 1866, the generalized civil rights statute, the injunction aga denying the opportunity for contract without discrimination to Americans. Also, Title VII does not have the facility to reach the b gaining process as the NLRA can where the issue heavily inv trade unions, and a whole union could be decertified.

Now, Mr. President, these are absolutely critical rights. Ther detail some more, there is very grave doubt under this amendm whether any effective effort can be made by individual complain bar Government contracts, as we are retaining in the Departmen Labor the Office of Federal Contract Compliance. This is a very im tant right and should not be permitted to rest alone on the initia of the U.S. Government.

Another area in which there has been an enormous amount of a ity which might be curtailed by this amendment is in regard to crimination by recipients of Government grants. There, for exa a great deal has been done in regard to sex discrimination in col

The Senator himself has made it clear that intercession, for exa addition, private individuals can themselves sue State and local rnments, without waiting for the Attorney General. We have a very recently in which a judge in Alabama ordered the Depart-of Public Safety to start adding black troopers immediately to intransigence, as had happened in the anguish over school desegregation, ed both states onto a collision course with the Federal courts. Last week, osed of blacks, the racial balance of the state's population. He instructed artment to hire one black trooper for every new white one until the bal-is been reached. This was the first time a Federal judge had specified ion ratios in the desegregation of a governmental unit.

lays later, Mississippi was ordered to guarantee that blacks would receive pportunity to apply for 22 new openings in the Highway Patrol, but the topped short of prescribing a quota, leaving some doubt about the legal ences if no blacks are actually recruited. But even so, in Mississippi, he shootings two years ago of black students at Jackson State University state police further entrenched the agency's reputation among blacks as dy instrument of a racist society, the action sent tremors through mem-both races.

nains to be seen, therefore, how successful these states can be in recruit-ks when all across the country state police agencies have had a lack-ecord of attracting applicants from minority groups, particularly blacks.
the reasons:

is growing hostility in the black community to the police apparatus

s with the qualifications to become state troopers can easily find betterpportunities in an improving job market.

tate police, whether they are restricted to traffic control or play a broad an investigatory agency, assign troopers to posts far removed from itan areas. In the South the countryside is usually the stronghold of cists, bringing down harassment on the black trooper above and beyond of duty. In the rest of the country the assignment to remote areas means opers are forced to live and work outside of the black communities ated in the cities.

w York State, which has a long tradition of hiring black troopers, there irector of personnel for the New York State Police, said. "We go to irce we can find and they tell us they're not interested in law enforceey don't want to be associated with the fuzz. We just recruited a Indian as a trooper, and it was easier than getting a black. If Alabama t's done."

rida, Gov. Reubin Askew, whose credentials on race relations are per-best among Southern Governors, ordered the state's Highway Patrol ll priority to the hiring of blacks when he took office last year, when there were three black troopers on the force. Today, despite the campaign, number of blacks is down to two.

"We've gotten so desperate that the last black we recruited we had to w the weight restriction by 30 pounds just to get him in," says Col. Eldridge Be the new director of the patrol.

Blacks have argued, as they did in the Alabama suit, that state examinat for troopers are inherently discriminatory and can disqualify blacks who w otherwise make fine law officers. Florida, among other states, recently had ed tional experts view its standard state police applicant test. It was found t fair and "color-blind"—that is, it contained no material so oriented that it wo to exclude blacks, Colonel Beach said.

Judge Johnson refused to interfere with the existing Alabama test. He state police officials, "I am as interested as you all in maintaining the high qu of state troopers. I am unwilling to order demeaning tests just to get black the force." But, he said, "the burden is on you to find qualified blacks."

By week's end, amid widespread grumbling, a formula for compliance with order had yet to be announced by Public Safety Headquarters in Montgom

Mr. JAVITS. So, Mr. President, the key to the proposition which laid before the Senate—incidentally, this has now been the law for last 8 years—is that what this amendment would seek to do is ca away much of that law. It seems to me that should not be the attit of the Senate, in face of the fact, as I say, that employees are not fi protected by the exclusive remedy which is sought to be compelled this amendment.

It seems to me, therefore, that if we are to give this assurance t we are really and genuinely open about this and that we are try to deal with the problem of discrimination in employment, which consider to be basic, then we should allow the remedies presently av able to continue to be available.

One last thought which is critically important; it is well know and I speak from personal experience, since I was a party to the bate and the controversy which ensued—that the price of the C Rights Act of 1964 was a very weak job discrimination title. That the price exacted, and that was the price paid. That is why we here—to button that up—because time and the enormous backlog cases in the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission indicate this is a serious deficiency in the structure of our antidiscriminat law.

Under those circumstances, before we ever have had an opportu to make these laws more effective, now by such an amendment, i becomes law, we will dismantle what is already the law and the make a grave mistake.

It seems to me that is the absolute, clinching argument in res of what we are trying to accomplish. We are going to take perhaps steps forward and then take one step backward if we adopt the am ment. I think this is most unfair to the proposition which the Se would be espousing if we passed the bill.

I would like to emphasize the importance of this amendment. T who suffer from job discrimination, those who endeavor to righ discrimination, are deep and firm in their conviction that one of most critical issues on the bill is what is incorporated in the am ment. Should the amendment be adopted, a very critical aspect o enforcement of antidiscrimination in respect of employment or will have been affected, with a very critical weakening of the w structure—so much so that many of these people feel the bill is worthwhile, no matter what is left in it, if it has in it destructio what is in the law today.

all these reasons, I cannot emphasize enough to the Senate the tance of defeating the motion to reconsider. That is the reason e were deeply alarmed when the tie vote occurred, because there very slim attendance in the Senate. We are extremely fortunate was a tie. The same kind of absence could have resulted in the ment's prevailing. We have a chance to go ahead, with the now having an attendance, as shown by the last vote, of 83 ers, to defeat the motion to reconsider and lay the matter at rest ve the Senate decide the policy, at a time when everybody in- the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick), who is arguing cease-and-desist order issue, agrees that we are at least trying to e than we have. At a time when we are trying to increase the en- ent power in regard to discrimination in employment, it is cer- not the time in which to dismantle a very important series of ps—and again I use that word—which would be dismantled is amendment to be adopted.

PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

TAMBRELL. Mr. President, how much time remains?

PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has 9 minutes ing. The Senator from New Jersey has 15 minutes remaining.

TAMBRELL. Mr. President, I should like to address myself briefly le broader question that what is presented by this amendment have read in the press where there is a filibuster in progress in re to this bill, and I heard a rather heated discussion, chiefly the Senator from Montana and other Senators last Wednes- reference to the inability of the Senate to get on with its busi- what might be done under certain alternative situations that rise here today. I even read in the New York Times where I ducting a filibuster on this bill; and, interestingly, on the same ot a letter from the chairman of the committee, the Senator ew Jersey, congratulating me on my efforts to improve the ich I appreciated his writing me. So I have no concern about role in dealing with this bill.

eason why the bill is still here and has remained here for sev- ks are twofold: One is that the bill was imperfect as brought oor, as indicated by the number of amendments, including one l, which were approved while the bill was on the floor. I cer- ssume the editors of the New York Times and others who the finger at some of us do not want us, just like toy soldiers, and approve any old bill that was reported here by the com- ithout going over that bill with a fine-tooth comb.

ther reason why the bill has not been adopted is the intolerant e by the sponsors of the bill in having their way.

ILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

AMBRELL. I yield.

ILLIAMS. Did I hear the words "intolerant insistence"?

AMBRELL. Yes; I said "intolerant insistence."

ILLIAMS. I wonder if the Senator would reconsider the use word. As a matter of fact, if there has been any criticism those who are leading the bill, it is that perhaps they have ready to consider changes and compromises. Citing the New mes as perhaps misunderstanding the Senator from Georgia, e newspaper suggested—did not suggest; they said—that the Senator from New York and the Senator from New Jersey had thr in the towel and all we were trying to do is try to bring to bear forces of reason and compromise. I would hope the Senator wo reflect and retract his "intolerant" business.

Mr. GAMBRELL. Mr. President, I would ask the Senator from N Jersey if he would agree to make his comments on his time, ra than out of mine. Would that be agreeable with the Senator? If would he yield back to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was my last statement timed, so that I might-

Mr. GAMBRELL. May I answer the Senator's question on the S ator's time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all right with me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recogni and yields on his time to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GAMBRELL. I would like to say to the Senator that I think New York Times used him rather badly in its comments. I do not sider that the Senator from New Jersey or the Senator from N York——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not complaining, by the way, about the n papers.

Mr. GAMBRELL. I do not think they offered anything, or compro their position hardly an inch. They cast a smoke screen over the position, and I will have to say fooled the editors of the New Y Times as to what they were trying to do. The compromise they of was no compromise whatsoever.

But I go back to my statement that a bill giving broad power the EEOC would have been passed on this floor a long time ag they had offered any compromise to go along with the Dom amendment, which gives broad and effective enforcement powers t this bill. I think the reason the bill is still here is because there no yielding on the proponents' side. They could have overco cloture vote any time they wanted to, but they insisted on havi their own way.

For those reasons, I hope some resolution of this problem ca arrived at this afternoon, so that the bill can receive a final vote be sent on to conference; because certainly the vote here this after is not the last word on the bill.

Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GAMBRELL. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HRUSKA. How much time remains on the respective sides President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 5 minutes remaining to the ponents and 13 minutes remaining to the opponents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I believe that the Senator from New York made all of the nec or essential points in opposition to reconsideration of this amend His arguments went, of course, to reasons for opposing the a ment itself. We have decided, on a tie vote, in opposition t amendment, and here we are faced with a motion to reconsider the rule. I do not wish to be redundant, in view of the presenta the Senator from New York. I simply wish to make one or two

The Assistant Attorney General was quoted by this Senato Friday, when this amendment came up, in support of a position n to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. The Sena-m Nebraska somehow sees in that quotation from Assistant At-General Norman something to support his position. I do not that way at all. Speaking for the administration, I think it be reiterated, Mr. Norman said:

statute I have quoted was followed up, in 1871, by another leveloped a body of law that should be preserved and not wiped l that all available resources should be used in the effort to discrimination in employment.

nother point, I find an inconsistency presented by the Senator braska. He speaks of exclusive remedy through the Equal Emt Opportunity Commission, and yet he advances the idea of reis, I think, directly in conflict with his approach here of ing other remedies and retaining only the Commission is another inconsistency also. In the Senator's vote to retain he Department of Labor the Office of Contract Compliance, in, the purpose of the bill is to bring together in the Equal Emt Opportunity Commission this particular aspect of discrim-in employment, and that was resisted by the Senator from a. So on basic matters he wants exclusivity; on other mat-vants a proliferation.

that the way this bill presents the whole proposal, the Equal

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield the Senator 1 additional minute.
Mr. JAVITS. We would be untrue to our duty as far as the Sena concerned if we abandoned a proposition which the Senate has tained. It seems to me that this is certainly not stubbornness: it is very contrary. It is our duty to seek to sustain a position which majority in the Senate have sustained.
I think that is the most critical single factor. As the Senator f New Jersey (Mr. Williams) has said, on the other hand we are accused of being too soft about this matter. So I must say that I seriously everything the Senator from Georgia says, and I do not we have been at all intolerant. I feel, on the contrary, we have done our duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Each side has 5 minutes remaining.
Mr. HRUSKA. Mr. President, I shall not take all the time that mains. It is my understanding that the Senator from New Jersey completed his argument; and with that idea in mind, I should li close the argument on this motion for reconsideration.
Mr. President, the key word in this amendment is not "remedy all, as is contended. The key word is "person," rather than "reme because the amendment says that this proceeding under the Rights Act of 1964, under the EEOC, shall be the exclusive re of any person. I am confident that the word "person" will not in any Government agency as being a person.
Therefore, when it is argued that the rights of the Office of Fed Contract Compliance, for example, under that law are being forf and will be ineffective, that is not true; because whatever rights whatever prerogative the Office of Federal Contract Compliance have will not be within the purview of this amendment. It is the of limiting the remedy of the person who brings a proceeding the procedures set out in section 706.
The object of the amendment is to prevent the person from ta advantage of a multiplicity of actions so as to increase the harass and the expense, and to impose burdens upon the employer for a alleged offense. That is the thrust of the amendment, and that is it is met.
Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, on my time, swer a question?

OMINICK. Mr. President, the amendment which I have pro-way of a substitute to the amendment proposed by the Sena-New Jersey and the Senator from New York has the basic s in it that I talked about when we had those very close votes go. I think the Senate is pretty evenly divided on this particect. I am certain that many Senators feel they are somewhat d to one side or the other at this point. For those who still e doubt, however, I would like to give them a couple of rea-voting for my amendment, which I think are different than sons before enumerated.

in objection, as I understood it, to my particular amendment act that the court system is, by and large, bogged down and, therefore, it would not be possible to get a fast hearing and revie an employment discrimination charge. There was a feeling among proponents of the Williams-Javits amendment that an administra procedure by way of a cease-and-desist order would be quicker more efficient.

I sincerely believe that it would not be either quicker or more cient. Certainly, the present amendment, for which I am offerin substitute, would not be quicker or more efficient. It would create siderable delay beyond the original amendment that I had put in time before a case could be decided because it would require an a tional order of the district court by way of appellate procedure to termine whether the recommendations and findings of the Commis were, in fact, valid.

Under the Williams-Javits amendment, as I read it, and I do think it has been denied, there would be, first of all, the initial de mination of reasonable cause; after conciliation efforts failed the would be heard by the Commission and "recommendations" enter it would then be sent to the court.

Anyone who felt aggrieved could ask for review. The district co would review the procedure, and after they made their determinat the case could go to the appellate court and then to the Supreme Co

So obviously, Mr. President, you have another level of review there and, therefore, further delays in the final determination of case.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on a point of f

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I understood the Senator to say that if there was conciliation agreement under the amendment of the Senator from N Jersey and me, the case is sent to the court. That is not the way amendment is drawn. If there is no conciliation agreement the ca sent to a hearing before a hearing examiner or to the Commission.

Mr. DOMINICK. I think the Senator should reread it because understand it he is giving jurisdiction to a district court, but ther

the Commission has a right to issue a ruling on it.

Mr. JAVITS. If the Senator will yield. There are two matters confu

I might read from amendment No. 878, which is the Williams-Ja

So perhaps we are both right. Perhaps what I am saying is that court retains the jurisdiction for the legal question, but the hearin held by the Commission.

AVITS. We are not both right, because filing a proceeding with does not initiate a proceeding. Nobody is heard. It is true that t is informed that such a proceeding is pending, so that, if an law is involved, and the parties go before the court, it does e from the moon. I agree with the Senator that perhaps it is eris. It is not the pattern of normal proceedings.

DOMINICK. I shall be happy to accept the modifications the Sen- made of my explanation, but I think the proceedings are sub- really large amount of delay under this type of proceeding. her words, there is practically no precedent for this type of re that I can think of. What it amounts to is a cease-and-desist ing in which the district court does have some jurisdiction on utory orders concerning major matters of law, but not much. the Commission issues recommendations instead of cease-and- ders, but those recommendations become final unless an appeal respondent, is made, in which case the court is restricted to t the record taken by the Commission, and if it finds the rec- ations supported by any kind of substantial evidence, then commendations become conclusive.

pointed out yesterday, Mr. Norman, the Assistant Attorney for the Civil Rights Division, says in his letter to me that:

h the words "cease and desist orders" in the original bill have been d the term "recommendation" substituted therefor, this change does r to be a substantial one, since under either version the EEOC position n enforceable order unless modified by the court upon review.

the original bill language, the ceast-and-desist order would modified by the court of appeals; in this case it is modified trict court if it is modified at all.

ter, a copy of which I put in the Record yesterday continues to say:

h the Williams-Javits amendment provides for filing of the adminis- nplaint with the district court, we do not perceive any substantial sulting from that novel procedure. Also, the Williams-Javits amend- des for an interlocutory appeal to the district court on any "controlling f law" if it finds that such review "would materially advance the ulti- nation of the litigation."

letermination again is made by the Commission, of course. ssistant Attorney General continues—ubtful that this addition is a significant one, since controlling issues re judicially reviewable under S. 2515, and this Department's expe- er the analogous provisions for interlocutory appeal from district sions indicates that such appeals are only useful in rare occasions. material change which the Williams-Javits Amendment would make in to transfer judicial review from the court of appeals to the district change adds another layer of review to the already lengthy process investigation, cause finding, administrative complaint, hearing before aminer, review before the Commission and review in the Court of

Mr. Norman goes on to say that my amendment would be the tem. This conforms with the testimony which he gave before committee when he appeared there during the hearings. appy to show this letter to any Senator who is interested g it.

other significant changes which I have made since we last my court enforcement amendment is that I have provided that in cases of general public interest, so certified by the G Counsel, that instead of going before a district court for enfor procedures, the case will be referred to a three-judge court in the manner as is true now in voting rights cases, in the same man is true in housing cases, and in the same manner as is true in accommodations cases. In this way, there is a three-judge cour the losing party can have its order appealed directly to the Supreme Court, thereby expediting the remedy procedures.

In like manner, where the case is not so certified, it will be exp within the Federal district court.

I realize that such expedition is not a very easy thing to accom in the district courts. I want to be perfectly frank about that. B language does indicate to all that we are making the effort wh have job discrimination cases of importance. I am talking ab even-handed hiring practice which might have been in effect number of years, which has been handled, for example, by big panies employing thousands of people.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator's time is expired.

Mr. Dominick. I yield myself another 10 minutes.

Take for example the case involving A.T. & T.

What happened there was that A.T. & T. put out a recruiting phlet for office service and for telephone service and illustrated a picture of a girl and in the body of the pamphlet referred t The company also sent out at the same time a hiring practice pa with a picture of a lineman up a pole and referred to him. Th pany is being sued for blatant discrimination by women, ground that women can get only office jobs and men can get jo on pole work. Such allegation may be true. There may be some who would like to be a pole woman instead of a pole man. The be some men who would rather be a secretary than be out on t service. That is perfectly true. But to say the company wo subject to a charge of deliberate and intentional discrimination to me, pretty hard to swallow. It had apparently been follow even-handed approach. I would presume that this case, which h been decided in any way whatsoever yet, will be of some signi because it deals with an even-handed method of trying to hire The fact that there is a picture of a woman on one pamphlet picture of a man on another I do not think is too bad.

Perhaps we are going to have to put a picture of a zebra o of them and get away from depicting a man or woman at all t to avoid a charge of sex discrimination.

In any event, it seems to me that this is the type of case that easily be referred to a three-judge court. After hearing, if so wanted to appeal the finding, it could appeal that directly to preme Court, and thereby expedite the whole proceeding.

If, on the other hand, a party had to go ahead under a pr like that under the Williams-Javits amendment, the aggrieved have a complex series of problems. First he or she would ha before the Commission. On any controlling issue of law he or sh have to go to a court for an interlocutory order. Then the C sion would issue recommendations and findings. These reco tions and findings would undoubtedly be appealed to the distr The district court, in turn, would have to go through the record touch the bedrock of our philosophy. If the Founding Fathers were by one impetus more than any other, it was by their hostility to the of a remote and central government. The King had refused his assent r establishing judiciary power." Instead, he had "erected a multitude es and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people." With the won, a new Constitution sought forever to prevent a recurrence of

Two principles emerged. One was the principle of federalism, by which pol powers would be dispersed among the central government on the hand, an separate states on the other. The second principle was separation of pow the concept that by separating the judicial powers of the central government old abuses might be avoided.

Both principles have eroded with time. The Senate's current debate directly to this question: Shall the doctrine of separation of powers be fo eroded? Senate liberals are cheerfully agreeable: The Williams-Javits bill w make of the EEOC a combined executive and judicial agency. Senate con tives are stoutly resisting: They want judges alone to do the judging.

Liberals make this case: More than a dozen executive agencies, notabl National Labor Relations Board, already have the power to issue binding and desist orders. Such orders result from the findings of professional h examiners. The 25-year-old Administrative Procedures Act provides abu safeguards of due process of law. In any event, final orders are subject to ju review. At a time when federal courts are sorely burdened, with heavy ba and long delays, judges should not be further burdened by the trial of charging discrimination in employment.

Conservatives make this response: The EEOC, with a backlog of 32,000 is more burdened than the courts. Even if an independent general counsel provided, the agency still would be functioning as prosecutor, judge and The very nature of the EEOC makes impartial determinations impossible. Fo commission and its staff have a built in bias in favor of minorities. Ju review is severely limited by the practice of routinely affirming cease-and-orders if "substantial evidence" supports them..

At the heart of this disagreement is the difference that eternally divides and conservative. The liberal tends to trust government and to urge powers be expanded; the conservative looks upon government with a warin and asks that its powers be restrained.

This is what the fight is all about. If the liberals prevail, the EEOC w ore time consuming, though I think it is very important in choosing between remedies, is really not relevant to the choice he two methods of approach to the court system which are in the amendment of Senator Williams and myself and that r Dominick. Once you are over on the court system, the quesow do you minimize an extended burden, rather than what se in the bill fundamentally, which is that the proceedings a cease-and-desist order take place in the Commission.

nance of a cease-and-desist order by the Commission is an im-uthority, and is a remedy of a really different order of magni-use it enables the Commission to make a finding, which is ind in an order, which is then made public, and which brands a respondent as a discriminator. That is, its real importance, substantially extremely important, because we are dealing usiness concerns, practically all of which are dependent upon ronage for their future.

ore, the power to issue a cease-and-desist order is a very e power and a very thorough power in bringing respondents nd hence an agency which has that power has much more cutting down its workload than an agency which has not, ere is a certain finality in what it deals with, and we feel gly that the reason for the backlog in the Equal Employportunity Commission is precisely the lack of any finality, est we can do is say, "Okay, we cannot conciliate this; we lain to other Government departments with whom you have but essentially you are on your own; go ahead and sue."

w we come to a situation in which we have been unable, nding the will of the majority of this body, to prevail in everyone knows that, including the Senator from Colorado.
e to consider what else we may do under the circumstances, e will of the Senate is going to be determined, not by a as the Constitution requires, but by two-thirds. So the om New Jersey and I have decided that we simply have to commodation with the minority, which is what it is, in the court route, and we feel that in doing that, now we are totally different type of enforcement, and we ought at least leal with the question of congested court calendars.

what it really comes out to. And the only way we see we can he question of congested court calendars is, for all practical purposes, to make the Commission an official referee. So that, as i practice in bankruptcy or where a special master is appointed given case, the case is heard, the findings of fact and conclusio law are offered to the court, and the record is closed, except if a desires it added to. So we felt that that was a way, especially i big industrial centers, to cut down the time delay, and that is all amendment is about.

For all practical purposes, we have gone over to the court me but we have gone over to it in an effort and with a technique w can cut the timelag very materially.

Frankly, I will not—because I think it is fruitless—be drawn an argument with the Senator from Colorado about the niceties practice in both of these approaches. Though he said that we copy of a complaint in court, I point out that that does not repr a proceeding. It represents notice to the court, and no time whatever is involved in that.

As to the other niceties of procedure, I do see a major differen a dependence upon congested court calendars, whether it is a judge court or a one-judge court; and that is the step which w trying to abbreviate, without in any way jeopardizing the rig the parties who are protected before the hearing examiner Administrative Procedures Act and the review of the court wh bound to ensue in our case. There is no other way, because the can issue the decree.

Again I point out that you are dealing with such long delays courts that justice deferred is justice denied. It is interesting to pare the time relationships to the statute itself.

Let us understand that we are dealing with a round peri approximately 150 days, that that is the allowable time for the mission to move into a given situation. The first 30 days repr an effort to conciliate, making a total of 6 months. So that Commission operation. The fact that Federal courts resolve the factual legal issues in equa

Nineteen months, 20 months, 35 months, 43 months?

Now, Mr. President, the great wrong which the Senator from Ne Jersey (Mr. Williams) and I have done is that we have tried to exp dite this practice by having the Commission hold the hearing. This the first time, and it is claimed this will involve us in all kinds of awf complications.

Well, the only awful complication that it will involve us in is to cu down the time it takes to try the cases by something like 12 months o 14 months.

The Presiding Officer. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from New York is recognize for 1 additional minute.

Mr. Javits. That is all. That is the big deficiency in the amendmen that we will cut the time, cut the delay by somewhere around 3 months, given the average of all the district courts which is in th area of 17 months—the average, aside from the big industrial plac where it is very much greater.

We have been frustrated. We cannot get cease and desist. We shou get it, but we cannot, even though the majority says they want i So we have got to go to court proceedings. At least, let us not brea the backs of the courts. That is all we ask. Therefore, we believe th the Dominick amendment should be rejected and ours should b approved.

Mr. Cooper. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield

Mr. Javits. I yield.

Mr. Cooper. Would it not be possible if the amendment offered b the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) is adopted for the cou to appoint a commissioner, or a master, or examiner, to hear this typ of case?

Mr. Javits. Yes, it would. I might tell the Senator that if the Dom inick amendment should be agreed to—and I hope and pray that it w not be because I think it is ill advised in terms of this whole matter that is one point to which I will address myself or, perhaps, happil the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cooper) will, because that would b an important point, to try to find some other way to cut down the tim element involved in actually dealing with these congested cases.

Mr. Cooper. Let me ask the Senator this question. If one agrees th the judicial process rather than the cease-and-desist process is the be procedure, why would not the appointment of a master, commissione examiner, or whatever, by the district court expedite these cases a quickly as the Commission?

Mr. Javits. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator that it pro ably will not expedite it as much because of the fact that in most ca we do not even have the background of a referee in bankruptcy w deals with the subject all the time, as a commissioner would, with a opportunity to establish guidelines and the ground rules in a giv place, in a given court, namely, the U.S. District Court for the Distr olumbia. I do not believe it would be as expeditious. However, it ld certainly be an improvement on the Dominick scheme.

r. Cooper. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield 3 minutes?

r. Dominick. I would be happy to yield 10 minutes to the Senator Kentucky.

he Presiding Officer. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized 3 minutes.

r. Cooper. Mr. President, I do not need the 10 minutes. The Senator New York (Mr. Javits), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dom-) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Williams) have worked hard on this bill and have contributed much to the debate in the s it has been before the Senate. Not being a member of the com-e, I cannot claim their expertise.

. President, I do address myself to what I believe is a funda-al point. The Senator from New York is absolutely correct when ys that the dockets of the courts are clogged. In my State of ucky there is a delay in the trial of cases. I have seen the table ing the backlog of cases from which the Senator from New quoted. The delay is applicable to all types of cases.

e Senator is correct in his statement that if justice is delayed, is no justice. However, I go beyond the question of the back-f cases in my thinking. That is bad. The reason I suggested, if Dominick amendment is agreed to, the use of commissioners or rs or examiners or whatever we term it, to hear these cases, l remove in great degree the problem of delay.

ill vote for the Dominick amendment, believing that the expedi-of the hearing of such cases can be accomplished, but, chiefly, I ort the amendment because, fundamentally, I believe that the ct courts, with the competence to hear the evidence at first hand ch fairer than the cease-and-desist procedure, providing a hear-y the Commission, judgment by the Commission, and if there is peal to the courts, the record upon which the court may finally is only the record of the Commission. I do not consider this fair uly due process.

e Senator from Colorado is correct in stating that the greatest ess in the field of civil rights against discrimination has been gh the decisions of the courts.

ave confidence in the fairness of the courts. I want, of course— of us do. I believe—that full justice be accorded those against discrimination in employment is practiced. But it is necessary fair not only to the complainant, but to the respondent.

nnot escape the conviction that if a Commission is established ne objective in mind and dealing in a very delicate field, that ission would not be as objective or as unbiased as a court. The of fear and coercion arises, whether or not correct. All must e that justice is done. No, it is not upon the question of delay— , of course, that I support the Dominick amendment is impor-but it is upon my belief that the courts are the best, due proc-e best way to cope with discrimination in employment. We ave to protect our fundamental system of justice.

President, I recognize and have great respect for the argu-of my friend, the Senator from New York, but on these funda-l grounds. I intend to vote for the Dominick amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the arguments favoring the Dominick amendment because the EEOC would be investigator, prosecutor, and judge, are simply in error. On January 20, I offered an amendment to this bill which removed the prosecutory function from the EEOC and placed it with a totally separate agency under the direction of the President. This amendment was adopted. Consequently, as this legislation now stands the EEOC will not be able to issue any cease-and-desist orders or take any action against any party without the concurrence of this independent office of General Counsel.

The real issue is whether the small businessmen will have to defend charges before an agency or go to the expense of hiring big city lawyers to defend them in U.S. district courts. In my judgment, the small businessmen of this country are going to find themselves in very costly, lengthy and difficult situations if they are hauled into U.S. district courts to answer every charge. It is far easier, cheaper and more convenient to have these matters handled administratively, as they now are with the Federal Trade Commission.

Cease-and-desist orders are nothing new for the businessmen of Ohio and many other States. The Ohio Civil Rights Commission, and its parallel organizations in the majority of our States, have been vested with cease-and-desist authority for many years. It is, therefore, regrettable that certain national organizations are taking a position that if successful, will only have the effect of throwing the small businessmen of this country into U.S. district courts with the great expense that is associated with those actions.

This is one reason why I oppose this amendment.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I think that the Senator from Kentucky has said more in a few short sentences and has gotten to the heart of a whole matter better than we did with a lot of words.

I appreciate the support of the Senator from Kentucky. I value it highly. I think it is important to our cause that he once again point out the fact that this is by no means an anticivil rights amendment.

Briefly, in reply to the Senator from New York, for whom I have great respect, and refer to the statement of Mr. Erlenborn before the Labor Subcommittee. In that statement he says:

> An examination of the Fifth Annual Report of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, submitted April 1, 1971, shows that the top ten States in terms of the number of charges of employment discrimination recommended for investigation are: Alabama (897), California (665), Florida (633), Georgia (633), Illinois (433), Louisiana (1,102), New Jersey (373), Pennsylvania (611), Tennessee (617), and Texas (1,522).

He then lists for those 10 States the median time interval for nonjury trials. The longest is in the northern and eastern districts of California which are 23 months and 21 months respectively. One district in Pennsylvania, the middle district of Pennsylvania, has a delay of 21 months.

The rest of the districts range from 1 to 13 months, with a median time of 10 months, which certainly is better than the situation with respect to the present backlog in the EEOC.

I bring that up because I, too, like the Senator from New York, feel that if we can get enforcement power of some kind, the backlog

d to decrease because there will be muscle power by which settles will come about more readily than was the case before.
r position in supporting enforcement was also supported before committee not only by Mr. David L. Norman, but also originally Ir. Brown, Chairman of the EEOC. This convinces me that we ot operating on something which will either harm or destroy the de and integrity of the EEOC. We are doing something that will lish fundamental justice for both parties, trying to separate the rs of the administrative agencies.
e Senator from New York said that if this measure passes, we d immediately launch into the same procedure and the same of thing in the other agencies. I think it should be considered ot done immediately.
ere is nothing new about my machinery. Justice Jackson recomed this a long time ago and Mr. Landis recommended it when he ved the administrative agencies.
re is nothing new in this. It was not done because they thought dministrative agencies would be more efficient. We have said over er again that probably the most efficient form of government is bly anything other than the republican form of government we n this country. I think that our republican form of government best.
pe we can keep it that way by keeping the separation of powers ocated in my amendment.
President, I reserve the remainder of my time.
Javits. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Ir. JAVITS. Mr. President, I wish to refer to one other matter that nportant: Why the role of the Commission? I deeply believe the e-and-desist power in these particular cases with this kind of case, considering the condition of our courts, is absolutely essential to best functioning of the guarantee against discrimination respecting loyment.

point out that there are many very popular agencies, with the back- of the very people who are against this kind of power for the OC, which have cease-and-desist powers. The Federal Trade Com- sion is a striking example. In addition, a number of Government de- ments have it. We have analyzed all of those.

this were so iniquitous—what the Senator from Colorado calls ing the investigative, prosecutorial, and judicial powers in the same acy—look at the situation. Thirty-four States have authority ogous to this authority in their State establishments in which they to correct discrimination in employment. I think that is the weight ne evidence.

to the generic case for administrative agencies and administrative I think the courts themselves would be the most violent opponents y effort to dismantle that machinery. They know it would crush destroy them. They could not survive with the inundation that d result unless we changed the court system and tripled or rupled the number of judges. Unless that were done we would be I do not need to argue that case here and now, but that is the situa- we are inviting.

e last point I wish to make is that the three-judge court idea is not and is not something that the Senator from Colorado is giving this amendment. It is in the law now. A three-judge court may be med at the request of the Attorney General, and that is contained ge 64 of the committee report, setting forth section 707(b) of the e.

short, Mr. President, we would be departing from the classic way ich to enforce these rights.

w that we have filed our amendment the question is: Which of vo methodologies is preferred? We hope there is a way to deal his crushing burden on the court process. The plan of the Senator Colorado does not deal with that at all. Perhaps the idea of the or from Kentucky would be the right one, but I have no feeling it. However, the Dominick amendment just throws the cases into urts, and there are bound to be many cases. The backlog amend- works against the Dominick amendment rather than for it. It throw the cases into the courts, to sink or swim, with tremendous stion on the court calendars. If our amendment is imperfect we ange it, but we tried to provide a time relation through time in- s in the law of 1 or 6 months.

time intervals defined in the Dominick amendment refers to the st practical date. Based on the tremendous congestion in the , that would be 10 months, even by his amendment, against 6 s, which is the maximum bracket of the Commission.

President, for all those reasons I adhere to my original view. I rry my beloved friend does not agree with me but we agree so there would be something wrong with one of us if we did not disagree sometime. However, I feel the Dominick amendment should be rejected and that the Williams-Javits amendment should be agreed to.

I reserve the remainder of our time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

First it impresses me that the debate supporting the Dominick amendment rather fundamentally puts into question the viability, the workability of so much of our accepted government procedures within the last 35 years. Of necessity, a growing country, with this tremendous new activity, had to deal with its problems of growth and congestion and confusion by administrative agencies.

It is suggested here that there is a question about the procedures of government working the will of the people through administrative agencies and their procedures.

In most of our economic areas we have created agencies of government with responsibilities defined by law, with questions to be decided and they are decided by administrative agencies. In order to protect that system and to insure fairness of procedure, in 1946 there was enacted into law the Administrative Procedures Act which defines the rights of individuals, in a sense, "on trial" before these agencies of government. The Securities and Exchange Commission, created back in 1934, was one of the first to be given powers to decide. We have the Interstate Commerce Commission and it goes back farther. We have the National Labor Relations Board and we have the Federal Trade Commission. All of these agencies of government, to be effective, have to have a machinery for decision. That is exactly what seems to be questioned here in the debate that supports the Dominick amendment.

This is another area of the application of now proven methods, and it is resisted. I would say this has been the central point of the debate on this bill and we are now down to the opportunity to decide it for the third time during this debate.

This issue was before the Senate 2 years ago when we had the bill before us. The vote then was in opposition by a rather substantial margin, I believe, to the proposal of the Senator from Colorado. I think the vote was 41 to 27. We will shortly vote on this proposal. While I personally regret that there is a question over administrative procedure because we know it is part of American Government today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is a regret, but I do not want to linger too long on that, because, with the amount of debate on the method of enforcement, perhaps some of the major advances are being overlooked. That is what I would like to focus on for a moment.

I suggest that we have made a tremendous advance toward the goal of bringing the effective opportunity of eliminating discrimination in employment, because the question is not whether there should be enforcement power added to the mandate of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, but how it should be done. It is a matter not of quality but, in a sense, it is a question of degree. So it is a tremendous advance that the Senate has come to that point where we are really in dispute only over method, not over the substance of the issue of ent, although I am sure there will be those—they will be a minority—who will object altogether to new enforcement au- in this area.

ond that, this bill, if enacted, will be a landmark of new oppor- for millions and millions of people, because the legislation will the force of law to support the constitutional promises to the ns of people who are employed in State and local government. they are constitutionally protected now in the 14th amendment, equire statutory and legal enforcement of a constitutional right. ill does that.

ourse, the bill broadens its coverage to reach the employers of nore and unions with 15 or more members. I will say that is a dvance. Ideally, I think it should apply to all, but we have hat decision, and for only practical reasons have we made it ers of 15 or more and unions with 15 or more members. A man an who has been discriminated against has been wronged just h whether he or she is an employee in a little shop with three or one with 15 or more. However, for practical reasons, it is great advance in bringing legal protection to so many millions le who are not now covered by the law.

e area of Federal employees, the employees long questioned they had the right to sue in court to protect their right against ination. We have established that right in this bill and made ear that the Civil Service Commission has clear authority. I ot dwell on that, because I was not the author of the provision engthened the opportunity of Federal employees. The Senator olorado was the author of that significant advance in the bill. this point, when we are locked in debate on the method of ment, let it not be overlooked that the bill is a major advance-

e the Senator from New York and I are in opposition to the ent offered by the Senator from Colorado, his hand on all of ajor advances in the broadening and strengthening of equal nity I think should be noted at this time.

Presiding Officer. The time of the Senator has expired.

Williams. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes just to say stand on the amendment.

k the Senator from New York, again, has crystallized and clear the compelling reasons for bringing to the Equal Em- t Opportunity Commission in its new enforcement powers the administrative machinery that we see in other agencies of ent. There will reside that expertness which is needed in this nsitive and indeed complex area.

now the Federal judges are burdened, and we burden them d again. The subject matter before us is as broad as life, and e a backlog of cases. We fear, and fear for good reason, that litional burden of initial jurisdiction would be a crushing ndeed and would defeat the true effectiveness of the law that l be enacted.

ose reasons of a mechanism that truly goes to effectively reach , I oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Colo- d I do it expressing the greatest respect for the Senator and the greatest appreciation for all that he has done in what I feel to b a most constructive way on this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I intend to yield to my distinguishe colleague from Alabama, but I think it would be worthwhile at th point to put some of the following quotations into the Record.

The Chairman of the EEOC, Mr. Brown, in testimony in 1971 b fore the House General Subcommittee on Labor said as follows:

> In the area of relief I believe that the District Court approach is clearly a demonstrably preferable to th cease-and-desist method. The pertinent yardst is the amount of time an aggrieved person must wait before he is afford relief, either temporary or permanent. . . . Under the district court approach one prevails before the court, he is entitled to an immediate injunction a other relief to bring about a rapid end to the discriminatory practices proved the trial. . . . As a matter of practice, this would not be the case under the ceas and-desist approach.

In connection with the amount of time and the cases as they no stand before the Commission, it is interesting that the Senator fro New York has been emphasizing the so-called industrial States, whe as the fifth annual report of the Equal Employment Opportuni Commission which was submitted on April 1, 1971, shows that th top 10 States in terms of the number of charges in employment discri ination recommended for investigation are: Alabama, with 897; Ca fornia, with 665; Florida, with 633; Georgia, with 633; Illinois, 45 Louisiana, 1,102; New Jersey, 373; Pennsylvania, 611; Tennesse 617; and Texas, 1,522.

Then I might add that it goes on and shows that in those States I have pointed out, the median time interval in nonjury trials rang from 1 month in the southern district of Georgia, in Savannah, to months or at the maximum 23 months in the northern district of Ca fornia. I do not think, therefore, that the relevant district court bac logs are unconscionable.

Certainly, as the Senator from Kentucky has previously stated, the judge finds in any one of these districts that he is totally ove whelmed with the caseload, and he cannot get these matters hea in a reasonable time, he is entitled in any case to appoint a hearin examiner and have the hearing examiner go ahead and hear the ca under his jurisdiction. That is perfectly allowable under the Fede Rules of Civil Procedure, and he can do it any time he feels that would expedite the decision of the case.
